As will he seen, Mr. Woodleigh's professional name is Montague. Having been favored with a sight of the following circular, we puhlish it as a literary curiosity. Mr. Woodleigh's works will douhtless receive due attention next week. Mr. Woodleigh is an Australian artist, hut has been resident in this State some months, in ths vicinity of Stockton, we believe.

San Francisco, 1879.

Montague's Landscape, Sketches, Black and White, Originals Only.--No Reploas Produced Under any Pretense by the Artist.--In Oils on Canvass.

Fearnleigh L. Montagus, will paint in California during 1879 four or six sketches only—not more—from $500 each—not less—Commissions for them invited. One of Montague's sketches will be on view during Tuesdays and Thursdays, from 10 A.M. to 3 P.M., at his Studio—Room 38 Third Floor, No. 11 Kearny street, between Post and Market streets, San Francisco, California.

N. B.—F. L. Montague, has already received from the Press as much eulogy for his work as he thinks it possible his work deserves, but as an Artist and Agent for himself, he thinks that rather than by quoting any of the above named eulogy to encourage commissions will he display good taste in showing his pictures merely, and allowing them alone to influence in this connection those who would wish or not wish to commission his brush. Montague's Specialty; Mountain, Lake, and River Scenery.

IN MEMORIAM.

There are no words possible or necessary to express the sorrow of the community at the untimely end of George Schwartz. At his funeral, which took place from B'nai Brith Hall on Thursday, the hundreds of clenched lips and pale cheeks of strong men, not wont to yield to their emotion, testified the hitterness of the general grief far more ahly than any pen could describe. As a man, he was peculiarly and exceptionally unselfish. In the great struggle of lifs his wonderful energy made him, of course, enemies as well as friends, hut while he generally reached the goal he coveted, and carried off the prize he desired, it was the needy friend, the widow and the homeless one, who reaped the fruit of his success. If anything can comfort the aching hearts of his relatives and friends at this time, it must be the consideration of this special trait in his character—forethought for others and disregard of self. The funeral was very largely attended, and the ceremonies were conducted hy the Doric Lodge of Masons, of which the deceased was a Past Master and a charter memher. Prominent among the pall-bearers were his honor Mayor Bryant and Louis Kaplan, Registrar of voters. And so surrounded hy hosts of loving friends, who testified their affection by covering his casket with wreaths and costly floral tributes, George Schwartz was laid away to rest. To his brothers, relatives and friends, we tender all our sympathy and this small mite of evidence of our personal appreciation of a good citizen.

CARRYING CONCEALED WEAPONS.

Nearly all the murders, shooting affrays and cutting scrapes, are dus to the too-prevalent habit of carrying concealed weapons. This indicates a lack of manliness—a desire to take one's enemy at a disadvantage—and the knowledge of having a weapon in one's possession is calculated to inspire Dutch courage, especially where it is apparent that the opposing party is unarmed. An excuse is sometimes offered to the effect that, as had men will carry weapons in spite of the law, and thus endanger the psaceahly disposed, the latter must, in self-defence, do likewise. That is a coward's argument, and should he so held and reprobated. Society must hold him in contempt and regard him as a poltroon, who makes himself a walking arsenal. It is by puhlic opinion alone that this vile practice can be aholished. True, the law may assist by punishing the offender witb imprisonment, without any other option. Thirty days' confinement in a jail will work a reformation in the hardest cases. In addition, sound policy requires a speedy and adequate punishment of all murders, attempts to murder, and assaults with deadly weapons.

IRISH HUMOR.

From Fitzpatrick's Life of Charles Lever we take the following:

An Irish Servant thus complains of his doctor: "Oh, Masther, I don't think that is a right sort of a docthur who is attending me; for though he gave me two medicines that he called emetics, neither the ons nor the other would rest on my stomach."

Lever, noticing that the hand of a woman, who was hringing him some tea at a small country hotel, shook tremulously, kindly said to her: "I am sorry to see, Biddy, that you have a weakness in your hand." "Oh, your Honor," she replied, with a glance of indescribahle humor, "the wakeness is not in my hand, but inside in the tay-pot."

Lord Derby, in tendering Lever the appointment of the Consulship at Trieste, used these characteristic words: "Here is £600 a year for doing nothing; and you, Lever, are the very man to do it."

Archbishop Whately, in reply to some one who remarked that a brother prelate had a wonderful command of language, said: "No; but language has a wonderful command of him."

A point of great delicacy is involved in a lawsuit which has besn commenced in the Supreme Court of the District of Columhia in the United States. It seems that the applicant for tbe writ was some time ago seized with a malignant malady which rendered the amputation of his legs necessary to save his life. The surgeon who attended the afflicted plaintiff took the amputated limhs to the Medical Museum, where tbey were placed in a jar of alcohol. Their owner imagined that they had heen huried, hut lately, to his disgust, learned that they were on exhibition at the Army Museum, with his name written on a card placed at ths top of the jar. He at once put the matter in the hands of his legal advisers, who recommended him to recover possession of his limbs. It is expected that, in the event of his succeeding in ohtaining his legs again, other actions will he brought hy various persons having amputated limbs in the museum.

THE ELECTION.

The people of this city, and of the State generally, cannot be too warmly congratulated upon the quiet and orderly manner in which the great electoral contest of the other day took place. It was an election of the gravest moment. Our Constitution makers had, in their wisdom, leveled every portion of the existing government. Every office had to be filled. During the campaign earnest appeals had been made to class prejudices, and so long as any chance remained of affecting results no opportunity was lost by any side. But when election day dawned men eschewed partisan strife and devoted themselves quietly, yet earnestly, to the task of getting their votes into the ballot-boxes. All day long, from daylight until dark, the work went steadily and decorously on, and evening closed upon the fullest, and in every way the most important, vote that has ever been cast in this State. The number of offices to be filled caused the tickets to be exceptionally long, and the process of counting is necessarily slow and tedious, so that results cannot even yet be definitely determined in all cases. We have elsewhere told of those things which are certain, and of those which appear probable. The results are likely to be considerably mixed; no one party has completely triumphed. All parties are likely to be represented, either in the local offices or in the Legislature, and honors may be said to be easy. We don't know that anything more satisfactory could have occurred. It will now be in order for the representatives of the different parties to vie with each other in their efforts to promote the public weal. Their action will be most closely watched, and credit, or discredit, will be reflected upon the parties they represent, just as they may act well or ill. Upon the whole, the election has ended better than was anticipated. Good citizens will rejoice that it is over, and that the State is safe. Now, let us all forget politics, cultivate an era of good feeling, and, above all, attend to business. The material interests of the many cannot be any the better for the prolonged period of political excitement which the State has endured. For nearly two years past the whole people have been absorbed in politics. Great constitutional principles have been discussed, and for good or ill have been determined. The men who are to carry those principles into effect have been chosen, and provision has been made for the continuance of all the machinery of government. Now let that machinery do its work, and let individual citizens do theirs, which is to attend to their private business with undivided attention. The State has been almost at a standstill pending the settlement of the grave issues that were at stake. We now know the worst, and it turns out to be not so bad after all. Capital is safe, and will continue to be invested as heretofore. Laborers are plentiful, and now as ever they will necessarily sell their labor in the open market for the best price that it will bring. Seed time and harvest will come round at their allotted season; the mines will continue to yield up their riches. In short, the State, with its realized and its undeveloped wealth, is still here. Capital won't remain idle, and men, if they would live, must work. That being so, things in the future will go on pretty much as they have done in the past. We shall go on producing things we can sell; capital will be used and labor employed; the old, old methods will be followed, by which money will be made and the State will grow. The sooner men attend to business, the sooner they will be happy and the State prosperous.

THE DUTY OF THE DAILIES.

The press is a much vaunted institution, and, as members of it, we would not willingly belittle it. In most parts of the world it fulfills noble functions, right manfully and well. It writes upwards to the best instincts that can rule mankind, and not downwards to their most groveling passions. It is as fairly disinterested as human institutions are ever likely to be, and, if it has petty rivalries with its competitors, it manages to keep them within the counting house. Such, however, we greatly regret to say, is not the daily press of San Francisco. Untold and incalculable troubles have been brought upon us by the rivalries of daily newspapers in this city. Kearney and the Sand Lots had not been the power they are if it had not been for the Chronicle and Call. They were both so eager for subscribers that they were willing to make a deity of him, in order that he might make creatures of the crowd, in their interest. To humor him, they have even published his blasphemy. The terribly dangerous election through which we have just passed, with more safety than we had expected, was made as dangerous as it was by their insane rivalries. But it is not our present purpose to recount these things. If that were our intention, a most astounding indictment might be drawn up. We simply allude to a condition of affairs with which the people of San Francisco are only too familiar. We allude to it because we think the time has fully come when good citizens have a right to insist that the open and public display of the insensate hates of daily newspaper proprietors shall cease. These evil feelings are had enough as attaching themselves to censors of public morality, even when they are confined to their publishing offices; but when they break out in editorial columns, and influence the crowd, and confuse politics, they are a curse to the State; that is just what they have been for a long time past. People have had about enough of this sort of thing, and now demand that there shall be a truce to this abominable warfare. For heaven's sake, let us have peace for a while!

There has been bitterness enough created in this community to last it for the rest of the century. Class has been set against class, interest against interest, and labor against capital. Money has been made timid and hides itself. Operators, usually enterprising, have lost confidence that things in this city will be well ordered. Men have begun to talk as if property and even life might be in danger. This state of things is deplorable. A better condition of public sentiment is essential to a revival of business. There is no real danger, but there is a great deal of fear. The imaginary evil may be as productive of mischief as would the presence of the real one. The sooner confidence is restored the better, and the duty incumbent upon the dailies at this hour is to vie with each other in intelligent efforts to restore it. They have got plenty of materials to work with. The outlook for material prosperity was never better. If workingmen are made to understand that the way to cure dull times is for each one for himself to find some useful thing to do, and do it with all his might, then the dailies will be teaching something much more useful than Sand-lot oratory. When the capitalist sees that evidence of good intentions, he will let loose his money-bags, and soon capital will flow throughout the State, and cause every interest to fructify and grow prosperous. That is the way in which prosperity is to return. Let us all take a hand in courting its smiles, for adversity has frowned upon us long enough.

OUR ELECTION LAWS AND THEIR AUTHOR.

California's election laws are now the very best in the United States. To them we undoubtedly owe much of the order and quiet which prevailed during the recent heated contest. The closing of the saloons on that particular day is a most excellent police regulation. The permitting of no one but the persons actually engaged in voting within one hundred feet of the polling place, was a most happy conception. It has substantially annihilated the system of solicitation which formerly created so much confusion and disturbance. Then, requiring the voter to fold his ballot, and keep it folded while in the act of voting, is an excellent preservative of the secrecy of the ballot, and saves endless disputes. The stern enforcement of these provisions by an efficient and well-instructed police force is eminently satisfactory. The result is peace, sobriety and comfort on election day. The system has just stood as thorough a trial as it is ever likely to be subjected to here or anywhere. The contest just ended will long be memorable for the high and excited feelings which it engendered. The class least subject to control was banded together for purposes that greatly excited them. Yet, under our most excellent election laws, everything passed off with exemplary decorum. Then, again, our registration laws have been greatly improved, and have stood the strain lately placed upon them most excellently well. We shall not again see such wholesale frauds as were perpetrated at the last Presidential campaign. These are great achievements in the art of law-making. They came to us through no popular advocacy. They emanated from the brain of a born law-giver. Quietly and unobtrusively did he pass them through the Legislature, and their great value only began to be known when they were put into practice. To the Honorable J. F. Swift are we indebted for these most excellent measures. Is it not strange that this gentleman of great ability, popular instincts and high character has not been elected to the next Legislature, and has not been chosen for an office of any kind? He was a candidate for Governor, but did not get the nomination, and did not even come near getting it. The people are ungrateful, and that is why they are not better served.

MARRIAGE, CELIBACY AND MORTALITY.

The conclusions of Dr. Bertillon as to the greater longevity of married people has been confirmed by the researches of Dr. Stark into the relative mortality of married and single persons in Scotland. According to him, bachelorhood is more destructive to life than the most unwholesome trades, or than residence in an unhealthy house or district, where there has been no sanitary improvement of any kind. In Scotland the mortality of married men under 25 years of age is 6.3 per thousand, whereas among the unmarried men of the same age it is 15 per thousand. At every period of life up to 80 years there is still a difference, which becomes less as the age advances. The mean ages of all married men in Scotland are 59.1 years, and the mean age of bachelors over 20 years is only 40.2 years. If the deaths from child-bearing could be eliminated it would also be found that the mortality of married women would be much less than that of spinsters. After 25 years even child-bearing does not raise the mortality of the married to that of the unmarried. The mortality of married women is only excessive under 20 years, proving the great danger of child-bearing to women before the body has acquired its full development. Statistics have thus proved the truth of one of our first social laws, that it is neither good for man nor woman, but more especially for man, to live alone.

"What," said an inquisitive young lady, "is the most popular color for a bride?" We may be a little particular in such matters, but we should prefer a white one.

HELMETS AND VIOLETS.

I sat one radiant morning
Within a favorite nook,—
Unmindful of its glory,
And buried in a book.

I read with eyes that kindled,
About the old Crusades;
Till I heard the clashing armor,
And saw the quivering blades.

I followed in their journeys
The heroes of the past,
To see them proudly enter
Within the walls at last.

As with sound of martial music
My inmost soul was stirred,
When through the open casement
My Effie's voice I heard.

Then a sound of stealing footsteps,
And playful fingers shook
A shower of early violets
Upon the open book.

Among the glittering helmets
I felt their sweetness fall;
Then vanished in a moment
Crusaders, knights and all!

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Husband and wife, alone and together at last, after the experience of the first London season passed in the blissful bonds of matrimony. The distraction, the excitement, the artificial delights, are all put away for a while. There is, for a brief interval, no escape from an atmosphere of comparative tranquility, and the pair are compelled to look existence and themselves steadily in the face. They might, or one at least of them might, have wished it otherwise. There were projects of a burst of continental travel after Goodwood, or of a yachting cruise, as the sequel to the marine dissipations of Cowes. But owing to perversity of circumstances the plan fell through; the nautical party refused to be organized, or family affairs took a sudden turn, which rendered it necessary to stay on this side of the silver streak. Here, then, the bride and bridegroom—they have been married but six months, though the months seem years—are at last thrown almost for the first time exclusively into each other's society, and compelled to meditate upon each other's excellences and failings. It is really a novel experience. Not till now has the situation been properly realized. Here they discover they each of them are, man and wife, bound by a mutual tie which only death or scandal can break; united by a compact which ought to lack no element of permanence. The precise spot in which this conviction is flashed upon them makes no difference. They may have resorted to an English watering-place. The newspapers may have announced their departure to their country seat. Prudential motives may have impelled them to pay a visit to some opulent relatives in a distant part of a dull county, desirous of witnessing the felicity of the newly-wedded pair. In these days the last precept on which any lady or gentleman, moving in polite society, thinks of acting, is that which the Attic sage plagiarized from the Delphic oracle. Men and women will not know themselves. The process may involve an inconvenient effort, and may entail by no means painless results. Self-study means the detachment of a human conscience; its complete isolation; a soul driven in upon itself. It is an ordeal that demands as much courage as is exhibited by the beauty who, after an attack of smallpox, surveys herself, for the first time, calmly in the mirror. The reciprocal and real knowledge possessed by husband and wife of each other is not to be secured without at least an equal degree of trouble.

Happy are they who can essay the task without flinching, and witness its accomplishment without regret. It is something for the youth to congratulate himself on having won the girl of his heart; but he will have infinitely more intelligible reason for delight if, a little time hence, he discovers that the woman of his choice is also the wife of his wish. Of the different spurious forms of courage which have before now been enumerated, the most marked is that proceeding from ignorance. Gentlemen in the hunting-field have been known occasionally boldly to face bull-finches, which, had they been aware of their full dimensions, they might have declined to negotiate; and it would be an interesting question to ask, were there any statistics that provided the materials for an answer, what percentage of husbands or wives would have embraced matrimony had they a clear foreknowledge of all its attendant risks. It is not only those contingencies which lead the wedded pair from Hymon to Hannen that are to be taken into consideration. For specific and particular evils there are positive and direct cures. The common, and infinitely the more serious, danger is that which does not assume the proportions of scandal. It consists in a gradual awakening to the consciousness by the two love-birds that they may have been mistaken in each other, and that they have committed, on the threshold of life, a blunder which can never be repaired. To the honeymoon on the Continent succeeded the season in London; and the erewhile impassioned wooer had the opportunity of watching how the sweet rosebud, whom he had transplanted from the virgin soil of a rural home to that of an eager and ambitious life, would develop in her new environment. For himself he has had some experience of existence, and he has satisfied a fondly-conceived vision in making one, to whom the great world of London life was a closed book, his wife. It has been an experiment; the question that he now asks, since it is only now, in his rustic retirement, that he has got time to ask it, is, Has it been a success? It was a fascinating idea, that of carrying a provincial Dulcinea into the heart of the social hubbub of the capital. There were romantic anticipations of the novel charm which her freshness and vivacity would impart to a life that was beginning to be languid and listless. Have any one of them been fulfilled? Can it be said that they are in a fair way of fulfillment? This is the question which the happy husband may ask himself as he buds his roses in his ancestral garden, or mingle with his meditations on the subject of the remarks that he is about to address to his constituents. The sky, for a wonder, is clear above, the lark sings its carol, the blithe chirp of the grasshopper is audible; nothing, in fact, which is not gladdening and inspiring is to be seen or heard. Yet there is a dark spot somewhere. It is not a gloomy presentiment of failure in life, not a vague apprehension of political misadventure; it is the consciousness, growing into the conviction, of an irretrievable mistake committed. It is simply the process of matrimonial disillusion, and it is no more to be arrested than phthisis or heart-disease. He should never have taken Dulcinea to his bosom; he should have left his rosebud to bloom in the provincial garden.

When once these dim forebodings have been felt, when once the sinister misgiving has been entertained, only a miracle can prevent the natural sequel. The aspiring worldling has chosen as his wife one who is not a worldling, and who in all likelihood will never become a denizen of that country which her husband inhabits. She has all the virtues under heaven; it would be as well if she had a dash of one or two of the vices. She may be bland, passionate, affectionate, fond; she may even paint in water-colors; and of such doubtless is the kingdom of heaven. The only thing is, she is not the wife for her husband, and she cannot be the instrument of his career. Women may lower to the marital level day by day; but it is the rarest thing in existence for the sweet gentle creature who has been imported from Arcadia into an atmosphere full of the stir and noise of modern ambition and intrigue to be able to mount the husband's pedestal. The higher forms of energy are as uncommon with the most excellent of women as the lower are common. Vigorous mental initiative—and it is this which is needed when the task to be performed is nothing less than to change an entire view of life—is very seldom a feminine virtue; and unless the rosebud can unfold her petals upon an altogether new method, she will fail to bloom in the strange atmosphere. It comes home to the happy spouse that the rosebud theory was a delusion, and that, being of the world, he had better have married in the world, instead of turning his attention to the blue-eyed damsels who people the woods of Arcady. Of the fact, indeed, there can be no doubt; and as the husband thinks of the mistress of his home, who is sleeping tranquilly, and thinks also, as he smokes his last cigar, of the experiences of the past season, he asks himself why he was not content to make his choice within that season's limits. Perhaps these are dangerous musings, but it is difficult to check them; nor will they become less frequent as every day deepens the conviction that while his circle of interests in life is growing, hers is narrowing. What is the end to be? It may, of course, be a miserable confession before the world that the great adventure in life has been a blunder which cannot be put right. For months and years the union of two alien souls may remain, to all appearance, satisfactory and secure. Suddenly, on some unexpected provocation, nature may protest, and the crash may come. But, on the whole, these catastrophes are uncommon. Tolerance does, in its way, as well as love, and may be quite as heroic. Positive happiness has been dreamed of, has been sought for, and has been missed; but the well-regulated mind will reflect that the absence of happiness is a very different thing from the presence of misery.—World.

A 'FRISCO STORY.

[From London "Truth."]

To marry in haste and repent at leisure is an aphorism which a certain San Francisco lady does not believe in. She not long since married a distinguished-looking but mysterious stranger, but unfortunately found out that, instead of being a Mexican grandee, he was a physician's groom, earning twenty dollars a month. After deciding that it would be wiser to go home and get her meals regularly than to stay with the coachman and starve, she sent him the following pointed epistle:

I am deeply sorry that hunger and other circumstances over which I have no control compel me to write you this note. I find that you are utterly unable to provide for me, and as I am at present unable to provide for you, I will have to leave you, and return to that happy home whence you stole me, and once more fill it with the sunshine of love. Had I known that you expected me to live on the morning breezes for breakfast, the trade winds for dinner, and the evening fogs for supper, I would have honestly told you that my constitution would not be equal to it, even where the atmosphere is so odorous and substantial as in this hotel in Tar Flat, and would have declined to become your wife. If you shall ever marry another lady, I trust you will remember the advice of your first wife, and that the domestic menu will consist of puddings made of plums rather than of the north wind, and pies of pumpkins rather than of zephyrs—in short, that you will provide her with a hill of fare rather than a hill of air. If you meet me on the street hereafter, pass me by as a perfect stranger, for if you do not I will be compelled to give you the cut direct.

Your wife,
MARY.

All of a sudden the rumor spread abroad that he had turned stant; and, sure enough, he became a regular attendant at the gelical Church in Czernowitz. From a pleasure trip to Switzerland, h he took a few months later, be returned a stern nnd uncompromis- alvinist; and for three consecutive years he traveled twice a year to senburg, where there was a Calvinistic congregation, in order to part in the religious rites of that sect. THE LATE COUNTESS WALDEGRAVE.

The Countess Waldegrave, recently deceased, who for many years ied, perhaps, the most prominent position in the social and political f London, was the dnughter of John Braham, the singer, was four married, and from each of her husbands received a fortune. She assumed any fine-lady airs, but gave her friends to understand that as simply the daughter of John Braham; and she was proud to in- ce her father and brothers to her most distioguished guests. Every- admired her, especially young authors and artists who were com- ng life's battle. To these she was always gracious and kind in very ical ways. The statesmen and patricians she charmed by the bright- f her wit, the charm of her manner, and the goodness of her heart. nd Yates says of her: "Wealth and position were indeed powers Lady Waldegrave possessed, nnd which she turned to much advan- But if she had had these alone, she would not have risen to the ence that she did. It was her honesty and her goodness which were sential conditions of her success, and station and money were hut as destnl on which these secured the opportunity of display." Her husband paid to her, in his will, one of the most grateful tributes iven to a wife. It is as follows: "The unspeakable interest witb I constantly regard Lady Waldegrave's future fate induces me to her earnestly to unite herself ngain with some one who may deserve oy the blessing of her society during tbe many years of her possible al after my life. California Theater.—Champagne and Oysters is an idiotic affair, unworthy of criticism as a dramatic production. But thanks to the admirable comedians that fill its star parts, the stupidity of the plot, dialogue and action is overlooked in the laughter created by their comicalities. Stuart Robson is a very finished actor in bis particnlar line. The excellence of his impersonations is more apparent when one becomes familiarized with his strong mannerisms. Crane's forte is the broadest comedy, and when his bumor can run unrestricted by any particular requirements of character, he is at his best. Robson plays "Grahame," the Rector, for all it is worth. He is intensely funny, and added not a little to the general amusement by appearing in a Beecher "make up." "Herring," the Sexton, is a character that admits of broad effects, so that Crane was in his element. Barton Hill made his re-appearance in a character that called for no especial effort. Felix Morris gave a very clever rendition of the cockney waiter. Keene's impersonation of "Thornhuck," the deus ex machina of the play, was of a nature to cause regret to his many admirers. In itself it is a character entirely unsuited to his ahilities, and he should never have been cast for it. At the same time, his conception of the part was a most extraordinary one. It was boisterous, extravagant, unnatural, impossible; in fact, entirely nnworthy of any actor of talent—something that Mr. Keene has amply proved himself to he in the higher planes of tragedy. Miss Stanhope appeared to far better advantage in this play than she did in the Comedy of Errors, and was eminently satisfactory. Miss Lizzie Harold filled a small part as well as it could be done, and was very charming in her neat, trim cook's dress. Miss Paullin, who, as a child, was almost continually on the stage, made her first appearance at this theater on this occasion. Barring a slight awkwardness of manner, fanlt cannot be found with her first effort, and she will undouhtedly prove a valuable acqnisition to the theater. Next Monday Our Bachelors will he produced. This is, to my mind, the very hest piece in Rohson and Crane's repertoire. The orchestral selections of Mr. Withers are fresh and popular. The "Turkish Review" was a prominent nnmber this week.

Baldwin's Theater.—Zip is a melodrama of the orthodox rescued waif order. It gives Lotta all the chances she wants to "Lottaize" through it, and she does do so to the audiences' satisfaction. In one or two little hits of the play she shows more actual acting than we are wont to see her do, hnt these fits are hut temporary, and she quickly falls hack into her usual tricks. Take, for instance, the love scene at the piano. She is demure, modest and charming, while listening to "Elmore's" protestations. She is natural and delicious in her manner up to the emotional moment of the betrothal kiss, when she immediately wilts, and, with a smirk and contortion, houp la! Lotta is herself again. Marhle, as "Philo ophy Jack," does his share amusingly and cleverly. Jennings redeems himself of his nnsatisfactory rendition of "Quilp" hy admirably acting an Italian character. Miss Revel has one of her favorite lisping parts, and wins a nightly recall for intelligently carrying it ont. This is the last week of Lotta's engagement. It has been, in all respects, a very successful one. The little lady can flatter herself that her hold on the local puhlic is a stronger one than ever, and that her next appearance will he anxiously awaited. Won at Last will he played to-night. On Tuesday a new play hy the name of Chums will he produced. Its first performance will he for the benefit of Miss Corcoran, a very intelligent and promising young actress. Mr. W. H. Haverstick, well known in society circles as a young gentleman of taste and culture, and connected with the Bates Dramatic Company, is to make his déhnt on Tnesday next in this play. It is a great compliment to so yonng an amateur to have the leading part assigned him; and there will he, without douht, a crowded house of our best society to greet his appearance.

Grand Carnival and Masquerade Ball at the Mechanics' Pavilion at the close of the Fair, on the 19th Septemher. This enterprise, in the hands of Colonel Andrews, of the renowned Diamond Palace, will he the most hrilliant affair of the day. Seventy-nine magnificent prizes, now on exhihition at the Fair, will he distrihuted to the best sustained characters, the most heantiful ladies, the hest dressed of hoth sexes, etc., etc. The winners to he selected hy seven committees of our best citizens. Masks may he worn all the evening. The finest hands of mnsic will perform; the building will he lighted with the calcium light, and specially decorated with flags and banners; and refreshments of every kind will he provided. GENERAL GRANT WILL HONOR THE OCCASION WITH HIS PRESENCE. Galleries reserved for spectators. The arrangements are in every way the most complete, insuring a tremendous gathering. It will cost twelve thousand dollars to open the doors for this grand Carnival. Numerous clubs will participate, giving representations entirely different from anything ever seen in San Francisco. The success will, we are sure, be unhonnded. Nearly every seat has already heen sold, so that an early application is now necessary to get any seat at all.

German Theater.—The performance of last Sunday evening was of a nature to call forth the strongest commendation. The character of "Dehorah" ("Leah") is a favorite one on the English-speaking stage, and its opportnnities are well known to all. As conceived and acted hy Irschick, it is a picture of rare artistic skill. The contrasting phases of love and hate were admirably shown. The lady's grace of manner and perfection of speech were never more apparent than in this effort. I have seen the famous curse scene acted hy many celebrities, hut never with the same depth of passion and emotion—not a vestige of rant apparent, hut simply the upheaval of the strongest emotions of human nature, truthfully and naturally depicted. The company did remarkably well in support, each and every member appearing to the hest advantage, so that to particularize would he nnjust. To-morrow evening the Two Orphans will be produced, and as originally written, with the original music.

Bush Street Theater.—Like all the other theaters, this honse has suffered from the pervading political excitement, hut the audiences, although diminished in size, have left quite as much pleased as those of the preceding week. The snccess of the first week's programme of attractions justified its continuance this week. Next Monday several novelties are promised, and no pains will be spared to keep np the reputation of this monster troupe.

At Woodward's Gardens, to-day and to-morrow, September 6th and 7th, hesides the usual complete programme, the Fannie Marston Pinafore Company give their nnexampled performance, with full-rigged ship, grand cannon salute, and manning the yards. The Zoographicon and the Phonograph regularly. No extra charge.

Opera.—On the 22d inst. Pyramus & Thisbe, an operetta hy a well-known local musician, Mr. Oscar Weil, will receive its initial production at the Bush Street Theater. The text is written by Mr. Peter Robertson, and is no douht in that gentleman's clever, easy style. The four principal parts will he in excellent hands. Soprano, Miss Susan Galton; contralto, Miss Charlotte Hammond; tenor, Mr. Ben. Clark, and hasso, Mr. C. Makin. It will be a pleasure to greet Mrs. Kelleher's re-appearance on the stage after snch a long absence, and a more satisfactory engagement conld not have been made hy Messrs. Weil and Rohertson. Miss Hammond is a promising local singer, and Ben. Clark's sweet and sympathetic voice is too well known to require anticipatory mention. Mr. Makin has lately returned from the East, and is said to have improved in voice and acting. Great interest is manifested in this production.

Chit-Chat.—Tony Pastor returns to his theater in Octoher.——Arhuckle will not cornetize (!) for Talmage's Tabernacle, Brooklyn, next season—we mean next Winter.——If Annie Pixley was offered a real good play, she would take it.——Maurice Barrymore's new hahy is ths very image of pa.——Caroline Richings is singing in Baltimore.——Speaking of the above-mentioned Annie Pixley, an Eastern paper says: "Pretty Pixley has been rather nervous over the trouhles in San Francisco. Her father is editor of one of the weeklies, is a prominent politician and wars against Kearny."——Arthnr Sullivan is improving in health.——Rose Eytinge is going to play in London.——The Union Square will open with Bartholomew Camphell's new play, My Partner, in which Lonis Aldrich has a star part.——Maggie Mitchell has lost $40,000 hy the gradual depreciation in value of Long Branch real estate.——Alice Harrison has returned from Europe, and may join the Mestayer-Long Pullman Car Combination Co.——H. J. Sargent, Modjeska's manager, is to be a partner with F. B. Chatterton in the Drury Lane management, London.——At the London Alhamhra they are getting up a China ballet, in deference to the prevailing taste for hric-a-brac—shepherds and shepherdesses, etc., in imitation of Dresden, Worcester, Chelsea, and other famous mannfactories.——Michaelis' "Turkish Review" has been played during the week by the different orchestras.——Millie and Christine, the wonderful Swedish twins, commonly called the douhle-headed nightingale, will soon be on exhihition here.——Oscar Outre, the German company's juvenile, delights in very light coats.——Imogene left hy the last Australian steamer. Poor colonies!——At present appearances, Walter Leman is nndouhtedly elected Justice of the Peace.——Lizzie Harold is said to possess an extraordinary contralto voico. But for the fact that its head notes are weak and thin, she would occupy a foremost position on the operatic stage. Lizzie dear, let's hear it.

The Season may now be deemed a thing of tbe past. The shntters are np in many of the houses, the streets are less crowded with carriages, and in another ten days or fortnight there will he a general emptiness in the most favored parts of London. Seldom has any season passed away with less regret than the one now come to a close. Depression of trade means depression of spirits, and there has been a "deadly liveliness" in the gaities of the present year which has rendered them even more melancholy than usual. Yet the season has had its redeeming points. In the first place, it has been a short season; and this of itself is an immense relief to many persons who feel that late hours and long dinners have taken quite as much out of their constitutions as they can safely hear, and bail with delight the prospect of leading a less unwholesome existence at an earlier date than in years of prosperity. The season, again, has been peculiarly favorable to a large class of persons who dislike spending money, and have taken advantage of the general depression to plead a scarcity of means as an excuse for economy. Moreover, the season has really heen in some respects remarkahle for a tendency to long-needed reforms in social hahits. There has been a faint attempt at earlier hours, less nniversal extravagance, some little thought of the relation hetween health and diet in the matter of dinners, perhaps not so great a yearning for scandal as of late years; and altogether, although decidedly dull, the Season of 1879 cannot he fairly pronounced an utter failure.—Pall Mall Budget.

For some benevolent reasons, best known to themselves, the editors of Puck, an illustrated American comic journal, send us each week a copy of their newspaper. We would advise them to take measures to offer their wares for sale in London, as this would create a revolution in our illustrated journals. The illustrations of Puck are exceedingly well drawn, and they are colored. They are infinitely superior in their way to anything that we have produced on this side of the Atlantic.—Truth.

THE SAN FRANCISCO TUMULTS.

(From The Nation of August 28th.)

The difficulties in the way of the successful working of the California nstitution, arising out of its own defects, were grave enough a week o; but they will probably be considerably increased by the Kalloch ly. It is not very encouraging for the business interests of the State. o, that the result of the first election under the New Constitution should determined not by a discussion of the instrument itself, but by a fight tween a preacher of shady reputation and the editor of a scurrilous wspaper; and worse still, that the fight should have arisen not over y political topics, but over their own personal antecedents. This is lly a résumé of the political situation, and it must be a painful subject contemplation for the sober and thoughtful inhabitants of the State.

It may prove useful, however, in more ways than one. It revealed the t that Kearney, who has always been in talk a man of blood, is not ally a fighting man. That he is not in earnest when he talks about ging the well-to-do, and that he really shrinks from musketry and llery, will probably be a relief to a good many people in San Fran-

At the last advices order had been fully restored, and Kalloch's ndition was said to be improving.

The affair has probably also brought home to the more conscientious d reflective class of Californians the fact—for fact it seems to be—that carney and his tribe are, in California as they are almost everywhere, e product of a bad social system, and that there will not be much politi- l rest in the State until this has been in some way remedied. The Con- titution owed its adoption not to the city mob—for it was defeated in Francisco and other large towns—but to the small country farmers, ho were incensed, and from all one can hear justly incensed, at the influ- ce in politics of huge masses of property held in the hands of men who it without the least sense of social responsibility. One of the candi- tes now in the field owns, it is said, sixty thousand acres of wheat, and this large tract of territory there is neither church, nor school-house, r village, nor anything but the hovels in which a few hundred laborers e and the hovel in which the owner lives, for he allows himself nothing tter. These vast estates in land and vast mining estates are more numer- s in California, probably, than in any other country in proportion to a and population, and they are held, in a large number of cases, by n whose use of the power their wealth gives them is marked neither by ruple nor public spirit. In fact, we doubt much whether great wealth ever before presented to an English-speaking community in a form likely to command respect or even forbearance. For perfect immu- ty and impunity it needs a population like that of Peru or Chili, or ssia before emancipation, living in whole or partial serfdom, and unused speculation on the foundations of social order. It illustrates, too, the d of danger to which the community is exposed from the possession, in ese days of agricultural machinery and railroads, of a superabundance land in proportion to population. The controversy between the small d large holdings, which has raged for many years, seems in our time to coming to a close in favor of the former. It begins to be acknowledged re and more widely that it is not enough to raise so many bushels of in to the acre in any way, but the question how it is raised is also one considerable importance to the community.

The selection of Kalloch by the Workingmen as their champion, and exposition made by Kalloch himself in his pulpit of the nature of his ims to the place, are also useful illustrations of the tendencies of the e. There is nothing particularly remarkable in the indifferenee of the arneyites to the moral character of their leaders. Parties made up as s is have never shown themselves at all particular about the private life their chiefs. The demagogue has almost always been a good deal of a ckguard. Nor is the history of the Chronicle, whose editor assailed lloch, anything new or altogether peculiar. We are familiar in other ces than San Francisco with the spectacle of a newspaper obtaining its t foothold by the preparation and publication of scandal about indi- uals, and providing itself with capital by selling its silence or forbear- ce to the timid or sensitive, and then growing gradually more decent, d finally becoming the champion of decorum and "high-toned journal- ." The field for such enterprises is still open in nearly every large city in Union, and especially in cities like San Francisco, and we might say o New York, largely peopled by persons whose past is not much known their neighbors. But the entrance of the sensational preacher into itics as a candidate for office, advocating his own claims and assailing adversary from the pulpit in the language and with the methods of the mp in its lowest state, is a novel phenomenon. Nothing as bad as this s occurred on the Eastern coast, though nobody who has observed the sational preacher's career for some years back can have been wholly prepared for it. The popular passion for "eloquence" has for a long ne made success in politics possible to men destitute both of character d knowledge. Its evil effects on religion were recently pointed out in rcible terms by a writer in the Atlantic Monthly. But it has of late, in growing number of cases, enabled men to stay in the pulpit after they d lost the better part of the moral equipment of religious teachers. is, as we now see every day, almost impossible to oust, for any ense, a minister whose oratorical powers have given him a strong hold his congregation; and the coarser sort of ministers have begun to use eir oratorical gifts as a means of asserting a larger liberty in various rections, short of absolute misconduct. Kalloch, without what appears he his really remarkable gift of the gab, would probably have long ago en utterly and completely turned away from the clerical calling. But s power of making people feel good in their pews by his declamation ppears to have brought him back to preaching, in the intervals between her pursuits, wherever he went, and he never returned without a cer- in measure of success. In San Francisco he delivered, just before he s shot, what was no doubt a powerful exposition of the propriety of ergymen's running for office, and followed it up by the examination of the record" of one of his enemies, which appears to have been an traordinary piece of ruffianism. None of the school in this part of the orld has gone quite as far as this, but that we have some who, if their nity was tickled by a nomination, would give their congregations some artling specimens of the same style of rhetoric, there is little doubt. he evil, which consists in using the traditional associations of religious orship to give an air of force and dignity to charlatanism, is a serious e, and if Kalloch's fate does anything to check it, his death will in some gree make amends for his life. It does not make the matter any easier deal with to say that the looseness with which theological beliefs are w held has much to do with making such a career as his possible.

SPORTING ITEMS.

Rowing.—It has been decided to postpone the regatta of the St. George and Columbia Rowing Clubs till the 4th of October, for the purpose of giving the Regatta Committee and probable contestants more time for preparation.——The St. George Club will enter crews for the McKinlay Cup, second-class, four-oared shell; four-oared, outrigged lapstreak, and junior single-scull shell. Their crew for the second-class four will be: J. C. Lucas, stroke; E. C. Friedlander, 3; E. T. Hubbuck, 2; C. J. O'Keil, bow.——The Columbia Club will enter for the first class and junior single-scull shell. Mr. Fenn will pull in the first-class single-scull race against Mr. Sullivan, who will represent the Pioneer Club.——The Pioneers' crew for the second-class four-oared shell will consist of Foster, stroke; Crowley, 3; B. P. Oliver, 2; J. J. Whalen, bow. The Pioneer crew for the McKinlay Cup is first-class.——Mr. Brown's injured hand has retarded practice in the St. George's crew. They were, however, out on Oakland Creek last Saturday, and showed good form.——The Grand Stand on Oakland Creek has been enlarged.——Smith won an easy victory over Ross, on September 1st, at Bedford Basin (N. S.). The St. John men lost large sums on the result, which was very unexpected.

Pedestrianism.—F. Davis and Chapman ran a 100-yard race at Los Angeles last Sunday. Davis gave two yards, and won easily.——Archie McComb has accepted Davis' challenge, and will run him a 100-yard race for an advertised $2,000. As Davis' best record is 11 seconds, it looks a soft thing for Archie.——The six-day go-as-you-please match between Vou Berg and La Chapelle will commence next Thursday at Platt's Hall. La Chapelle is the favorite in the betting, at slight odds.——All the men entered for the six-day contest at the Mechanics' Pavilion claim to be in good condition. The fear of dark and imported horses stops any betting, but, unless some really wonderful walker appears on the coast, we think the medal lies between McIntyre and Scott, tbe former for choice. Nineteen walkers have paid their entrance money. We will publish their names next week. Messrs. Lawton & McNeil have arranged for a novelty in six-day contests to succeed their women's walk. It is between horses and men. Every horse entered will be confined to one rider, the footmen to go as they please, the man or horse making the greatest distance in the six days to be the winner.

Shooting.—The last match for club medals of the California Club took place last Sunday at Milbrae. Mr. Downey won tbe first prize with a clean score of twelve. Mr. Robinson took second, with eleven birds. Messrs. Conrad, Roach and Burns tied on ten birds each; Roach, winning the tie, took third prize. The Carver medal was surrendered for competition by Mr. Robinson, who won it back with nine straight kills.——Entries are closed for the Sacramento tournament.——A man was fined $60 by Judge Louderback for selling quail out of season.——Reports from Mendocino county state that quail, grouse and pheasants are very plentiful.——Most of the good shooting grounds around Sacramento are preserved.——Doves are getting scarce. Tbey are migrating northwards.——The convenience and cheapness of glass ball shooting has done much to increase the number of good trap shots in the State.——Ruth, of Oakland, broke 922 balls out of 1,000, with a rifle, at the Oakland State Fair last Wednesday. This feat is far ahead of Dr. Carver's and entitles Ruth to claim the world's championship.

Baseball.—The Oakland Grounds were crowded last Sunday, the attraction being a game between the Knickerbockers and Oaklands. Nolan's place was filled by J. Whitney, of the Omahas; the Knickerbockers had an easy victory, score 5 to 1.——There was a poor game at the Recreation Grounds last Sunday, between the Stars and Renos; score, 16 to 13. ——Game to-day at Oakland—Mutual vs. Oakland. On Sunday the Athletics and California Clubs will play.

Swimming.—The Regatta at Alameda, on the 13th inst., will be the great swimming event of the year. Several entries have already been made for the amateur races, but as yet, the professional purse is going begging.——Six entries for the diving competition, all first-class men. That looks as if the monthly diving competitious of the Neptune Club were hearing fruit.——Daily is in New York. He sends word that he was well received there, but, as yet, has made no match with Webb.

Archery.—The Sacramento Tournament Committee have now decided to pitch their targets in East Park. Prizes will be given for club shooting, gentlemen individual shooting, ladies individual shooting. In addition there will he similar prizes, open only to residents of Sacramento, and prizes for the best lady teams of four. For ladies the shoot will be 30 arrows at 20, 30 and 40 yards. For gentlemen, 30 arrows at 40, 50 and 60 yards.

Yachting.—Race for second-class models on Oakland Creek to-day. ——The ball and reception at the San Francisco Yacht Club-house last Saturday was a brilliant affair. Those of the guests who accompanied the fleet on the mooulight trip to Vallejo enjoyed a rare treat.——There is no official arrangement yet made by the San Francisco Club for an outside race.——Yachts of the Pacific Club will have an outside race on Admission Day. The arrangements are not yet perfected.

Cricket.—The game at Oakland, on Election day, resulted in an easy victory for the Occident Club. Score, 114 to 41. There was nothing very remarkable about the play except the excellent batting of Mr. Murphy, a new-comer.

Coursing.—The meeting of the San Francisco Club will take place at Merced the second Tuesday in November.

A dignitary of the Church was dining out. Of the two ladies between whom he was seated, the one on his right hand was an intimate acquaintance, and, noticing that her distinguished neighbor was silent and pre-occupied, said to him, sotto voce, "I am afraid you are not very well this evening; you do not seem in your usual spirits." "Well," said the dignitary, "I am in rather a nervous state of mind about my health, and have a sort of presentiment that a serious illness is hanging over me. I am conscious of a peculiar numbness all down my right side, which seems to forbode an attack of paralysis." His fair companion expressed her hope that such fears were ill founded. "Ah, no," he replied, "I'm afraid there's no doubt of it, for I've been pinching my right leg all dinner time, and can elicit no responsive feeling whatever; the limb seems quite dead to all feeling." "Oh," exclaimed the lady, briskly and with an expression of intense relief on her face, "if that is all which troubles you, I think I can at once relieve your mind from anxiety, for the leg which you have been pinching all the evening is mine."

THE STORM IN LONDON AUGUST 2D AND 3D.

The exceptionably violent thunderstorm of last Saturday night and Sunday morning appears to bave extended over the greater part of England, and in many localities was accompanied witb torrents of rain and hail. Tbe lightning was of remarkable vividness and frequency—tbe average number of flasbes, during a period of nearly two bours, being, in tbe vicinity of London, over a dozen per minute. Much damage was done by bail in the south and southwest suburbs of tbe metropolis; but the greatest fury of the storm seems to have been experienced in the valley of Gloucestersbire and in tbe district of Monmouth, where it raged from 6 P. M. on Saturday till nearly 6 A. M. on Sunday. Telegrapbic communication between Monmouth and Gloucester was for some time interrupted. Many of the people living in the vicinity of Dean Forest are described as being literally terror-stricken by the tbunder and lightning; whilst at Buckingham tbis is said to have surpassed any that has been experienced for many years, and tbe quantity of rain per acre wbich fell during tbe storm is said to have been over seventy tons. In Norfolk, the church of Wells-next-tbe-Sea was struck by ligbtning and wrecked. Tbe safety of Peterborough Cathedral was a subject of grave anxiety, as tbe building recently suffered during a comparatively slight tbunderstorm; but, fortunately, tbe damage was not repeated. In Torquay, tbe lightning struck a chimney, which, falling tbrough the roof into a room below, knocked the stove out of its place, and two ladies wbo were in the room had a very narrow escape. At Moulton, near Newmarket, some farm buildings in the occupation of Mr. W. Staples were struck by ligbtning and almost entirely destroyed. At Wilbraham the farm buildings in tbe occupation of Mr. Moore shared a similar fate. In Chad Valley tbe storm was very destructive, tbe beautiful gardens being swept as by a tornado. Tbe ligbtning struck a massive chimney in the gabled roof of the mansion belonging to Sir W. E. Chance, splitting it tbrough the center, and hurling about five tons of brick and stonework into tbe building, the hall of which, as well as some of the bed-rooms, became flooded by the rain. Fortunately, and curiously, all the inmates of the house escaped without injury. At Tivetshall, Cambridge, a man was struck dead by lightning, and in various parts of tbe country animals were similarly killed. Kew Garden suffered very severely, for not only is an enormous amount of glass broken, but tbe flowers and sbrubs are greatly mutilated. Tbe gardens were, in consequence, closed to the public. On one side of Kew Green tbere is scarcely a paue of glass left wbole, wbile the Roman Catholic Chapel at Richmond is a complete wreck. It is estimated tbat the damage done by tbe storm at Twickenbam alone will amount to thousands of pounds. The Castle Hotel, Ricbmond, as far as glass is concerned, is completely wrecked. Some thirty guests were staying at the Orleans Club, and were witnesses to tbe devastation of not only the smasbing in of the beavy corrugated glass forming tbe dome of tbe dining room, but tbe laying waste of the cboice exotics in the beautiful grounds. The loss there alone represents over £1,000. Lady John Chichester's mansion, at the foot of Ricbmond Bridge, has suffered most severely, as also that of Mr. Grant Duff, M. P., at York House, Strawberry Hill, and Lady Adeliza Manner's outbuildings bave heen more or less reduced to a wreck; whilst tbose well known strawberry growers, Mr. Richard Clarke and Messrs. T. and J. Smitb, bave simply acres of glass pulverized, involving a loss, irrespective of the fruit, of some hundreds of pounds.—Electrician.

A Scotch lady bad invited a gentleman to dinner on a particular day, and be bad accepted, witb tbe reservation, "If I'm spared." "Weel, weel," said the lady, "if ye're dead I'll not expect ye."

We cannot indorse the Communistic faction wbo want to destroy all labor-saving macbinery until we know their views about artificial teeth. We must draw tbe line somewbere.

"The World," the Flesh, and the Devil.

[By a Truthful Penman.]

The Empress Eugenie, it is arranged, is to spend the autumn months, and, it may be, to settle definitely with her mother at Caramanchel. The place is a delightful one, with its extensive gardens and shrubberies, in the arrangement of which the Countess of Montijo used in former years to take no little pride and interest. But what sad memories the meeting is sure to call back to the mind of both ladies; and how many big events there are between the departure of the mother and daughter from Caramanchel, twenty-five years ago, and the present hour! We wonder if the Empress still remembers a piece de circonstance, or loa, as the name is, which was composed on the occasion of her marriage by one of the leading dramatic writers of Madrid, Señor Rubi. Its title was La Perla del Genil, and it was played in the house of the Countess of Montijo by several young ladies, the friends of her daughter. The Pearl was, of course, the heroine of the day, and it was carried away by the Imperial Eagle. Love, Glory, Beauty, and Accomplishments, personated by as many maidens, approached the Temple of Time, and asked what the future of ths Pearl was to be; when Time answered, in high-sounding verss, that ths futurs was not an open book to him, but that he could anticipate only bright and happy days. Ths happy days are gone; and what an epilogus Time could recite now if the loa was to be played again!——In spite of wind, weather and abnormal rain, the harvest in Irelsnd promises to bs singularly good. Hay in that country is exactly half its prics in England at present.——A tall, gaunt, smileless man, clad in a sou'-wester hat and high wading-boots, attempting to make hay, all by himself, in a waterlogged meadow, is a most melancholy sight. This sight I saw the other day between Chertsey and Staines. Notwithstanding ths serious train of thought it provoked, I could hardly help smiling.—Atlas.——A number of gentleman in Western Ontaria, Canada, have procured a hundred quail from the Mediterranean, which they set at liberty a few weeks since. It is hoped thst some of these birds will breed in Canada this season, go south in the autumn, and return again next spring. In that cass it is ths intention of the same gentlemen to import a still larger number, with a view to their speedy multiplication. Their introduction can only have for its object the diversity of sport, as quail of a much larger size ars plentiful in Western Canada and the United States.——An English joint-stock company, for selling butchers' meat, has opened business on a large scale at Munich. The company propose to kill 200 beeves and 2,000 sheep a week. They have already established sixteen shops in different parts of the town, and entered into contracts for the supply of meat with several regiments stationed at Munich and elsewhere in Bavaria.——Ex-President Ulysses Grant is first favorite for the next President of the United States. His owes his present popularity, it is said, less to the services hs formsrly rendered to ths Republic than to ths marked attsntions which have been shown to him by foreign potentates during his prolonged tour through Europe and Asia. Detailed reports of his progress are regularly telegraphed to ths American papers, which are read with the greatest interest by the free and enlightened citizens of the United States. There seems to be a secret hankering after "Principalities and Powers" in the breast of the many-headed beast; and if General Grant is not the rose, at least "il a vecu pres d'elle."—London World.——M. Ferdinand ds Lesseps is singularly fortunate in the encouragement he gets on all sides for his gigantic undertaking. Not only has he the sympathies of the Imperial family of Francs, but he is also backed up by ths Radical party. Not only have all the Freemasons' lodges given him their support, but the Pope himself has sent him his blessing and his good wishes for the success of the canal. Senator Burnside, of the United States, appears to be the only person who is openly against it; and, notwithstanding his opposition, the subscription has succeeded beyond all expectation. It remains to be seen whether the enterprising Frenchman will kesp his promiss of turning the first sod on New Year's Day.—World.——Application has just been made to the police authorities of Berlin for permission to construct a system of tramways in the city upon which electricity will be used for motive power. The inventor, Mr. Westpfahl, has had considerable experience in the construction of rail and tramways, and intends, if the Berlin expsriment succeeds, to apply the invention in all the larger towns in Germany. We have ready for publication a description of ths system of Siemens and Halske, which ws hope to find room for in our next issue.—Electrician, Aug. 9th.——Simple Electric Lamp. By. E. Rohrer, Jr.—The author seeks to avoid the expensive mechanism of the Duboscq, Serrin and Siemens lamps, all of which are designed for powerful currents. A sheet-iron float is placed within a vertical tube filled with glycerine, and this tube constitutes the core of an electro-magnet, which is included in the circuit. The float hears at its upper end one of the carbon points, and at its lowsr extremity is continued by a metal rod dipping into mercury, contained in the lower part of the tube, to establish electrical circuit. The float is weighted until electro-magnetic attraction is sufficient to overcome the flotative power; by this means the upward pressure of the lower carbon electrode may be made very small, and the voltaic arc and light established with weak currents. The lamp is stated to be successful.—Annalen der Physik und Chemie, 1879.——In the ssven most northern counties of Scotland there are forty-seven shooting-lodges, varying from £260 to £700 a season, still unlet, while many have only found tenants through a great rsduction of rent. This little fact, no doubt, accounts for the brilliant prospects of sport held out in the Scotch papers. Grouse-disease, curiously enough, nevsr appears until after a moor has been let.——The studies for the new opera by Gounod, Le Tribut de Zamora, are now going on at the Paris Grand Opéra. M. Maurel is to sing in the leading part. After it will come a nsw work by Ambroise Thomas, Francoise di Rimini, and another by Massenet, Herodiade. The successor of M. Halanzier in the managerial chair, M. Vaucorbeil, is also responsible for a little coup d'etat in connection with the prices of fauteuils and boxes taken by the year, the subscription being increased by about nine pounds in the former case. It is a curious feature of French high life that no leader of fashion in Paris could do without her day at the opera; that is to say, the exclusive possession of a box for a night weekly all the year round, an item of expense quite exceptional in this country. The cost of the luxury in the premieres loges de face (ten seats) is to be henceforth ono hundred and ninety-two pounds sterling, instead of ono hundred and sixty-eight, as before.—World.——Messrs. Thomas De La Rue & Co. have in the press a new book by Cavendish, consisting of general and historical essays on cards and card games, decisions of the late Mr. Clay on disputed points, and a collection of card-room reminiscences. ——"On which leg are you tattooed, dear?" may be expected to be a frequent question addressed to youth and beauty on the "Ladies' Lawn" at Goodwood.——Odd that Mr. Bright, himself a master of good English, did not know that the ordinary cultivated Bengalee speaks the most correct English of all her Majesty's subjects! A Brahmin said to a young lady surprised at his fluency and correctness: "My dear young lady, I ought to speak English better than you; you learnt yours from your servants, I mine from the San Francisco News Letter.——Ths Zulus have a palladium, to which much superstition attachss. It is a sort of matted seat, on which ths warriors sit severally for a fsw seconds to be duly doctored befors going out to battle. It was made and placed in a certain sits by King Chaka, and there it remained, near ths royal kraal, till last May, when Cetewayo took it away—he may have done so for safety—to his new fortress at the junction of ths Black and White Umvolosi, but its removal from its historical site is accepted by many Zulu chiefs as an omen that the Zulu power is broken and near its fall. This they said befors the destruction of Ulundi, which they looksd upon as doomed when the palladium left its old site.

THE RESULTS.

We begin to know who the men are who are to rule over us. The process of counting is necessarily slow and tedious, and full results will not be ascertained before Monday. But enough is now known to indicate who, in most cases, have been successful. First and foremost, the Hon. Geo. C. Perkins is undoubtedly chosen Governor by a large majority. It is estimated that the final vote will stand about thus: "For White, 42,000; for Glenn, 45,000; for Perkins, 60,000; giving him a plurality of 15,000 over Glenn, and of 18,000 over White. These figures may be varied slightly, but they are approximately correct. Mr. Perkins will make an eminently safe and respectable Governor. He will satisfy his supporters, and silence his opponents by a judicious and conservative course. Under his administration the State will enjoy a much needed rest from political turmoil, all parties will be content with his acts, and men's minds will now be turned from profitless politics to the furtherance of real, material and lasting progress. Disquiet, unrest, dissatisfaction and agitation, will now pass away; capital will regain confidence, and labor, let us hope, will find employment in profitable channels. The highest duty of every good citizen is now to aid in restoring business prosperity. Let us begst confidence in ourselves and in each other. California is rich as ever, its resources are boundless, its soil productive beyond comparison, its mines rich in the highest degree, the field for commercial enterprise is extending every day, our climate interposes no checks to labor during any portion of the year; our people will not admit that they are less skillful, or less vigorous, or less enterprising than the best people of any other State or country. We occupy a most advantageous position on the earth's surface; we control the one great port of the Pacific; we command the commerce of the people who surround us on the north, south and west; we draw from our brethren in the East; we have already attained a stalwart growth; we own capital enough to run any enterprise, however great, that may present itself. No single element necessary to material wealth and progress is absent.

There is, then, no real reason why business should continue dull, or that our people should remain unprosperous. A great revival of business has set in throughout all the rest of the country, and there is no conceivable reason why California, which has long been ahead in material prosperity, should lag behind, lose hope, and fail in the race of life. This is not the spirit of the Argonauts—of the men who have made our city and State what they are. The past has been fruitful, the future is full of promise. We believe the worst is past, and that a new era of prosperity is about to dawn upon our glorious California. Let every man cherish this belief, and insist upon realizing it. The aggregate will be a widespread success. If a Governor can do anything to inspire these hopeful feelings, then George C. Perkins is just the man to inspire them. He is himself the very personification of that buoyancy of spirits that comes of success He is himself a successful man, himful of hope. He represents the best spirit of the pioneers. The election of such a man, at this time, ought to be reassuring, and we believe it will be. Undoubtedly a good man has been chosen Governor, and excellent officers have been selected to aid him.

The Supreme Bench is likely to be composed of unexceptionable materials. Morrison, as Chief Justice, will maintain the dignity of the position, and discharge its duties with strict integrity. Firmer and abler men have been Chief Justices of this State, but in the pureness of his life, and the incorruptibility of his character, he is second to none. His Associates are likely to be McKinstry, McKee, Thornton, Sharpstein, and probably Belcher and Catlin. Thus we are sure of an honest and fairly capable Supreme Bench. That is a result which all honest men should rejoice over. It is a guarantee that the laws will be righteously administered, and that life and property will be safe.

The Republicans appear to have elected all four Congressmen, who are men above the average in point of character and ability. Messrs. Davis, Pacheco, McKenna and Page constitute probably the strongest delegation that has ever been sent to Washington from this State. Being in accord with the national administration, they will be able to secure us whatever advantages California is entitled to from the national Government. They will not affect the present status of parties in the House of Assembly, and the possibility of this election of the next President being thrown into the House is so remote a contingency as to be hardly worth dwelling upon.

At this present writing it is not certain who will constitute the full Board of Railroad Commissioners. General Stoneman is undoubtedly elected. Cone is pretty certainly chosen in the district embracing Sacramento and Alameda, whilst Beerstecher appears likely to be successful in the San Francisco District. It is not thought probable that any one of these three men will come to the discharge of their onerous duties with insensate hate against the railroad. Not one of them is pledged to the absurd notions of Cohen or Gorham. They have not undertaken to prejudge the inquiry which it is their duty to make under the terms of the Constitution. They are practically judicial officers, who will be sworn to find a true judgment according to the facts. We confidently believe they can be relied upon to do that, with honesty towards the public and without prejudice against the railroad. Undoubtedly worse men might have been elected.

In the State Legislature there will be a representation of all parties, and, although the Republicans will be the most numerous, yet no one party will have an absolute majority of the whole. Probably this will prove to have been the very best result that could possibly have been achieved. All the interests will be represented, all views will find exponents, and, in the end, legislation will be a fair mean between the extremes. The next Legislature will have much important work to do in framing measures in accordance with the New Constitution. Those measures will now almost necessarily be framed in the spirit of compromise, and that is about the best thing that could happen. The Legislature is, therefore, all right.

Our city government will fall into the hands of men who, upon the whole, are likely to prove better officers than was at one time expected. The Workingmen's ticket has not been entirely successful. Some of their worst nominees have been eliminated, whilst only their best have been successful. J. P. Dunn, as Auditor, will do no discredit to the party that has elected him, and will serve the city fairly well. D. L. Smoot, as District Attorney, fills a position which, under the new Constitution, has had its importance increased. He is a sound lawyer and an honest man. He was the nominee of all parties except the Republican. Deemond, for Sheriff, is well spoken of by those who know him, but of our own knowledge we are not able to condemn or praise. Alexander Badlam has run away ahead of his ticket and is undoubtedly elected. This is a fitting triumph to an experienced, competent and honest Assessor. Mr. Stuart, for County Clerk, is also ahead of his ticket, and may possibly be elected, though that is not yet certain. His opponent on the Workingmen's ticket is Mr. Freud, who is said to be surrounded by a host of expectant deputies entirely unfit for positions requiring experience and technical knowledge. J. W. Taylor is believed to be elected Superintendent of Public Instruction. The Reverend Kalloch is probably elected Mayor. It is to be hoped that the doubts which have recently been thrown upon his sincerity towards the workingmen will not drive him to extreme measures in order to prove that sincerity. Late events may have a moderating effect upon him, and, if so, it will be well. It is impossible to tell yet who have been chosen Supervisors or members of the Board of Education. Upon the whole the election has turned out better than was expected. The city and State are safe. Enough conservative men have been elected to hold the wayward ones in check. Our citizens should now betake themselves to business and leave the officials to do the governing.

GEORGE C. PERKINS ELECTED GOVERNOR.

The long-continued doubt and anxiety as to the Governorship of the State are now at an end, and George C. Perkins is elected to fill the office. This is a most fortunate ending of a great struggle, and in view of the forthcoming legislation, in pursuance of the new Constitution, California may congratulate itself that Mr. Perkins holds the power of veto for the next four years. Communism has been defeated, notwithstanding the immense support it received during the last two years from the Chronicle and the Call, and we doubt if ever it will reach as high a degree of organization and of strength again in this State. The Honorable Bilks, notwithstanding the startling accounts of progress and of certain success published in the Chronicle, have made a miserable failure, and one of the most assuring results of the election is that the De Youngs and all their followers have been signally routed. The live paper, which was to dictate to a million people, has had not a particle of influence on the elections, and Charles De Young is to-day under bail of $25,000 to answer for his attempt on the life of Kalloch. The defeat of the De Youngs and their infamies is something to be thankful for, and with Perkins for Governor, California may once again raise its head. It has vindicated itself from the disgrace that threatened it, and if Flint should carry the city, the success would be complete. At least we have now a perfect guarantee in Governor Perkins that ignorance, incompetence and demagoguism will not ride rough-shod over the best interests of the State. Capitalists may take heart for the future, and property owners may congratulate themselves that Perkins will protect them and do justice to all parties. We have some hope that the flow of capital from other States and from abroad, which has been interrupted for the last two years, will re-commence, and that the depression of trade and the low rates of wages which have lasted so long will give way to more active business and to higher wages. There is no doubt that the workingmen have more to gain from the success of Perkins and Flint than from that of their own nominees, as with the former is associated protection to life and property, while with the latter is associated the predominance of demagogues. All over the Eastern States the triumph of Perkins will be hailed with satisfaction, and his election will be accepted as a vindication of the fair name of the State. We have escaped a great peril through the abiding sense of right and justice in the minds of the people at large. The electors have risen to the dignity of the occasion, and have set California right in the eyes of the world. The New Constitution is now shorn of most of its terrors, because Perkins will never set his name to a bill deliberately calculated to injure the State. The chaos, therefore, that the Chronicle hoped to bring about for the benefit of itself and its disreputable minions, has been warded off, and in the election of Perkins and the collapse of the Chronicle we see the dawn of a better day for all the material interests of our people. We hope that the people themselves will remain steadfast in the line of policy on which they seem to have at last entered, as no State can afford to place itself before the world in a disreputable light, such as we have been condemning for the last two years. We have now to recover from severe prostration of trade and industry; and, the government of the State in safe hands, the people can now afford to bestir themselves in furtherance of their own material welfare. The best elements of California have gained a great victory over the worst elements, and we may now rest on our laurels in the calm assurance that Perkins will act for the best.

THE FUTURE.

Now that the political contest which has agitatsd the State for the past six months has been brought to a conclusion, we trust that peace, order and prosperity will succeed the storm. What is needed for our future welfare is not agitation, but development of our material resources, and we believe the best remedy for any or all evils afflicting the body politic will be found in renewed industry and steady application. The onus now rests upon capitalists and employers, and if they are wise the machinery will be set in motion to restore the normal condition of affairs. We have had too much speculation and too little legitimate business. It seems to have been thought by many that mining speculation was the foundation of our social system instead of being merely an offshoot. Labor—honest labor—at fair living rates, is the only solid basis for any community. Let it be understood that we do not disparage stock speculation, but advise that it be confined to the surplus earnings of industry, and that industry itself be paramount. Compare for a moment the stagnant condition of the stock market with its healthy tone in other days, when commerce, agriculture and the mechanic arts flourished, and the argument is unanswerable that upon the success of these things depends the prosperity of all else. There are new regions to be opened up to cultivation, old ranches to be subdivided, roads and railroads to be built, quartz and gravel mines to be developed, vineyards to be planted and timber lands to be turned to account—and not more than a quarter of a million men available for all these purposes. Surely, a right disposition on all sides is the only requisite for success. Capital is wasting from inaction and labor is exhausted by its prolonged contest. Now is the time to strike while the iron is hot. Delays are useless and dangerous. Capital has shown its ability for self-protection; let it display its wisdom now in removing the causes and motives of discontent. The deadlock has lasted too long; let it give way to vitalizing industry.

A retired Boston fireman calls himself an ex-spurt.

THE TOWN CRIER.

"Hear the Crier!" "What the devil art thou?
"One that will play the devil, sir, with you."

"He'd a sting in his tail as long as a flail,
Which made him grow bolder and bolder."

GOVERNOR PERKINS.

The fight is fought, the labor done,
And once again true worth has won;
For, let the rest be what it may,
'Tis Perkins bears the palm away.
Some loot may to the rabble fall,
And in the City Mare's snug stall
An ass of brass may get his oats,
By virtue of misguided votes;
But why bewail the city's fate
While Admiral Perkins rules the State?

All honor to the man, we say,
Who reaps his rich reward to-day;
Well hath he borne the heat of fight,
And well upheld the cause of right.
The filthy missiles of the foe
Have left his shield as white as snow;
Each calumny and lying word
Lies prone beneath his knightly sword;
He issues from the foul campaign
With 'scutcheon free from spot or stain;
The more of his past life we know,
The more in favor doth he grow.
They tried to prove his record bad
By pointing to the sailor-lad;
As if disgrace and lowly toil
Went hand in hand on Yankee soil!

Then, finding this of no avail,
The bloodhounds raised a dismal wail,
Because the cabin-boy had grown
To call a dozen ships his own.
"Monopoly!" they madly yelled,
And thought that they his death had knelled;
But long ago this slogan ceased
To influence voters in the least;
For it is plain to all men's eyes
That, by the papers, enterprise
And wealth that won't submit to be
Blackmailed, is styled "monopoly!"
So, on the sea of politics,
The Admiral blew his foes to Styx!
And, loaded to the rail with votes,
His frigate swamped their leaky boats.

We remark with a certain pleasure that Mr. John W. Taylor is to have the opportunity to clear himself of all the imputation put upon him in private and in public, since he first attracted notice to himself by the grand Ewald Anti-Climax Investigation last December, January, February, and the rest of the months that are last. Mr. Thomas P. Cleary has made charges against the Director-candidate, and calls for their investigation; and it is quite likely he will not call in vain. A good, long, healthy investigation of Mr. Taylor would probably furnish to the public at least as much unpleasant scandal as the buying of questions; and the San Francisco public, while it is eminently decent, loves nothing so much as a round, fat, tough bit of scandal to chew upon for eight or ten months. John A. Moore and Ewald are not had names to repeat till your hair turns gray. And why should not Taylor do as well? Try them. Conjure with them; will raise the spirits and fill the newspapers as well as Ewald. And there is something to be made clear in Mr. Taylor's transactions. We have published again and again what amounted to presumptive evidence against him, so strong that he should have insisted on an investigation for his own sake, if, indeed, he cared for his reputation as an official; and one fact, to which we have called attention from the beginning, should be remembered against him as long as men take the trouble to remember him: his use and probable invention of anonymous letters concerning teachers obnoxious to him. What his sense of public duty is may be seen from his confession that he knew of cases of corruption in the School Department which he kept covered from a scruple of honor. The honor which does not make a man hold his peace in such cases can hardly be of the sensitive kind which satisfies the tax-payers that it will stand temptation.

A thoughtful and provident citizen of a back county in North Carolina has been keeping up a fire in his house for twenty-six years, because it was burning when he brought his bride home. This looks like discounting the future in a perfectly reckless way; but the sons and daughters of this old gentleman have been brought up around the fiery hearth, and must be well seasoned by this time, so that most probably they will be able to hold their own when they go where good fires are kept. It might be well for some of our Californians, with or without brides, to try this North Carolina system of training; though, to be sure, it seems like taking an unfair advantage of an innocent devil.

The Baltimore "Herald," following up an extremely rich philosophical lead struck by a Canadian paper, says that salt is an incentive to drunkenness, because it creates thirst. There can be no doubt of it; and this accounts for the entirely disreputable character and uproarious behavior of cows, which run after salt wherever they can find it, and go reeling drunk to their homes in consequence. Philology comes in to support this view of the salt-pan; for while, in all tongues, a drunkard is known as a hog, no man has ever yet descended low enough to be called a cow, not even in Baltimore. "How charming is divine philosophy!"

The "Bulletin" declares that "California alone, of all the States in the Union, has the secret ballot in perfection." We never thought so much of ourselves before, but perhaps it is all true. At the same time, it is odd that the Bulletin makes no allusion whatever to the secret ballot, which also we possess in perfection, if any State does. Call you this hacking of your friends?

A lady recently walked into the Morgue, in New York, while her friends were weeping over her supposed remains. This must have been extremely annoying to all parties, including the remains, which had taken the trouble to go through the motions and get themselves decently laid out on a slab, only to be exposed in a sense not contemplated. It really looks as if society were completely disorganized in these days by competition and the mercantile spirit; but the total want of tact and regard for other people's feelings shown by this lady, surpass anything we have met with. It would be a satisfaction to know that her friends went on with the funeral, though cut short in the enjoyment of their misery.

A German paper, which must be edited by a nimble man, declares that it is wrong to write in novels that the "sea ran mountains high," because, in fact, the sea runs very little more than twenty feet high. The Germaa is right; and it is equally wrong to speak of a gorgeous sunset, for the sun does not set; or the moonlight sleeping on a bank, for moonlight never sleeps, or Father Rhine, for the Rhine is a wet river, and nobody's father at all. In point of fact, it is wrong to use any words, at any time, for words always mean something else. The correct thing is to open your mouth only when you're hungry, and hold your tongue under all circumstances.

Mixed up, very! One of the papers speaks of the Workingmen "marching to the polls in solid phalanx, like the Macedonian legions of Pyrrhus." The head in which this noble sentence was born should be cut off, and handed round on a charger for general inspection. It might afterward be put to good use in the Boys' High School, if it were handsomely embalmed and properly labeled. No doubt the poor fellow felt better after he got those extraordinary legions out of his solid phalanx of a brain; but, if he is not killed in time, he may go on doing this kind of thing, and then where shall we be?

The Rev. Kalloch promised on the word of a minister that, if elected Mayor, he would drive the Chinese out of San Francisco. Now that it looks as if he would be elected, his friends have offered a reward of one thousand dollars for any scheme to get the heathens to go, or a good excuse for the Mayor's not driving them out. We know that we will be beat out of the reward and never get a particle of credit for this idea, but if Kalloch will move his temple to Dupont street, and also get Kearney to address the Sunday mutual admiration meeting from the balcony of the Joss House, we are sure the Chinese will quit.

Our California climate is rather ahead of anything; but one can't help hankering, now and then, after those heavy rains they have in other countries in summer. In New York, for instance, they never have the streets filthy more than three or four weeks at a time, because the rain is sure to come along and sweep everything before it. Twelve times a year at least, often sixteen times, the streets there are clean, while we never enjoy that sight more than three times. This is to be noted in future "Resources of California."

The city papers are snapping their fingers at the Eastern journals, and swelling with pride at the decency and quiet of our election. These patriots overstep the modesty of nature, and protest too much. It is quite true that we do very little fighting and roaring about the polls, but the reason is that we empty our pistols into each other the day before the election.

Puck proposes to make use of the police as a kind of municipal accident-machine to restore the reason of idiots by shocking them with clubs. A very good suggestion for New York; but, in this neighborhood, we are going to reach the same end by reforming the government. The only fear is that the recoil may unsettle the few stable heads left among us.

We knew him well, and last week heard him remark to a friend: "If this thing goes on much longer and the W. P. C. come into power, I tell you, on the word of a thirty-year resident of San Francisco, that the State is ruined." Yesterday he was settling up the beer for Moore and Beerstecher, and sparring them for a place as deputy pound clerk.

There is a great deal of sarcasm wasted on Chile and Peru, because they will have their little set-to, like bigger boys; but it is time to speak more respectfully. They know how to get up a mob, and how to charge it, slashing right and left as well as if they were French or German or Russian or English. Paving-stones and sabres make the whole world kin.

A man was fined $60 by Louderback for selling quail out of season. We had seventeen mind-wrecking jokes written on the criminal who quailed before the Judge, and whose fault was not quailified by any circumstances, but our manuscript was lost in a fearful combat with the editor of this chaste journal, who failed to see the joke.

A choice collection of suicidal implements, such as chloral hydrate, pistols, Call editorials, laudnum, morality from the Bulletin, portraits of Glenn, strychnine, arsenic, Dr. Coggswell, and so forth, on hand and for sale on easy terms, to defeated candidates. Conditions: No slop to be made within forty feet of this office.

The moral East is crying out against the lotteries of the Southern States, and we quite agree with the moral East. A man who respects himself cannot dream of throwing away honest money upon these swindling games when a few dollars will buy a ticket in the Havana Lottery.

Now that the election is over, could not something be done to get up a statue for somebody? The city is very much in need of beautifying, and almost anybody would do for a subject, and anybody else for a sculptor. The idea should take shape, however.

By actual count, 16,891 persons have been done out of two bits each in fruitless efforts to get a sight of that stupendous fraud, the Victoria Regia. Many have paid, but none have seen; and where does the money go to? And where is Kearney?

That young gentleman keeps on writing to the papers to know whether it is proper to take hold of a young lady's arm in the street? Proper? Of course; but you don't get so good a hold on her as if you took her by the back of the neck.

Athanasius Anagnostopoulus tried to cast his vote the other day in a Second Ward precinct, but was not able to get his name through the window, which it still chokes. Fortunately he was the last man in the precinct.

In spite of the "Chronicle," Kalloch still takes the Bulletin [bullet-in!!].

At the Terrace Baths, Alameda, there will he a grand Swimming and Diving Tournament on Saturday next, September 13th, beginning at 2 P.M. sharp. These magnificent baths, which are the resort of so many thousands during the week, will he crowded on thie occasion. The Tournament will be conducted under the auspices and rules of the Neptune Swimming and Boating Club, who have kindly offered their services; and the programme is one of matchless intereet, including Race for Boys under 16, Fancy Diving Match, Race open to all Amateurs, Swimming Race for Professionals, etc. The prizes are Gold Medals, except for professionals in the grand race for $50, and for this an entrance fee of $10 is required. Three entries must be made for each race. Entries close at 12 M. on September 10th, and applications must be made to the Committee, Solon H. Willliams, 414 Clay street, and R. B. Cunningham, 410 California street, or at the Baths. To appreciate the magnitude of this establishment one ehould see it, as we did tbe past week, during the procese of cleaning, when the diving holes were pumped out and the whole bottom scraped and cleaned. For size and cleanliness no one compares with it.

Commerson, the famous humoriet of Le Tintamarre, had but one name, and needed no other, since there was but one Commerson. Not his personal friends only, but the public generally, knew there could be none but he; and he never missed the names he had not. The case of Mrs. Skidmore is a similar one. All tbose who are interested in the movements of the fashionable world and the changes in the styles of ladies hats and bonnets, epeak of Mrs. Skidmore as they do of Worth, for there is hut one of either. The assortment of lateet novelties from Paris and New York, now open at 1114 Market street, is attracting general admiration, and the store is daily crowded.

A learned English judge recently charged the jury, in a case of forgery brought before his court, to the effect that, while some weigbt was to be given to the testimony of experts in the matter of handwriting, it was by no means to he taken as decisive, since certainty was beyond the reach of even the most skillful specialist. At the same time, those who are careful to eign their names with euitable pens may feel assured of their own signatures; and the McKinnon Pen, carried in the pocket, always ready with its ink, enables a man to make the same firm and characteristic etrokes wherever he may be. The "Cincinnati Enquirer" has been looking at Niagara Falls by the electric light, and thinks it more wonderful than Bennett's incognito or Conkling's notion of manly honor. "When a flood of white light is projected between the red and blue, the waterfall becomes the representative of that banner of beauty and bravery, the American flag." True, most true; and for this Niagara was created matchless among cataracts; and like Niagara is Swain's Restaurant, 213 Sutter street, the favorite place for the beauty and bravery of San Francisco to lunch and dine with comfort and elegance and perfect order and style.

Now that the election is over, and everything beginning to settle into another two years' rut, with another crop of temporary great men to become acquainted witb, it is proper that we should do our rejoicing at euccess and mourning over defeat decently and in order. Those wbo have elected their candidates should drink to their glory; thoee wbo bave lost the game should take eomething cheerful for their stomach's eake. For both classes there is nothing equal to Landsberger's Private Cuvée, the liveliest, the richest, the most wholesome of all sparkling wines.

What are called modern improvements in houses are not alwaye improvements, so many of them are poorly contrived and badly put up; hut this is altogether the fault of the plumbers and gas-fitters, who are not always equal to their duty. It is only hy applying to such a house as McNally & Hawkins, the oldest and best known firm in the business, that one can be sure of getting first-class articles, with the most thorough workmanship. Their stock of goods ie unequaled for variety and beauty, and their store, in the Grand Hotel, is a kind of fair in this line.

A Brief Story about Champagne.—Champagne, like everything which is nice, keeps improving, and each brand has its season in the world of fashion. The Russian soldiers in 1815, when marching on Paris, bivouacked in the vineyard of Mons. Clicquot, the husband of the afterward famous widow, and they liked the Champagne so well that it became the favorite brand among them for fifty years. New Yorkers, who are sixty years old, can recall the time when Schneider Champagne, Anchor brand, was all the rage; then came Heidsieck, then Moet, then Roederer, then Mumm, as the successive fashions—and, lastly, Pommery. One finds this brand, with its modest and scarcely discernable label, at all the swell bouquets and receptions. It is dry, and bas a nice bouquet. It is better than a Seidlitz Powder or a fresh Congress, and there is not a headache in ten bottles of it.—New York World.

"Mamma, where do you go when you die?" asked the young hopeful. "I don't know, my dear," said the mother, "I never died." "Yes, but haven't you studied geography?" A most natural question under the circumstances, and worthy of an intellectual child; but what would this youngster have thought of his mother if she had not known the way to Montanya's, on Jackson street, below Battery, where the Union Range is to be found, the very best range ever invented, and the indispensable life of a bappy bome.

"Portia," in London Truth, declinee an offer of marriage in a concise and, at the same time, becoming fasbion, by declaring that she cannot give the casket without the gem. The disappointed lover, heing slow-minded, has not yet found out what she meant by the casket and the gem, and thinks his letter must have been changed by the postboy. The casket was, of course, such an etui as ladies keep on their toilette-tables, and the gem was Mme. Rachel's Enamel Bloom, which the youth was very much in need of.

It seems to he an easy thing to ewim, if we only consider the agility of the tadpoles in the limpid element; but, unfortunately, most men are not tadpoles. When the Swan of Avon invited his contemporariee and the readers of all nations and of all ages to come to look here upon tbis picture and on this, his reference to the Hyperion curls and the front of Jove was an effort of that prophetic mind which embraced all things and was for all time; how otherwise could he have so exactly descrihed the style of work seen in the portraits taken by Bradley & Rulofson, the supreme photographers?

It is high time that men should show themselves ae they are, concealing nothing, lifting up their faces to the open day, like the man described hy Ovid, to whom God had given the high regard and the upward glance to heaven and eyes lifted to behold the stars. But who can do these things with an ill-fitting or a disabled hat? White's hats, from 614 Commercial street, are such as meet the requirements of the civilized and self-respecting man.

NEW VIEWS ON THE RAILROAD QUESTION.

Now that the election is over, the politicians and partisan newspapers will have no further use for the railroad. The howl against that institution has been made the most of, and yet it has not served to defeat the candidate for Governor who was understood to he most favorable to the road. Gorham, Cohen & Co. have had their say on the stump, aud nothing has come of it. It is true that they got up a good deal of unreasoning clamor, fired off whole broadsides of false figures, and prohably created not a little prejudice in many quarters against California's greatest enterprise. But the election heing now over, men's minds will he in a hetter condition to hear and receive the truth. The anti-railroad cry has been made the most of hy those who used it to serve personal ends; and yet they have not succeeded with it. The very considerahle numher of persons who have heen influenced hy that false cry, may now very well pause and inquire what there is in it? It is not for the State's interest that nearly one-half of its populatiou should have its hand continuously lifted against an institution that is hound up with the material success of almost every interest. If population increases, if farmers do well and good times prevail, then the railroad prospers with all other interests; encouragement is given to the carrying out of needed extensions, and, as traffic increases, freight charges may he fairly reduced. The prosperity of the State means the prosperity of the railroad, and vice versa.

In this connection, it is worth while to review some of the facts of the past. The railroad has done more for the State than most persons imagine. Since the completion of the Central Pacific the population of California has increased not less than 330,000. Towards this result the railroad has largely contrihuted. In addition to its first-class passengers, it has brought immigrants to the numher of 179,000. Upon the hasis of the United States Census Department's calculation, it is estimated that each new immigrant gives a permanent addition to the general wealth of $1,000, and admitting that many of these immigrants might have come here by sea, and that the railroad is not entitled to credit for all of them, yet, to a large extent, the cheap, speedy and comfortable railroad facilities across the continent to a State in the full tide of development through its railroad system, give the management of the Central Pacific and its connecting lines and branches the right to claim a share in producing this gross contribution of one hundred and seventy-nine millions of added wealth.

Estimates from the passenger department of the Central Pacific railroad show that for the ten years ending June 30th, 1879, the passenger movement by rail hetween the East and California amounted to 625,429 persons, at an average of $95 each in currency. This passenger travel, if paid for at the old rates charged hy steamer before the completion of the railroad, would have cost in its movement $89,250,000 more than it actually has cost hy railroad, to say nothing of the great saving of valuable time, which is money. A similar calculation in reference to freight shows a saving of $70,299,250. Making together, on passengers and freight, an aggregate saving of over one hundred and fifty millions of dollars, wholly to be credited as an advantage arising from the operation of the railroad. By the old wearisome, vexatious and dangerous routes hy sea and hy stage, it took from three to four weeks from New York to San Francisco, and cost from $250 to $400. Now the trip is safely made in seven days, in palatial carriages at rates only a little more than one-half of those previously paid. One of the most striking facts in connection with the statement touching passeuger traffic may be found in the mortality statistics of the two modes of travel. Out of the 625,429 men, women and children carried over the Central Pacific since its completion, less than thirty have heen killed; while ont of the same numher carried hy steamer and stage, the large total of 7,000 died en route.

The last report of the State Board of Equalization shows the assessed value of all property to have increased from that of 1870 hy nearly five hundred millions of dollars, to which result the operations of the Central Pacific Railroad may justly claim to have largely contrihuted. At the time of the completion of the road the total valuation shown hy the United States census for 1870, within the counties now occupied hy the various railroad lines of the State, exceptnng San Francisco, aggregated hut ahout $122,000,000. The same counties have sinced increased by over $196,000,000. This is largely due in all cases—in some cases exclusively duc—to the influences of the railroad. The taxable value of the wealth of the City of San Francisco at the completion of the Central Pacific was only a little over $100,000,000. Now it is nearly $250,000,000. Indeed, the impetus given hy hringing so much larger and more profitable country and interior population practically to the doors of San Francisco, the facility of reading the markets of the far interior, Utah, Montana, Idaho, and even across the Rocky Mountains, has directly developed the resources of this city to such an extent that the value of manufactured articles alone was in 1874-5, according to the report of the Surveyor-General, $18,000,000 greater than in 1871-2. Upon that hasis of increase the total for the past eight years should approximate $100,000,000, an increase directly due to the new markets opened up hy the railroads. Imagine the large amount of labor employment involved in this great increase of manufactures!

In the five years preceding the full opening for commercial purposes of the Central Pacific, the total value of wheat and flour exports was $41,875,000. During the past ten years the valuation of similar exports has heen increased over $50,000,000. This is almost wholly due to the development through railroads of vast areas, for agricultural purposes, that were not previously within profitable reach of markets. Previous to the commencement of work on the Central Pacific, wheat-growing was confined to a fringe of arrahle lands hordering on the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers, and to a few thousand acres here and there, accessihle hy means of hay and ocean transportation. In 1863, with no railroads to speak of, California produced hut 4,000,000 hushels of wheat. In 1879, with nearly 2,000 miles of railroad penetrating nearly every agricultural county in the State, the yield exceeds $40,000,000. In 1863 the total agricultural product of California was $15,000,000. In 1879 it has reached $900,000,000. In 1863 there were $8,300,000 deposited in the savings hanks of the State; in 1879 there are $69,000,000.

More than $145,000,000 have heen drawn from ahroad to huild our railroads. Over one-half of this was speut in the State of California, and remained here, and may to-day hs traced to thousands of happy domestic altars, or to the savings hanks and other monetary institutions and edterprises. Nearly $44,000,000 of the earnings of the railroad have heen disbursed during the past fourteen years in wages to employés, and to merchants, manufacturers and farmers for supplies. The actual amount paid out in wages alone during 1876 was as follows: Paid for white labor of all kinds to 4,859 persons, $4,025,520; paid to 1,718 Chinese, $661,728. These amounts were paid directly to men actually in the employ of the road. If those indirectly employed in contracts for ties, supplies of all kinds, etc., etc., the amount actually paid for labor would he nearly double the above sum. The taxes paid in California alone were $475,140, and for school taxes, $9,695.

The henefits that have accrued to the Comstock lods through the huilding of the Central Pacific railroad are simply incalculahle. In 1862 fifteeu millions of dollars were paid for the transportation of freight hy wagon from Sacramento to Virginia City. The year following the completion of nninterrupted railway connection a larger amount of freight was carried than was ever hauled in one year by wagon, and at a cost of hut $1,250,000—a net saving per annum of nearly $14,000,000. This immense saviug has provided mine operators with the means for further risks and explorations. It is eminently safe and proper to presume that at least two-thirds of the gold and silver mines of California and Nevada, now hsing successfully worked, would have been long ago ahandoned, and $100,000,000 of the two hundred and fifty millions of gold and silver added to the world's wealth would have heen still hidden away in suhterranean hiding-places.

Perhaps the National Government is the greatest gainer. The cost to the general Government for transportation of mails, troops and supplies, for the year preceding the completion of the railroad was nearly $9,000,000. Since the completion of those roads the cash amount paid the two companies for one-half charge of transportation per year falls helow $1,500,000; add to this the yearly interest on the honds issued to the companies, viz., $3,897,123, and there is a direct saving to Government since the roads were completed of nearly $40,000,000.

It is a fact, too, that rival systems of transportation have not, upon the whole, suffered. The tonnage of the Sacramento and San Joaquin, taken together with the tonnage that now passes through the Golden Gate, is larger than it was hefore the railroad was huilt. Just as more business was done over the Erie Canal and Hudson River after the completion of railroads alongside of them, so the Californian railroads, while taking to themselves and huilding up a vast trade and commerce of their own, have in no way diminished the aggregate of freight transported hy most other channels. It was said of the Erie road that, in five years after its completion, it was transporting more local produce than was ever grown in the country through which it passed before it was huilt. And this may he said with equal truth of every one of the California railroads: that in five years after their completion the local freight annually shipped over them is more than douhle all that was produced, or required for the country through which they ran, any year before they were huilt. That this extensive interior commerce, built up entirely hy our railroads, and which enriches or henefits, in one way or another, every honest and industrious inhahitant in California, will continue to increase in the future, as in the past, no one can doubt who examines the statistics of the older States experienced in railroads. The wealth, population and prosperity of these States have advanced in exact ratio to the increase of their railroad facilities. In view of all these facts—and many more might he given—the conclusion is ohvious that there has heen no factor so potent to the development of the wealth and prosperity of the States of California and Nevada as their railroads; and those men who had the skill and nerve to surmount all the difficulties encountered, and who have managed thess stupendous thoronghfares from the first, deserve all the fame and remuneration their success has brought them. At least, these men, employing labor, acting as carriers to the farmers, extending the markets for manufactures, and gencrally leading in whatever is for the material progress of the State, deserve hetter than to he termed thieves and rohhers hy such men as Gorham and Cohen and Seahough and De Young. Every step taken in the great work was adapted to ultimate perfection, and to secure to the State, and to the nation, a grand and complete structure, every way worthy of our country, and honorable to the distinguished men who carried to completion so vast and so heneficent an enterprise.

The deaths this week were 86, or nearly twenty-five per cent increase on last week. Fifty-six were males, and 30 females, 10 Chinese, 2 accidental, 1 homicide and 4 suicides. There was no death from diphtheria. The zymotics were: Four typhoid fever, 1 diarrhea, 4 cholera infantum, and 2 croup. The other principal causes of death were: Phthisis 5, pneumonia 7, cancer 5, old age 3, heart disease 3, of aneurism, hrain disease, hronchitis, convulsions, rheumatism, each 2, and 1 each of apoplexy, alcoholism, augina pectoris, anemia, dentition, enteritis, liver disease, paralysis, pyæmia, scrofula, syphilis. The mortality under five years of age is double that of last week. Four persons died hetween 70 and 80 years, and three over 80. There was no death in the Fifth Ward, and hut one in the Third. There were 11 in the Eleventh Ward, and 13 in the Fourth. Nineteen deaths occurred in public institutions.

When it is said of one who "pays as he goes" that he is "a man of no account," there is just the slightest suspicion of a paradox.

COMMON MEN.

We're nobody particular,
We're just the men you meet
At harvest with the sickle, or
At seed-time dropping wheat:
From Mondays until Saturdays
We work from morn till night,
And only in these latter days
We've learnt to read and write.

Our little place is poor enough,
Tho' clean as any pin;
Whoe'er you are, you're sure enough
Of welcome when you're in:
The rich man has his valets and
His locks to guard his store,
But we have empty wallets, and
We only latch the door.

Besides perhaps a pair or two
Of blankets and a bed,
An oaken chest, a chair or two
All bought when we were wed—
There's little you would lend upon;
We've neither house nor lands,
We only do depend upon
The labor of our hands.

When these begin to fail you, and
You're thrown upon yourself,
Or anything should ail you, and
There's nothing on the shelf,
Tho' anxious looks the mother, and
Our own is almost bare,
We feel for one another, and
We find a bit to spare.

You ask me what we think about
In rainy weather, when
We sit and pass the drink about,
And speak but now and then:
Sure, all may spend their leisure in
The manner that they will,
And poor men find a pleasure in
Just simply sitting still.

We're up to tend the cattle when
The Londoner's in bed;
We hear the thunder rattle, when
There's nothing overhead
To shield us in the racket, and
When down doth pour the rain,
We only shake our jacket, and
We go to work again.

To every man his station, and
His work is set, I ween;
The Queen doth rule the nation, and
The soldier guards the Queen
From foemen that would harm her, and
Their number is not small;
We labor for the farmer, and
The farmer keeps them all.

Then do not judge us blindly, as
You'll hear some people do;
Think only of us kindly, as
You'd have us think of you.
To other folk than we belong
The pulpit and the pen,
Yet England were not England long
Without her Common Men.

LETTER FROM FRESNO.

FRESNO, September 3, 1879.

Editor "News Letter:" You have been ready at all times since I came to spend a few months in California to give publicity to such expressions as I might feel myself justified in offering for the interest of your readers; and the advantage of the people of a new country, whose latent resources require development on principles very different from those applied with success in countries, whether of America or Europe, seventeen degrees of latitude farther removed from the Equator. My object is, and ever has been, to place at the disposal of every one who may be benefited thereby, the results of a life spent in the midst of industries peculiarly suited to such sub-tropical climates as Australia and Central and Southern California. Some one said well that "the man who made two blades of grass grow where there was only one before was a benefactor to his race." And so (pace teetotalers) the man who causes a thirsty generation to cool itself, and invigorate itself, and keep itself sober, with that wine which the country yields and Providence destined for the enjoyment and health of the race that inhabits it, is presumably a benefactor also. Enemies of the whisky mills, I admire you, and, pro tanto, wish you God-speed! Bigots, who neither know nor wish to learn that the sense of enjoyment of life may be, for a time, intensified without encroaching upon either conscience or health, I never disguised my contempt for your doctrines!! Where wine, pure and simple, is the universal stimulant of the people, there there is no drunkenness.

In all reasonable efforts to suppress drunkenness I am one with you, but when you come to talk the absurd nonsense that I, in common with others, have to listen to, and read, I put on my hat and depart.

I have been spending a few days at Fresno, a not very interesting city, for it stands on what is naturally a sandy desert. But man has conducted rills of water to it from a long distance, and where the water flows the desert blooms like the rose of Sharon. Here the King river supplies the indispensable elements of fertility. Without it the land would be dear at five cents an acre; now it is worth a long price, and yields a wonderful return in any kind of purpose to which it is put. Here the banana and plantain thrive, and, ere long, all the lemons, olives, guavas, and other quasi-tropical fruits will be grown to perfection. Here, at Eisen Vineyard, twelve varieties of grapes are grown at the present time, but only about six for especial wines—red and white. Everything in the nature of wine that does not promise well is at once sent to the still and converted into brandy. Next week I intend to return to the subject, and, once for all, to point out how a vineyard and a wine-cellar should be conducted when the object is to produce wines like the generous growths of Southern Europe.

JOHN J. BLEASDALE, D. D.

A story told in the last North American Review about the Panama Canal is a very good one, if true; but it has a very suspicious look. Gen. Türr is anything but a Bonapartist: "According to this account, the concession for this canal is owned by a little company, of which Gen. Türr is President, with a capital stock of 100 shares of the par value of 500 francs each; the stockholders are mainly bankrupt Bonapartists, who are casting about for some means of repairing their shattered fortunes. M. de Lesseps is a connection of the ex-Empress Eogénie, and the only one of the friends of the fallen dynasty who can command capital and credit; application was made to him, and he was induced to take the project in hand. The plan was to sell the concession to the company that would necessarily be organized to carry through the work, for the sum of 25,000,000 francs, thus insuring to the stockholders in the Türr company the sum of 250,000 francs for each share of stock originally worth 500 francs. An examination of the names of the delegates to the Canal Congress which indorsed this scheme shows that it was composed mainly of Bonapartists, and that they were largely interested in the Turr company. A Nicaraguan roots was proposed, but the delegates who favored it were virtually excluded from the deliberations of the Congress. M. de Lesseps' plan had not much favor with thoughtful men before, and this secret history will take away what little prestige it enjoyed by reason of its magnificent proportions. Stock-jobbing is not confined to Wall street, or even to America.

Spinner and his autograph say they will never leave Florida.

EXTRAORDINARY SEASONS.

Mr. Shadrach Luckhurst, of the Charity Estate, Willesborough, England, a retired agriculturist, writes to the Export Mercantile Advertiser and Export Journal: 1816 was a year never to be forgotten as the wettest, coldest, darkest, and most unfruitful on record. An immense quantity of corn never came to perfection, but blackened, mildewed and rotted on the ground. The small portion which was saved in the Autumn and Winter was wretchedly bad in quality. The prices of wheat ranged (at Ashford) from £1 1s. to £1 6s. per bushel; of the quartern loaf, from 1s. 4d. to 1s. 7d. The bread was the worst and poorest I ever saw or ate. Malt, poor in quality, sold at a guinea a bushel. Hops were very bad in regard to quality; prices were 6s. to 7s. per pound. The few apples that were saved sold at 24s. to 30s. per bushel. Potatoes were not much cultivated at this period, but what there were only attained full blossom in September. A terribly severe frost then occurred, which cut them all down to the ground, and effectually killed them. The Summer of 1818 was the hottest and driest I ever remember. Talavera wheat had then only been introduced a few years, and was getting into general repute. A hilly field facing the south was sown with this wheat in the Autumn of 1817. It was cut fully ripe on June 29th, thrashed on July 3d, ground on July 4th, and bread was made from the flour on the same day. This was the earliest wheat I ever saw. In this year the harvest was general by July 7th, and it was all cut and cleared by the 25th of the month.

The whole country was of a uniform brown color; not a blade of grass, nor a turnip or cabbage was to be seen. Cattle perished for the lack of pasturage and water. For all that, the year was the most plentiful, fruitful, and prosperous within my recollection. Wheat was a wonderful crop both in quantity and quality, and the bread was admirable. The price of wheat fell soon after harvest to one-third of what it previously had been. Barley and other Lent corn was short, as they had no rain from seed-time till harvest. The best barley was equal in price to wheat, the only time I recollect it being so. A crop of hops of extraordinary magnitude was gathered, and of first-rate quality. The price came down to 1s. per lb. Apples were sold at from 1s. to 3s. per bushel; the best Orleans plums and other choice varieties at 2s. to 2s. 6d. per bushel; common plums, 1s. 2d. per bushel; cherries, ½d. per lb. When the fine rains set in during September, the land was so swestened and pulverized that it smoked like a hot-bed or lime kiln. Most farmers said it was too late for turnips, but some did venture to sow. The seed vegetated so quickly that the rows were luxuriantly green in six weeks, and really splendid turnips, as large as a child's head, were produced. The pastures in a few weeks were covered with a growth of richest grass, and all kinds of stock fattened at a rate that was most extraordinary. The summer of 1818 will never be forgotten by any who are living and witnessed it.

A correspondent writes—SIR: I do not believe that any social grievance is safe to be mentioned by you. Mine may be a common one, but at all events it is entitled to remark. Lately I lost a very dear relative and friend. Stupidly enough, I put an announcement of the death into the Times. You can hardly guess the result, unless you have been guilty of a similar act of folly. Two days had not passed before the house where the death had occurred was flooded with circulars of undertakers, of stone-masons, of tailors, of dressmakers devoting their attention to mourning, and of others who give their undivided time to signalize the fact that a loss has occurred. It seems to me that such an abuse of the power of advertisement should be checked. The lady, who is now widowed, was tormented by each post with the reminder of her calamity, and all this for the sake of a small tradesman gaining a small profit. One other thing I ought to tell you. Some months before, the widowed lady, in stepping from a carriage, broke her leg by an accident. The following day an undertaker called to see if there was any business for him to attend to. I was away at the time. Had I been there, I should have done my petit possible to teach him a lesson. You will know better than I do whether this letter may serve you in an effort to repress these vampire-like attacks.

TEMPLAR.

"Vanity Fair" says: The Czar has refused to accede to the petition of the Grand Duke Nicholas Constantinovitch to be allowed to leave Orenburg, his place of exile, for a spot nearer St. Petersburg. The Prince, who was turned out of the army and exiled to Orenburg for his boisterous conduct, is said to have recently aggravated his offense by carrying on an intercourse with the Nihilists. There is also a story afloat at St. Petersburg that Nihilism has penetrated to the Czar's kitchen, and that one of the cooks has been taken up for complicity with the revolutionary movement. Whether this be true or not it is difficult to say, but I am assured that his Majesty manifests the greatest uneasiness with his food, and that on the faintest symptoms of indigestion he fancies he has been poisoned. How he must envy the Sultan! The latter has lost both Bulgaria and Batoum, but he at least can enjoy his dinner in safety, which his wretched victor is certainly unable to do.

BOOK NOTICES.

A Pioneer Pastorate and Times, Embodying Contemporary Local Transactions and Events. By the Rev. Albert Williams, Founder and First Pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, San Francisco. San Francisco, 1879.

Mr. Williams claims for his work a place as a contribution to history, without in any way exaggerating its real importance. This, indeed, he rather depreciates; for, however modest his purpose, he has brought together materials of permanent value for the history, yet to be written, of the settlement of California. What with fanatical Argonauts on the one side, and on the other a world bored to death with Poker Flats and Red Dogs, it is as yet difficult to arrive at a fair understanding of the men who came in '49, and the work they did; but Mr. Williams has done more than his share in giving us this succinct narrative of the foundation of the Presbyterian Church on this coast, for his volume is nothing less than this.

It was in February, 1849, that the author left New York, under commission from the Boards of Education and Missions of the Presbyterian Church, for the "new field of Christian enterprise in Upper California." On the 1st of April he landed in San Francisco, and on the 8th preached his first sermons in the Public School House on the south-west corner of the Plaza. The following Sunday, April 15th, he united with the Rev. Mr. Woodbridge in the organization of the Presbyterian Church at Benicia, the first Protestant Church in California. The First Presbyterian Church of San Francisco was formally established on the 20th of May; and others were not long behind.

The reminiscences of men famous in the early days are frequent in these pages, and Mr. Williams does justice to the character and conduct of the native Californians, who are too often hardly dealt with by writers.

Those who are over-much disposed to look despairingly at the future of this State, should take courage when they find a serious, intelligent clergyman, who has watched every vicissitude of our career for thirty years, deliberately expressing his conviction that "There inheres still in the body politic more than an equipoise of moral goodness. The moral leverage of California was then, and still is adequate to uphold and further any desirable and proper movement for the maintenance of right, virtue and truth."

THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW, SEPTEMBER, 1879. New York: D. Appleton & Co.

This is a very interesting number of the North American. Mr. Anthony Trollope opens with an article on "The Genius of Nathaniel Hawthorne," a very appreciative criticism of the great American novelist. Professor S. Newcomb follows with an exposition of "the Standard of Value," in which he shows with tolerable clearness the meaning and the importance of the multiple standard of value, his conclusion being that the future money of the United States and of other countries ought to be paper money, redeemable in an amount of bullion varying with the changes decreed from time to time by the multiple standard, or redeemable in coin of different weights as may be determined from time to time by the calculations on the basis of the multiple standard. It is impossible for us to describe in the limits of this notice what the multiple standard implies, and therefore we must refer the reader to the article itself, or, better still, to Professor Stanley Jevon's book on "Money and the Mechanism of Exchange." Professor Newcomb's views are interesting, and give a kind of knowledge which is very much wanted at the present time, although we may remark that we are by no means satisfied that he has arrived at the final solution of the question. The "Confession of an Agnostic" is a subtle day-dream as to ultimate religious and philosophical beliefs, or the absence of them, and notwithstanding a sort of defiant defence of his irregular domestic relations, in which we cannot but see the petty weakness and microscopic freedom of a mind otherwise strong and perfectly capable of sustaining the burden of matrimonial bondage in a regular form, this article will be read with interest by many souls who are craving after new ideas in religion and philosophy. Perhaps the most important article of all, however, is that entitled "Intrigues at the Paris Canal Congress," which shows how a few of the discarded officials of the Second Empire packed the Canal Congress at Paris, outvoted the American representatives, and secured the adhesion of the meeting, which they wished to be regarded as representative of the various nations interested, to a crude and unconsidered scheme in which these ex-officials had a large pecuniary interest in the shape of concessions which had cost little or nothing, and which were to be transferred to the company to be formed for a large sum of money or shares. What the editor in a note, and Mr. Menocal in his article, explain, ought to be sufficient to show Americans that the Government ought to build a canal the benefits of which will be immense to Americans, though the actual revenue may not pay expenses for years after it is completed. Richard Wagner contributes Part II. of "The Work and Mission of My Life," and the second chapter of "The Diary of a Public Man" recounts the events at the time of President Lincoln's arrival in Washington immediately before his being installed in office.

We have seldom read brighter or pleasanter verses than those addressed by Charles Mathews to Mr. Ashby-Sterry on receiving a presentation copy of "Boudoir Ballads." The veteran actor at the age of seventy-four, and while laid up with the gout, can still write as follows:

"I am thirty years older than you are,
But of pleasure can yet take my fill;
Old friends ever honest and true are,
At least—I believe them so still.

"I can sup upon cold meats and salads,
Enjoy myself still with the gay;
I can relish your exquisite Ballads,
And feel the old glow at a play!

"What more can the youth of to-day do?
They go a good pace—will they last?
I can do almost all the things they do,
And have got what they haven't—the Past!"

The whole poem is well worth reading, and Mr. Ashby-Sterry must, we think, prize it very much. It will be found in Mr. Charles Dickens's capital life of the actor, published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—Court Circular.

THE DAY BOOK

FROM

Saturday to Saturday.

Washington, August 30th.—The Controller reports the National Bank circulation outstanding at $329,341,147, exclusive of $1,448,840 of National Gold Bank notes. The total increase of National Bank circulation since January 1st last was $7,021,293. The amount of increase in the month of January was $607,995; February, $1,648,401; March, $1,081,026; April, $2,018,634; May, $393,901; June, $151,386; July, $266,540; August, $353,410. There has been an increase of legal tender notes deposited for retiring circulation since the 1st of January, 1878, of $2,285,273. The amount of 10-40 bonds on deposit as security for the circulation of notes of National Banks is $10,512,900.——PHILADELPHIA, August 30th.—President Gowen, of the Reading Railroad, has addressed a letter to Judge Lathrop, Receiver of the New Jersey Central, in which he says his company will agree to unite in a general suspension of coal mining for two weeks each in September, December, January and February, or one week in March next. If the absolute suspension of mining is not satisfactory to all, his company will unite in curtailing the out-put of coal for the five months named, to an aggregate of 5,000,000 tons. He also stipulates that the price of free-burning white ash coal shall be advanced in New York at once.——LONDON, Sept. 1st.—Charles Stewart Parnell, Home Rule Member of the House of Commons for Meath, addressed a disorderly mob of from 10,000 to 20,000 persons in Limerick, Saturday, on the land question. He advised the farmers to combine and pay no more rent until they got a reduction.——PARIS, September 2d.—Borescu, a Roumania envoy, is now making the round of the European Courts to obtain some modifications in the Treaty of Berlin, binding Roumania to emancipate the Jews, and justified his attitude by the Chinese question in America, and says the people now speak of putting themselves on their guard against the Jews.——LONDON, September 2d.—John O'Connor Power, Home Ruler, member of Mayo, who on Sunday last addressed a large meeting at Levant, farmers and others at Ballyhaunis, held to demand the immediate reduction of rent and a radical reform in existing land laws.——Thomas W. Book & Co., sheetiron and tin-plate workers, near Cardiff, in constant operation since 1840, closed Saturday last by order of the Official Liquidator of the East of England and South Wales District Bank, and 1,500 workmen were paid off. Three villages had grown up around the works, the inhabitants consisting solely of working people and their families, and these, numbering 6,000, are destitute.——RANGOON, September 2d.—The departure of the British Resident is considered at Mandalay to be a triumph for the Party hostile to the British. There are signs of a conspiracy against the King among the Ministers, who would form a regency.——VICTORIA, September 2d.—Imperial Commissioners are in the Province examining the different harbors for a practicable railway terminus. It is said that they have condemned the present site of the dock-yard at Esquimalt as being untenable in case of war.——The total value of Provincial imports for the year ending June 30, 1879, was $2,440,779, and the total amount of duty collected on imports for the three months ending the same date, was $131,776; the value of free goods imported during that period being $36,353.——ROME, September 2d.—Reports received by the Minister of Agriculture confirm the bad accounts concerning the crops. The yield of maize in several provinces is only half that of ordinary years, while in several places it is considerably below the average. The wheat crop is also generally unfavorable, and the production will be equal only to a third of that of 1878.——HOUSTON, August 31st.—When to-day's train from Galveston arrived, it was halted by the police force of Houston. The United States Marshals having deputized about one hundred persons on the train, they arrested the police. On coming into the city, the United States officers were themselves arrested by the city authorities and taken into custody and brought before Mayor Burke in the office of the Chief of Police. The Chief announced that each was required to give a bond of fifty dollars for their appearance at the City Court on Monday, to answer a charge of violating the quarantine law. U. S. District Attorney Homan said that he and his party acted under the authority of the United States Government, and by orders of Governor Roberts, of Texas. The prisoners refused to give bail, Homan announcing that they would immediately apply to Judge Masterson for a writ of baheas corpus. The train men and U. S. officers alone were held, and are endeavoring to get a hearing before the District Judge to-night.——NEW YORK, September 2d.—The Commissioners are expected to arrive to-day from England to investigate the agricultural prospects of the country.——The latest advices show that the large body of farmers assembled in Manchester, ready to start, are not entirely penniless, having capitals of two thousand to three thousand pounds. Their intention is to colonize together. They are from Yorkshire. It is authoritatively declared that the whole of the English mining population are turning their eyes to American and Australia. Bryson, President of the Northumberland Miners' Association, urged all unemployed laborers to give up their struggle at once and forever in old England and emigrate. Three hundred men of the Bradford Iron and Machine Works are on their way to Philadelphia, where employment is promised them. A cutlery firm in Sheffield, with all its capital and staff of workmen, is moving bodily to this country.——NEW YORK, September 3d.—The exports of domestic produce from this port during the week are the largest on record: $9,982,608 against $7,625,433 for the corresponding week last year, and $7,261,045 the year previous. Of this week's total, nearly $3,000,000 went to Liverpool and London alone: The total since January 1st is $220,551,748, against $223,999,933 for the same time last year.——HAVANA, September 3d.—The Home Government has notified the authorities here that it will send immediately 20,000 troops to maintain tranquility in the Island, and will also send all funds necessary to meet increased expenditures. Seventy-eight deaths occurred from yellow fever last week; a decrease of seventeen compared with the previous week.

A GOOD PLAN.

Anybody can learn to make money rapidly operating in Stocks, by the "Two Unerring Rules for Success," in Messrs. Lawrence & Co's new circular. The combination method, which this firm has made so successful, enables people with large or small means to reap all the benefits of largest capital and best skill. Thousands of orders, in various sums, are pooled into one vast amount and co-operated as a mighty whole, thus securing to each shareholder all the advantages of the largest operator. Immense profits are divided monthly. Any amount, from $5 to $5,000, or more, can be used successfully. N. Y Baptist Weekly, September 26th, 1878, says: "By the combination system $15 would make $75, or 5 per cent.; $50 pays $350, or 7 per cent.; $100 makes $1,000, or 10 per cent. on the stock, during the month, according to the market." Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, June 29th: "The combination method of operating stocks is the most successful ever adopted." New York Independent, Sept. 12th: "The combination system is founded upon correct business principles, and no person need be without an income while it is kept working by Messrs. Lawrence & Co. Brooklyn Journal, April 29th: "Our editor made a net profit of $101.25 from $20 in one of Messrs. Lawrence & Co.'s combinations." New circular (mailed free) explains everything. Stocks and bonds wanted. Government bonds supplied.

ALASKA COMMERCIAL COMPANY,

No. 310 Sansome street, San Francisco, Wholesale Dealer in Furs. Sept. 21.

"BIZ."

The election excitement of the week has been so intense and all-ahsorbing as to usurp the ordinary husiness attractions of the street, leaving us little for comment as regards the staple articles of commerce. Treating the same alphahetically, we find that the Burlap Bag market has undergone a collapse. The combination has thus far failed in its efforts to make sales of its 10,000,000 bags at 11@11½c., the auction offerings having fed the market quite liherally at 8½@9½c. Coal has heen without movement for lack of supplies from ahroad. Anthracite is, however, in large stock and prices entirely nominal, not commanding freight and cost. Coffee has only heen dealt in with moderation, but as the stock of choice Green Central American is light, we expect the opening fall trade to take off the surplus at full rates, say 16@16½c. Rio is in light demand at 14@15c.

Case Salmon.—This article has become quite a drug upon the market, even at the low prices of $1@1 05 for 1-lb cans. Several of the very largest canneries upon the Columhia River have not yet sold a single case of this season's packing, carrying 25,000@30,000 cases each. They were not willing to accept $1 15@1 25 at the opening of the season, and now we fear they will have to hold for a while or ship off the same upon consignment. Had it not been for the Chicago demand early in the season prices would have dropped ruinously low. At the Fair of the Mechanics' Institute, the Cutting Packing Company have an elegant exhihit of fruits, sauces, jams, jellies, etc.; in fact, a full and complete assortment of Oilman's stores, that would, we think, put John Bull to shame. Our canners, hoth here in this city and iu the country, have had au ahundance of apricots, peaches, cherries, Bartlett pears, herries, tomatoes, etc., and they have all improved the time to the best advantage, and are now prepared to execute all orders.

Metals.—We have not a word of encouragement to shippers of Pig Iron. Stocks are large and prices low, with a very limited demand. Sydney Block Tin has declined, and so has Tin Plate, with very little demand.

Oils continue to rule low for all kinds, particularly Earth Oils—Petroleum.

Provisions are in good supply, and prices of Eastern Meats continue to rule low.

Quicksilver seems to have heen neglected during the week—price, 40c. Stock light.

Rice.—The stock of China is large, with a fair inquiry at 4⅜c for Mixed, and 5¼c@5½c for No. 2 and No. 1 respectively. Hawaiiau is scarce at the moment at 5¾c@6c. It is said some shipments of Island have been sent East for a market.

Spirits.—The local supply of Neutral is now greater than for two years past—price, $1 15@$1 20. Naglee's San Jose Brandy seems to he steadily growing in favor. The last Panama steamer carried en route to New York 3,700 gallons native Grape Brandy, and 18,628 gallons California Wines.

Sugar.—The demand is active and the supply free, causing steady prices, say 9½c@10c for White, 7⅛c@8⅛c for Yellow.

Salt.—Our spot stock of Liverpool is light, hut there is said to he considerahle en route. The last sale of Ashtons Liverpool Stoved was at $20.

Teas.—Our stocks are light and the price of Japans, in papers, firm at 35@37½c. for Standard chops.

Tobacco.—Private Eastern advices from Virginia manufacturers inform us of an advance of 2c. per lb. in all fancy stock.

Freights and Charters.—Quite a large number of grain charters have heen coucluded during the week within the range of 43@45s. for wooden vessels, and the usual advance for British iron ships. Our disengaged fleet has heen materially reduced during the week, leaving a large list now upon the herth to load grain for Europe.

Flour.—The ship L. C. Troop has cleared for Liverpool with 71,000 50-lb sacks of Starr Mills Vallejo Extra. Our Spot market at date is rather sluggish, at $4 75@$5 for Shipping Extras, $5 25@$5 50 for Family and Bakers' Extra.

Wheat—The market has undergone no material change during the week; strictly No. 1 commands $1 70@$1 72½; No. 2 Shipping, $1 65@$1 67½ per cental.

Barley.—The market is dull and sluggish, at 65@70c for Feed, 75c@$1 for old and new Brewing. Chevalier may be quoted at $1 50@$1 70, according to quality. The Bell of Avon, for Cork, carried 27,966 ctls., and the Enos Soule, for Liverpool, had 2,225 ctls. The steamer for Australia carried 12,500 ctls.

Wool.—The spot stock is light, the Fall clip selling at 12@17c.

Hops.—We note a sale of 100 bales 1878 growth for export at 12½c; new 1879 crop will very readily command 20@25c.

FRESCOING.

One of the most decisive signs of a growth in taste and appreciation of truly artistic excellence, is the change that has come over the American style of house decoration within a few years. It is not very long ago that men were contented with painted walls or paper, some even with finely whitewashed surfaces, and with a few stucco ornaments for the ceiling; and it was looked upon as the hight of luxury when some rich man ventured upon oak panelling. To-day all this has undergone a change, and, as we cannot help thinking, for the better. The ideal home is now a home for the mind and for the soul, as well as for the body and the more material comforts. Taste is to pervade the atmosphere and to be present in the aspect of the grounds and the house and each room of the house, and the aesthetic sense is to be cultured and gratified by all that beauty of form and magic of color can offer. With this higher ideal of the home has come the demand for wall decoration in the permanent form of fresco—the only form of the divine art of painting which Michael Angelo considered to be worthy of men.

Nowhere in America has this demand been more marked or more imperative than in California; for the stately mansions, which have been made abiding places of beauty by this art, are to be found not only in San Francisco, but in many country-seats as well. We have been exceptionally favored, it is true, in the possession of an artist quite unequaled in this line. We refer to Signor G. G. Gariboldi. This gentleman is not only profoundly skilled in all the technical details and processes of fresco painting; he is also an original thinker, full of resource, and with an eye which seizes at once on the possibilities of a hall or a room, a ceiling or a wall, on the advantages or defects of light and position, and combines them so as to bring out and highten the elements of dignity and grace, and to mask what is defetive or unpleasing. Bringing to California all that the Old World could teach him, Sig. Gariboldi gave careful study to the requirements of our climate, the style of building, the tastes of our people, and their grandiose aims and views; and the modifications he has introduced into the theory and practice of his profession have made nothing less than an original American style of fresco painting. The Knickerbocker mansion, at New York, was decorated by him in a manner which has elicited the highest praise from all those who have seen it; and when Mr. Knickerbocker was here with Mr. Wm. Schaus, and inspected, in company with other foreign visitors, the homes of our magnates, it was agreed among them that Signor Gariboldi was undoubtedly the greatest living master of fresco. In idea and conception, in composition and in detail, his style is purely and entirely new and American, such as only an artist, who had caught the true American spirit, could produce. Not contented with the past, Sig. Gariboldi last Monday departed for the East and Europe, where he will lay in materials and study the novelties which have appeared, intending, upon his return, to establish an institution among us with superior facilities for reducing the cost of fresco, so as to bring it within the means of all.

We feel that his absence must result in singular benefits to our city, and wish him a happy and prosperous voyage, and a speedy return.

Neville & Co., of 31 and 33 California street, have on exhibition at the Fair, south end, up staire, a magnificent assortment of awninge, tents, twine, seines, paper bags, grain and ore bags, wagon and horse-covers, in a bewildering abundance and variety. This firm manufactures fishing-twine and tackle of the most approved materials, tents and every other appliance for sportsmen and camping parties, in every possible style. Their Mermaid seive twine, which never kinke or enarle, has made them famous all over the coast; and the Mermaid cotton rope, for fishermen's use, is superior to any rope ever offered to them. Their establishment is one of the largest in the whole country, and always full of business. Every form and style of bag that can be called for, burlaps, cotton duck, materials for tents, hydraulic hose—in a word, every article made of twine or cord or duck—is constantly on hand. Sportsmen and tourists find it indispensable to supply themselves at this great emporium, and all branches of business and trade are supplied with wrapping, baling and bag twines, in cotton and hemp; and, as sole agents for the Cable Flax Mills and the Russell Mills, they are in a position to meet every requirement.

It is curious how many of the old traditious are being disturbed by the enterprise and growing productiou of America. Not only do we now compete with the foreigner in the markets of Asia and South America; we are invading the formidable European countries with manufactures in their own special line, and the latest form of this is the "Long Cut" Ham, put up by Whittaker & Co., to compete with the Westphalia and Cumberland products. The "Long Cut" is cured by the Ice process, is very mild in flavor, fresh and juicy. A few have been sent, by way of specimens, to Breeze & Loughran, agents for Whittaker's Star Hams; and it is certain that they are the finest ever seen.

There is no more attractive shooting and fishing ground than that about Rose Landing, at the foot of Mt. Tamalpais, and Mrs. P. Smith, a most excellent lady and a charming housekeeper, has just opened a new establishment for the reception of hunters and families. The house is most comfortable in every way, and the cooking is first-rate. Within easy reach of the city, and in a most delightful climate, this place is one of the best in the State for real recreation and enjoyment of country freedom. At the Bank Exchange Saloon are always to be had the very best of wines and liquors, as required.

J. J. O'Brien, not the ward politician, by any means, but the successful proprietor of the "Arcade" Dry Goods house on Market street, left this city for the East about a month ago to arrange with the principal establishments there, factories and large importers, for the earliest supplies in New Goods of the very latest styles and patterns. His negotiations have been entirely carried out to a satisfactory issue, and the "Arcade" will henceforth be the leading emporium of Dry Goods, of the newest and most original designe and styles, and the most recent fashions. Mr. O'Brien will shortly be on his return this way.

Napa Soda, it has been established by statistics, is the natural safeguard against all kidney diseases, and no man does justice to his system in this dry climate, where so much extra labor is imposed upon that delicate organ, by neglecting to keep it in vigor.

Turkey is much behind the age. Its Pashas are a set of moss-backs—in fact, the country is decayed and mosque-covered.

The Cairo correspondent of the Reforme Financiere gives an inventory of the Khedive's luxuries in the way of table appurtenances. The following is a list of the dinner and breakfast services belonging to Ismael Pasha himself, and does not include those belonging to his family:

It is fortunate that such hailstorms as the one that has visited the Thames Valley are rare. The two most noted ones of history are those of 1510 and 1697. In the first, "there was for a time a horrid darkness, thicker than that of midnight, which continued until the terrors of mankind were changed to more terrible objects by thunder and lightning breaking the gloom, and bringing on such a shower of hail as no history of human calamities could equal. These hailstones were of a bluish color, and some of them weighed not less than 100 pounds. A wearisome vapor of sulphur attended the storm. All the birds and beasts of the country were entirely destroyed. Numbers of the human race suffered the same fate. The fishes found no protection from their native element, but were equal sufferers in the general calamity." The storm of 1697 "began by thunder and lightning, when suddenly a black cloud came forward against the wind, and marked its passage with devastation. The hailstones were as large as bowling-green balls. Wherever it came every plantation fell before it. It tore up the ground, split great oaks and other trees; the fields of corn were cut down as if leveled with a scythe; tiles and windows were broken by the violence of the hailstones; the birds vainly tried to escape by flight—pigeons, rooks, crows, and other sorts, were brought down. All this fell within the compass of one mile."

Distinguished divine to recent convert: "We propose to baptize you by the Turkish-bath method. It is really the only means to scrub your years of sin out of you."

SKELETON SKETCHES.—No. 5.

[BY T. A. HARCOURT.]

John Wilde.

"Fathoms deep the ship doth lie,
Wreathed with ocean weed and shell,
The cod slips past with round white eye,
Still and deep the shadows lie,
Dusky as a forest dell:
Tangled in the twisted sail,
With the breathing of the sea,
Stirs the man who told this tale,
Staring upward dreamilie."

It was at Seacomb, a diminutive fishing hamlet on the southwest coast of England, that I met John Wilde, and it was there, in his lonely hut, one stormy winter night, that he told me the story of his life.

"I was born here," he said, "nearly fifty years ago, and came of a race of fishermen who have starved at Seacomh during three centuries, all poor as the rocks they lived among, and well-nigh as ignorant. My father died while I was little more than a boy, but not before he had taught me the rude art by which he and his forefathers had gained their scanty living, so that after his death I was able to support my mother, who, dear heart, doated on me. I was the one bright star on her dim road of life. There is little more than this to be said of the first sixteen years of my life. I grew up wild as the sea-birds, and fearless as they of the great waters that rolled and roared continually before me. To sail a boat and catch fish was all that I knew, but this put bread in my mother's mouth, and it was enough.

I was in my seventeenth year when an event occurred which subsequently changed the whole course of my existence. A heavy gale had been blowing in-shore with constantly increasing violence for several days, and at last culminated in a terrific storm. During that night of fearful tempest a large East Indiaman, homeward-bound, was dashed upon our Coast. Young as I was, I was first in the life-boat, and with infinite difficulty we reached the ship. All the passengers and crew, however, except three men and a little girl of six or seven years, had left in the boats. Of course they were all drowned before they had gone a hundred yards from the wreck. Those remaining we managed to land. The grown survivors knew nothing of the child, except that she was on board with her mother, a stately, pleasant lady, and an East Indian nurse. They said that she would doubtless be fetched away before long, and in the meantime she was placed under my mother's care.

At dawn I was on the beach again, and though not another life was saved, we rescued much property, and, as my share of salvage money, I eventually got what for us was quite a little fortune. This sum, however, we laid by for a rainy day, and it did not change our hard manner of life in the least. Meantime no one came for the child. The months rolled on and were gathered into years, and still she remained with us. "Waif," we called her, her own name sounding strange and unhomelike in our ears. Her image, God knows, is engraven in my heart. The first night I saw her, her fair, pale face with its clustering golden hair entered into my dreams, and since then has rarely been absent from them. But how shall I describe her? Why should I attempt it? I can never do her beauty justice. I only know that, in my eyes, accustomed only to the brown, coarse features of our fisher-children, she did not seem to be mortal. She was the sunshine of our somewhat gloomy household. Not that she was merry—on the contrary she was sad and quiet—but her sweet, gentle disposition was something foreign to Seacomb, and we cherished her as an exotic flower.

It is needless to say that I grew to love her with the whole strength of my heart. And she knew it, and in her gentle way returned my love; but I think hers was more the affection of a sister for a brother than the stronger passion I would have given my life to see. My mother looked upon our union as a settled thing, and its accomplishment was the aim and end of her life. But there was something stood between us, of which I only was aware. I was constantly oppressed with a sense of inferiority when in the presence of Waif. I have said that her very features were of that refined and delicate type which can only be produced by many generations of gentle birth; but more than this there was an indefinable air about her which stamped her as my superior. No matter how gentle, how loving she was to me, I always felt that she somehow lowered herself when she spoke to me. I struggled hard to rid myself of this feeling, but could not. She was ever the delicate lily, I the coarse seaweed; she the lady, no matter how homely her garb,—I the rustic boor. Worship her—aye, love her—I might, but mate with her—never!

With this trouble on my mind, I grew pale and haggard, greatly to the alarm of my mother, to whom at last I confided the secret of my distress. She affected to laugh at what she called my folly, but I could see that she was deeply concerned. A few days later she called me to her, and said: "John, I have been thinking over what you said to me the other day, and I have found a remedy. You complain of being beneath Waif, and are troubled because you know nothing. You shall be her equal if learning can make you so. You know that not a penny of the salvage-money has been spent. I kept it all for you—and Waif. You shall go to the great city, John, and learn, and be her equal. I have spoken to the clergyman over at Pencliffe about it, and have shown him the money, and he says that, though it is not much, yet you are so used to a hard life that it will be enough, and he has promised to arrange everything for you."

I did not know how to reply. But I will not trouble you with details; suffice it to say, I went, though the parting from Waif and mother was a terrible trial.

This was the beginning of the end. For three years I labored day and night as few men have labored; and during all that period I could only spare time and money enough to visit Seacomb twice, though I wrote very often. At first it was terrible work, and my progress was very slow. I had to begin at the very bottom of things, and my talent, I fear, was not great; but by degrees I improved, and it came easier toward the end. I lived upon next to nothing, but I was used to that. At the end of the third year I came down to Seacomb for the last time before my final return, which was to be twelve months later. Then it was that I spoke out to Waif, and she promised to be my wife.

The day before I left I was walking with my betrothed along a retired part of the beach, beyond the heads up yonder, when we were approached by a stranger, to me at least. As he drew nearer, I saw that he was handsome, but looked rather dissipated; he was evidently a gentleman, as far as the social sense of the word goes. I was about to bid him good-day and pass on, when, to my astonishment, he raised his hat gracefully to Waif, and, coming up to us, offered her his hand as if he were an old acquaintance. "Ah, Waif, good morning," he said; "pray who is this friend of yours?"

"Why, this is John—John Wilde—whom I have told you so much about. John, this is Captain Ogilvie."

I was utterly confounded, and stood staring stupidly at him. He smiled languidly, seemed amused, looked me up and down, and bowed negligently. After a few more words he left us.

"Why, John," cried Waif, as soon as he was gone, "what is the matter with you? you seem cross. Have I offended you?"

"No, no, Waif," I answered absently. "Let us go back."

Directly we reached the house I called mother aside and asked her if she knew Captain Ogilvie. "Why, yes, John," she answered. "He is staying at the rectory over at Pencliffe and strolls down here quite often. He has been very kind and attentive to Waif, I am sure."

"Mother, I dislike his looks," I said shortly.

"Ah, John, jealous, eh?" she retorted laughing, and then added, more seriously: "Is this what your learning has taught you, my son, to doubt the woman you love?"

Vexed at the view she took of the matter I answered not a word. I purposely kept by myself the rest of the day, and in the evening took a brief farewell of Waif and departed. Fool, fool, that I was! Why did I not stay to shield her! Why did I restrain the passion that would have slain him as he stood there, languid and insolent, with "Waif," "Waif," upon his lips, only to let a woman's reproach drive me away from my darling in anger!

It was about six months after my return to work, and I had forgotten all about the 'chance visitor'—as I had come to think him—that the letters began to come more rarely from the coast, until at length they entirely ceased. I waited and waited, and wrote and wrote, and so four more months passed, when one morning I received a letter bearing the well-known post mark, but directed in my mother's poor hand. Tearing it open, I read: "My Dear Son:—Come home at once." That was all. Without stopping to pack an article, I fled to the coast. I arrived at the nearest station to Seacomh at dusk, and hiring a horse, rode madly for home. At the cottage door I met my mother, her face, clearly shown by the light within, as pale as death. I opened my mouth to speak, but she caught me by the arm: "She heard your horse's gallop, and she has fled," she shrieked, pointing wildly to the beach. "Follow her, follow her, for God's sake, or"—

I heard no more, but rushed forward through the darkness, over the rough bowlders down to the smooth sand; then, to the right of me, I saw faintly a white figure gliding with incredible speed along the edge of the incoming waves toward the great black rock down there which slopes up from the shore and projects far over the breakers beneath. Fast as I ran, the figure outstripped me; it reached the foot of the rock, glided rapidly up, ran out to the end, paused just long enough to bow its head over a white bundle which it clutched to its breast, and then shot like a meteor through the black air into the boiling water below.

There is little more to tell. For six weeks after that fearful night I lay raving at the gates of death. I would to God I had passed away then and been at rest. But I slowly recovered, and when I grew strong enough to bear it, my mother told me how the serpent had staid about the place without her suspecting anything wrong, until one day, when she had spoken of our marriage to Waif, the child had suddenly burst into a violent fit of weeping. Then it all came out, and she told my mother how she loved the stranger and was going to marry him. Then my mother saw the evil, and determined to send for me at once, but just then the stranger disappeared, and she thought she would wait and let Waif forget him. But she soon saw that hope was gone, and that the destroyer had done his work; still, she had not the heart to write and tell me this. So the months went on, and Waif waited sadly but confidently for her lover's return. But he did not come, and in course of time the child became a mother. Then, less than ever, would she have sent for me; but Waif sank lower and lower, and at length, when she felt death near, she asked for me. But when she heard my horse's furious gallop, she seemed seized with a supernatural strength, and, leaping from her bed, fled into the darkness with her babe. You know the rest.

Soon after my recovery my mother sickened and died, leaving me alone in my misery. Then I went forth to set my foot upon the serpent, but he was already dead, having been killed in a duel. I came back here, a crushed and broken man, determined to live where she had lived, after the simple manner of my fathers."

Such was John Wilde's story. Two years later I went to see him, but found his cottage empty. Upon inquiry, I found that he had put to sea in his boat, one stormy night, and had never been seen or heard of since.

SHORT-SIGHTED IRELAND.

Irrepressible Ireland is at it again; perhaps it would be more correct to say, is at it more than ever. The home-rule and Fenian elements have in some places became so outrageously violent that it has become necessary to declare those districts under the provisions of the Peace Preservation Act, which means little else than that they be declared "in a state of siege." When at public speeches the shooting of landlords and their agents is openly advocated and applauded, and when at public banquets the Queen's name is hissed without a protest from M. P.s and magistrates presiding, it is time that the Government should adopt energetic measures. But is it not idiotic in Irishmen to imagine that they can ever accomplish their desires by such futile and disgraceful demonstrations? To shoot landlords because the laws are thought to be at fault is an atrocity which shows those guilty of it to be ignorant savages; and to hiss the Queen because her Government is thought unjust is the act of a very silly sort of traitor. Ireland can never get "free" by such means; indeed, her people could not adopt a more effectual method of getting rid of all foreign sympathy, and thereby binding their own "chains" faster than ever.

In Manchester, England, a stop has been put to certain gutter Lotharios in the habit of annoying ladies by addressing them in the streets. The wife of a merchant was persistently followed by one of these gay youths. At length she invited him to accompany her home. To this invitation he joyfully responded, but on entering the house was confronted with the merchant, who, after administering a gentle correction to him with a stick, bowed him civilly out.

AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND.

The steamer City of New York arrived in this port on the 10th, from Sydney August 14th, from Auckland August 19th, and from Honolulu September 1st. Lord Aug. Loftus, new Governor of New South Wales, had a very cordial welcome. Refreshing rains occurred in the first two weeks of August. A grand rifle match is to be held at Sydney during the Exhibition. In Adelaide the Liquor Law Commission recommend a Central Licensing Board, fines for selling to drunken persons, penalties for had liquor, discouragement of night licenses, and closing of shops at 10 P.M. In Victoria there was a strike of men employed in filling up quarry holes, at Melhourne, for higher wages. They had heen paid 4s. a day.

New Zealand.—A series of immigration returns have been laid on the table of the General Assemhly recently. From these we gather that during the period from July 1, 1878, to July 1, 1879, 8,747 Government and 2,353 nominated immigrants have heen hrought into the colony. The question of Chinese immigration is dealt with hy Sir George Gray in a Ministerial memorandum laid on the table of the Assemhly. He sets out hy showing that a dense population of various races, and of different degrees of civilization, will shortly exist in the tropical portions of Australia, and observes that "no possible chance should he allowed to arise of the European population heing over-horne, or even to any extent heing interfered with, by a mixed race of an inferior order, and whose civilization is of a secondary type."

Notwitbstanding the dullness of the times, the total increase of husiness in the Government Life Insurance Department for the year ending the 30th June last, is greater than any preceding year. On the 30th June last there were 1,140 miles of railway open for traffic. The total receipts for the four weeks ending that date were £52,495 7s. 2d. The total receipts for the twelve months ending that date amounted to £758,096 6s. 2d., while the expenditure was £545,478 15s., leaving a credit halauce of £212,618 13s. 2d. The expenditure was equal to 71.95 per cent. of the receipts.

Fifty Cents each will be paid at this office for the following copies of the News Letter to complete our files: January 3, 17, 24, 31; February 14; May 16; September 5, 19, 26; all of 1874.

THE STOCK MARKET.

A material increase in business has taken place during the week, accompanied hy a corresponding improvement of values. This is, in a great measure, owing to the restoration of con6dence growing out of the result of the late election. The market has steadily responded during the week, witb scarcely an interruption, and the public generally are commencing to come into the market, feeling that the developments at the mines will in the end justify the investment. The connection at the 2,300-level of Union Con. will he made much sooner than was at first anticipated, and this rapid progress of development imparts considerable stimulus to the market. In Alpha and Imperial the work of crosscutting has heen already commenced, and soon we may expect a lively deal in this section. At the close, the market was particularly strong and active, with considerahle husiness in the hands of brokers.

EARLY REMINISCENCES.

Some thirty years ago this town was hardly more than a epeck of eand upon this terrestrial globe, and its habitations coneisted of a row of adohes at the Mission, and a camp of tents on Montgomery and Kearny streets. Out on what is now Third street etood, near the Mission Road, two little frame cottagee, neat and pretty in architecture, and painted a delicate pink hue. They were fresh and demure in appearance, and seemed to hlush with coquettish modesty at finding themselves among so much coarseness and primitiveness. In one of these so beautifully and graphically described cottages occurred in '49 an event of great importance. Had horoscopes still heen current, here would have heen a capital occaeion to cast one of a No. 1 grade. A youngeter was horn. The first! Modesty forhide an extended notice of his appearance, hut it can he said that he did credit to California. This State is famous for its producte of all eorts. The richness of its climate and soil insure rapid development, early maturity and wonderful precocity. The discovery of gold was a matter of hardly a year'e history, and the gold-seeking fever in its earlieet phasee. Poseeeeed of an ambitious, adventurous spirit, I (the ahove first horn) desired to try my luck in the fields of the American River. It was a trip fraught with danger, and the long ties of home and family were poesibly to he eevered had not an unthought-of difficulty preeented itself: I could not possihly etart in long clothee and underwear, so I had to give up, with great reluctance, my dreame of eudden and rapid wealth. On my eecond hirthday, the general celehration ended with a grand feu de joie, which deetroyed a good part of the rapidly-growing town. I was borne from a hurning building, wrapt in a blanket, in the arms of a devoted attendant (the nurse); hut when arrived at the Plaza—the Mecca of all the fleeing inhabitants—the extent of the disaster was apparent, and I realized that this was an emergency that demanded prompt action. With that reckless energy characteristic of early Californiane, I threw myself in the thickeet of the fray. The nohle red-ehirted volunteere did wonders, and the fiend was eubjugated. I would have heen the nnanimous choice of the fireladdies for Chief, hut I could not hlow my own trumpet! An ahle and impartial chronicler of the stirring events of those exciting times speaks of the hanging of Jenkins, and of the wonderful coolness and compoeure of the wretch in his last earthly moments. I can supplement the graphic description hy modestly relating an incident connected therewith, to which I was a party. The a. and i. c. ahove mentioned epeaks of Jenkins' last request—a cigar. I happened to be at the head of the gang of citizens who were to do the hauling, and, hearing the poor fellow'e wish, handed him an excellent Imperiale ($800 a 1,000) from my emhroidered cigar-case. This case I afterward presented to the California Pioneere, and it can he seen, appropriately inscrihed, in their museum of antiquities and curiosities, alongside of Smyth Clark. The Vigilance Committee of 1856 was, perhaps, the most exciting event that ever moved our fair city. Ite legality or propriety need not he discussed, for it is plain that that was one of those occasions in the course of human evente, etc. (See next July 4th.) All old Californians will remember the mystery that eurrounded the different executive officers of the Committee, and who the awful 33 was who signed those terrible documents has never heen eatiefactorily etated. Many have been mentioned in this connection, hut never the right one. Now that years have elapsed since those dangerous times, the animositiee and vindictiveness created at the time muet be extinct. I helieve I can safely lift the vail, and announce myself as the man. Ha, ha! I could go on relating my reminiscences by the ream, but about this period I hegan attending primary school, and my mind ie confused as between pioneer events and the learning of reading and writing.

A WISE MAN IS PRINCE NIKITA OF MONTENEGRO.

After taking possession of the new territories hestowed upon him hy the Treaty of Berlin, he ordered a general censue to be held, so as to know hy how many thousands the numher of his faithful eubjecte had increased. But eome of these subjects objected greatly to heing considered faithful. Almoet all the Turks, hoth in and around Podgoritza, rose in rehellion to prevent themselves, and more especially the inmates of their hareme, from heing counted. Prince Nikita managed to eecure the pereons of all the ringleadere; and having had them placed in the yard of his castle at Cettinge, in convenient order for heing dispatched hy a few volleys in Turkieh fashion, he ordered the soldiers to etand hack, and himself addressed them, eaying that he had no intention of taking their lives, hut only wanted them to obey his decrees, which were intended for the good of hie new and his former eubjects alike. Thereupon he released them, merely expreeeing his confidence that they would offer no further resistance to hie government. Therehele, one and all, promised euhmission, with a great show of emotion and contrition, and henceforth it is expected that Moslems and Christiane will live in harmony side hy side with one another in Prince Nikita's dominione.

DR. CORNELIUS HERZ.

Dr. Cornelius Herz is well remembered among Sen Franciscans as a prominent physician, an ex-memher of the Board of Health, a dietinguished ecientist, and a man of mark generally. Ae an electrician he had few equals. Less than two years ago he left here for Paris, convinced that he could do much in extending the uees of electricity, and in perfecting the electric light, telephone, etc. It would appear that his expectations are heing very largely realized. The Paris correspondent of the New York Times thue writes: "Dr. Herz and his partners, all gentlemen of high standing, are at the head of all the more important telegraphic interests in France. They have the complete control of the Werderman electric light, of the Gower telephone, Edison's quadruplex telegraph, the Quartier telegraph, the Philips printing telegraph, the Ballestrieri apparatus, the Clamond pile, the suhterranean and suhmarine cables, and are the owners of the leading journal in Europe upon electricity and its applications—La Lumiere Electrique—whose chief editor ie Count Theodore de Moncel, the greatest living authority in such matters, and which is the only newepaper to which officers of the French Army and Navy are authorized hy their Government to contrihute. Dr. Herz and his associates have just eold the Gower telephone patent to the Credit Mohilier, one of the moet important hanks in Europe, which proposes to issue etock to the amount of 5,000,000 francs, of which 1,000,000 have heen immediately appropriated for the conetruction of linee in Paris only, while the same eystem is to he put in operation in Lyons, Bordeaux, Marseilles, Lille, Nantes, and other large provincial towns. At the same time steps have been taken for its introduction into Belgium, Auetria, Spain, Italy, Germany, Russia and Great Britain." We are glad to thus hear of the success of our fellow townsman. He is a man of push, and go, and vim. He ueed to promise largely as to his future, and it would seem that he is fast attaining a position to redeem his own very sanguine expectations as well as those of his friende.

A first trial has recently heen made at Woolwich, England, of a new gun having the following dimensions: Length, 36 feet; diameter at breech, 6 feet 6 inches; diameter at muzzle, 2 feet 4 inches; depth of hore, 33 feet; caliher in powder-chamher, 19¾ inches; caliher at muzzle, 17¾ inchee. The gun weighe a hundred tons, carries a shot weighing one ton, and the first time it was fired received a charge of 440 pounds of powder.

Dr. H. C. Bowie, son of the well-known and distinguished physician of this city, has recently graduated with high honors at the University of Munich, and is now on his way home to San Francisco. His really creditahle university career has delighted the heart of his scholarly father and pleased a host of warm friends.

HALF-HEARTED.

If I could love thee, Love, a little more,
If thy fair love outlived the brief, sweet rose—
If in my golden field were all thy store,
And all my joy within thy garden close
Then would I pray my heart to be full fond
Forever, and a little bit beyond.

If daffodil and primrose were not frail,
If snowdrop died not ere the dying day—
If I were true as Daphnis in the tale,
If thou couldst love as Juliet in the play,—
Then would I teach my heart to be full fond
Forever, and a little bit beyond.

But since I fear I am but wayward true,
And wayward false, fair love, thou seem'st to be—
Since I some day must sigh for something new,
And each day thou for life's monotony,—
Prithee, stay here ere yet we grow too fond,
And let me pass a little bit beyond.

THE RECENT ELECTION.

California has great reason to be proud of the recent election, which, indeed, should be regarded by the whole world as an important advance in the cause of free and honest government. The polls conclusively demonstrate that a new political departure has commenced. Republicans and Democrats have become terribly mixed up. Republican candidates have been carried in by Democratic votes. The Workingmen's Mayor was in reality elected by Republicans. The Republican party has been reinforced by all who hold conservative opinions, and the triumph of their ticket is no doubt a satisfactory guarantee that capital is safe, and that the institutions of the country will be firmly sustained.

On the other hand, a vast number of the more advanced Liberals amongst Republicans and Democrats have evidently deserted the old standards and have voted for the Workingmen. Disguise it as we may, it is useless to deny that a new political organization has grown up amongst us within the last two years, and that this organization has made itself powerfully felt during the late election.

Nor can it be doubted that the mainspring of the new movement was furnished by the Workingmen. Nearly all great political advances are due, in the first place, to commercial depression and physical distress. The rising party of the Workingmen of San Francisco is no exception. So long as wages were high and employment abundant there was political content. But when wages fell and the laboring classes were pinched, the evils were attributed to political causes and to the competition of Chinese. As usual at the commencement of such movements, there was threatened violence. Private property seemed for a time in danger. After a few insignificant outbreaks the new movement crystalized into a cry for political reform, public economy, a war against corporations and Chinese.

This journal has ever been the constant friend of capital, and as such, has also advocated what must be considered as the true interests of workingmen. But it does not ignore the fact that capitalists and workingmen are alike mortal. Both have selfish weaknesses and delusions, generated by special interests and peculiarities of education. Both have magnified each other's failings and exaggerated the differences which must arise in a still imperfect social organization. Neither, indeed, has been too ready to acknowledge and fairly recognize the equal rights guaranteed to every American citizen in the Declaration of Independence—the right to live, and that independently, and not by sufferance, as thousands necessarily do—the right to pursue happiness, so long as the rights of others to an equal freedom are not infringed. Surely a man may reasonably hope for something better than a bare existence for the return of work. Sometimes it is forgotten that all taxes are paid in effect by producers, or, in other words, by workingmen; and if only on that account, none are more deeply interested in economical and honest government. Lastly, who is more interested in the sacredness of private property than the man who lives by daily wage? To him robbery is misery and death. To advance the realization of these rights is the duty, and we believe also the interests, of capitalists as well as workingmen, and we should rejoice at the generation of a better feeling between them. For ourselves, we fear nothing from the political advent of the workingman. The trying time just past has proved that the day for violence and spoliation has forever passed away. The workingmen have a right to be congratulated on their sense and good behavior during the present crisis. Unlike some of their political opponents, they have learned to respect the majesty of law, and they have achieved a moral, if not a complete political success. Never in the history of any country in the world did the workingmen unite so firmly, so peaceably, and, withal, so effectually as in the election just past, and never have they been hacked up by so many intelligent voters not connected with their party. Nor had Sand-lot oratory anything to do with the result. Fortunately the candidates of the Workingmen were by no means their most prominent orators. The managers were wise. The nomination of such men as Kearney would have been fatal. The candidates selected were for the most part acceptable, and some of them superior, and hence it is that they came to occupy such an honorable position on the polls even in defeat.

We believe all outsiders voted with the Workingmen, because they felt that the old political parties had failed. Honest citizens have become disgusted with political bummers, official impostors and lobby-driven legislators. The Workingmen's candidates were at least pledged to retrenchment and economy. They were probably as honest, if not as able, as the rest, and the hope was clearly entertained and expressed by votes that by their election the Government might become more just and more conducive of the general good. We believe that even the successful party has been purified by the opposition of the workingmen. The Republican successes are due to the high character of the candidates proposed, and it is remarkable that the offices gained by workingmen are chiefly those which are intended to prevent dishonesty and secure an effectual administration of justice; and in so far they ought to be welcomed by all parties alike. And if such be the result of two years' organization among a class whose means are necessarily limited and whose personal efforts are all they have to give, we regard it as pure folly to predict its speedy disintegration, or to ignore the fact that the time is approaching when the laboring population of a free country will surely take a more active part in the Government thereof.

GRANT.

"How shall we rank thee upon glory's page?
Thou more than soldier and just less than sage.

"Statesman, yet friend to truth! of soul sincere,
In action faithful, and in honor clear;
Who broke no promise, serv'd no private end,
Who gain'd no title, and who lost no friend."

As we pen these lines, the good steamer City of Tokio, due here on the 19th instant, is plowing her way through the azure waters of the broad Pacific, each day bringing nearer to his native land Columbia's favorite son, the noble Grant, who, after accomplishing the tour of the world, and having received from all climes and all nations the highest possible honors, is now glad to return once again to the soil of his dearly loved America. San Francisco, the Golden Gate of the continent, stands ready, with open arms, to welcome home the country's hero, and that she will make the reception whole-souled, generous, patriotic and National, cannot for a moment be questioned. The greetings to Grant should be in every sense spontaneous ones. The fact that his political affiliations are with the Republican party, and that he may be their future standard-bearer, should not at this time be a matter of consideration. He comes to us now as the honored representative of American progress, and in all his wanderings he has ever proudly recognized the compliment extended to himself more as an appreciation of his country and its people than of himself as an individual. In his sojourn in China, his semi-official interviews with the Viceroy are calculated to have a very important bearing upon the vexed Chinese question, so agitating to many of the people of California, and this fact alone should secure for him the enthusiasm of the so-called Workingmen. Kearney has not properly studied his lesson, when he talks of "hanging effigies" on the Sand-lots. In Japan, the courtesies extended to Grant were of the most enthusiastic description—in fact, the peoples of Europe and Asia have tendered to him a series of greetings and receptions that until now have never been given to any man of any country. Considering these facts, it is eminently proper that the people of California, to whom he has ever been a loyal and consistent friend, should, upon his approaching arrival, turn out en masse to bid him welcome. Let him realize in its fullest and broadest sense the true meaning of those dearest of all words: "WELCOME HOME."

MY MARINER.

Oh, he goes away, singing,
Singing over the sea?
Oh, he comes again, bringing
Joy and himself to me!
Down thro' the rosemary hollow
And up the wet beach I ran,
My heart in a flutter to follow
The flight of my sailor-man.

Fie on a husband sitting
Still in the house at home!
Give me a mariner, flitting
And flashing over the foam!
Give me a voice resounding
The songs of the breezy main!
Give me a free heart bounding
Evermore hither again!

Coming is better than going;
But never was queen so grand
As I, while I watch him blowing
Away from the lazy land.
I have wedded an ocean-rover,
And with him I own the sea;
Yet over the waves come over,
And anchor, my lad, by me.

Hark to his billowy laughter,
Blithe on the homeward tide!
Hark to it heart! up and after;
Off to the harbor-side;
Down thro' the rosemary hollow,
And over the sand-hills, light
And swift as a sea-bird, follow;
And ho! for a sail in sight!

SKELETON SKETCHES.—No. 6.

[BY T. A. HARCOURT.]

The Hermit's Story.

"Then, listen," said the dying hermit, "and I will tell you why this solitude has been my home for fifty years. To no other human being have I breathed the dreadful story, nor should you hear it but that you have promised in return to close my eyes when the last agony shall be over, to roll the stone in front of the cave, and to reveal to no living man my place of sepulchre. Think not that I expect to be believed. Had I not known that mere narration of the tale you are about to hear would cousign me to a madman's cell, I should have unburdened my soul long ago. Nevertheless a man does not lie when the gates of death are swinging opeu to receive him, and as I hope for rest beyond tbose gates, I swear that I speak the truth. Now fill that gourd with water from tbe brook, and hasten, for already tbe black shadow that obscures the roof of the cave begins to stir restlessly and move downward.

How can I bope for anything but the pity which a madman excites when I begin by telling you that he who addresses you was born in two places, bears two uames—is, in short, two distinct and separate persons. That which you see—my body—was born in a little village on the coast of Norway, and bore the name of Ruloff Karlson. That whicb speaks to you and looks out through the eyes of Ruloff Karlson—the essence called spirit, mind, soul—first took life in a New England town and was named Caleb Lee. Understand, then, that in what follows I speak of "myself" as Caleb Lee, who for fifty years has had his habitation in the body of another.

Of my childhood it is unnecessary to speak. When a mere boy I went to sea, aud during twenty years of a sailor's life I visited almost every corner of the known world. I was thirty-two years old when the event occurred which bad made me what I have been for half a century.

In tbat year I shipped as second-mate on board a bark bound from London to Calcutta. I had just been married to a young and beautiful wife, whom I left in the care of my dear old mother when I set out on this voyage, which was to be my last. In my watch was the Norwegian sailor Ruloff Karlson, through whose lips I am now speaking. He was an intelligent man and an excellent seaman, and during the lone watches of the night we used to have long talks together about our past and future. By a singular coincidence this was to he his last voyage also, and, on his return, he was to marry a girl of his native village. He spoke tolerably good English, and his discriptions of his home in Norway, of his waiting sweetheart, of his old parents, and of the quiet life which he expected to lead on his return, made many a long night pass quickly.

The outward voyage was prosperous, and we had got as far as the Cape of Good Hope, on our return, before we met with any rough weather. At that point, however, we were suddenly set upon by a storm, the like of which in all my experience I had never seen. The fury of the wind and waves was inconceivably awful, and it soon became certain that the ship was doomed. We were drifting rapidly toward the iron-bound coast, which loomed up less than a quarter of a mile on our lee, aud all hope was gone. The horror of that moment defies description. Men who had known no God since they left tbeir mother's knee raved incoherent prayers; others shrieked and blasphemed, aud cast themselves into the sea. A few, myself among them, numbed and frozen by despair, sat sullenly awaiting the end.

I remember tbe fearful shock, thrice repeated; I remember tbe crashing of timbers, louder even than the tempest; I remember the roar of waters above my head as I sank to darkness and to death, aud I remember nothing more until I found myself—a disembodied but supremely conscious nothing—hovering over myself, a bruised and rigid corpse upon the beach. Then it was that a mighty and irresistible longing for life seized upon my spirit, and descending upon my body I strove desperately to enter and reanimate the corpse. But in vain. The shell was cold and stiff and battered, and might never be inhabited again. Close by lay the body of Ruloff Karlson. He had escaped from the rocks and from drowning. He was unconscious, but breathed feebly. Here, then, was a weak and fluttering spirit which I could oust from its temple. Mortal language has no words to describe the struggle which ensued between my spirit and his; but mine was the stronger, and bis fled with a shriek as I entered and took possession.

My strength fails me and I must leave the rest to your imagination. I had life, but what use was it to me. I reached home and stood before my wife, but she knew me not. I spoke to ber, but I dared not declare myself. I kissed her babe, and she wondered at a stranger's love for it. I saw her mourn for my death. I saw her wooed by another and wedded to him. In despair I sought the home of my body in Norway, but I could not speak tbe language and I knew nothing of Karlson's life beyond what he had told me. I could not personate him, and I knew that to tell the truth would mean consignment to a madhouse. For several years I wandered up and down the face of the earth, homeless and an outcast. A curse seemed to follow me. I——there, do you see it now? the shape that darkened the door just then? Oh, God! have mercy————"

Tbe hermit was dead. I did as I had promised and left him.

ARIZONA.

Advices from the Territory contain the information that, at certain points, the welcome rain has made its appearance, and we shall soon be able to record the cessation of the intense heat of the past few months, and a consequent resumption of work and increasing activity in the mining regions. The regular monthly shipments of Silver King concentrations, of $30,000, have reached the city, and a further bullion yield from the Tombstone Company, valued at $30,000, has gone on to Philadelphia the past week. This company is now paying regular dividends of ten cents per share, and the stock is selling freely at $6.75@7 per share.

The Crook ledge, on the East Hassayampa, is attracting considerable attention, and a tunnel is now being run to strike the ledge two hundred and fifty feet from the surface. The pay-streak in the mine is four feet wide, in a hard granite formation, and will mill thirty dollars per ton. The Golden Star mill, on Cave Creek, will be run continuously hereafter on ore from the Rowe mine, and we may soon hear of gold shipments from this favored locality. The Central Company, formerly the Vulture, have their 20-stamp mill in regular running order, and are pounding out $1,000 per day. Several hundred tons of ore are on the dump, and it is being produced faster than the mill can crush it. Forty additional stamps are to be erected at an early day. The Oro Blanco property, in Pima County, has been sold to Eastern capitalists for $180,000 cash, and the money paid over to Hon. J. M. Kirkpatrick, the fortunate owner. The purchasers will at once develop the mine to the fullest extent.

The Dividend mine, in Big-Bug district, is producing very rich ore, and the records of its merits have not been overestimated. The rock assays in gold from $50 to $250 per ton, and in silver from $5 to $21. The Arnold Company, whose property is located in Mohave County, have decided to sink a shaft on their ledge 400 feet, and their prospects are most encouraging. The Boston and Eberhard ledges, on Lynx Creek, are proving themselves valuable properties. They have been tunneled 147 and 156 feet respectively, and the ore seams developed, assay from $553 to $1,500 per ton. The owners have refused an offer of $40,000 for the mines. The Prescott Company, in the same locality, is working satisfactorily, as are several other rich mines, and every prospect looks exceedingly encouraging for the future of this section of Yavapai County.

The Tiger mine has made another shipment of bullion, amounting to $26,000. A Chicago company is negotiating for Beal Springs, intending to erect a 10-stamp mill there. The work of construction on the Corbin mill has commenced. All the properties in the Mineral Park district are looking well. A new Arizona mining company, called the Josephine, has been incorporated in Chicago, and received its license August 18th. The stock of the company is all taken in that city. Twelve tons of the ore from Cox and Copelands mines have worked in the Isabella mill, Globe District, $3,746.16. The owners of the Mexican mine are about to build a twenty-stamp mill. One hundred and ten pounds of silver bullion has been received in this city from the Stonewall mine. Mr. J. W. Haskin has negotiated successfully the sale of his mine in the Eastern States, and a ten-stamp mill is to be erected on the property at once. The Pichacho mill has yielded, in two weeks, from two hundred and seventy tons of ore, bullion, netting $4,200. The ore in the mine is increasing in richness as the shaft is deepened, and the company, doubtless, have a very valuable property. Fuller's mill, in Mojave County, started up on the 17th ult. The Cerbat mill started on the 22d, and the Signal mill on the 29th. The tunnel on the Eureka copper mine, twelve miles from Prescott, is now in nearly 100 feet; the ore assays from 75 per cent. to 80 per cent. copper. The Ajo mines are at work, and the prospects for them are most encouraging. The Railroad mine, in the Castle Dome district, is producing fifteen tons of ore daily. The developments in the Cumberland mine continue to be most satisfactory.

Mr. A. W. Stowe, ex-Gov. A. P. K. Safford, Major M. A. Baldwin, J. H. H. McKee and Col. Lewis, all well posted in Arizona mining matters, are at present in Boston, forwarding the interests of their properties in the Territory. Ex-Gov. McCook, Alex. R. Shepherd, and several other well-known gentlemen, are now in Mexico inspecting the old Spanish silver mines of Chihuahua. The old Batapilas mines were opened a short time ago by Wells, Fargo & Co., the outlay being upward of $500,000, and, it is said, took out ore worth $2,000,000 in fifteen months. Wells, Fargo & Co. have sold their interests in these mines to Gov. McCook and his associates, subject to the inspection now being made.

Gov. Fremont has resumed the reins of power in the Territory. Lieut. Gov. Gosper performed the duties of the office most creditably during the absence of his superior; yet the people, with whom the "Pathfinder" is always highly popular, were very glad to welcome him "home again."

Professor Maynard, one of the experts employed by Gov. Fremont's New York Syndicate, organized for the purpose of buying and developing Arizona mining properties, arrived at Prescott on the 4th instant. This gentleman has been for many years in the employ of the Russian Government, and is also fully conversant with American mines and mining. He will proceed to examine the mines located in Mohave, Pinal and Pima counties, as soon as the other expert, Dr. Einhorn, now on the way, reaches there from San Francisco.

Another very rich discovery of gold-bearing quartz has been made in the Tonto Basin country by Judge Porter. The outcroppings assay $200 per ton.

The product of the mines of Yavapai and Pima counties, for the month of August, netted upwards of $140,000.

The Emmett Mine has just been bonded to ex-Governor Powers, of Mississippi, for sixty days, by Secretary Gosper, for a handsome figure.

All over the United States, Arizona properties are receiving marked attention, and the interest in them is constantly increasing.

General Butler has the character of being the most unscrupulous politician in the United States, but he at least accomplished one good thing in his life. During his command at New Orleans he cleared the city of yellow fever. At present General Butler, in spite of his late intrigue with the Communist agitator, Denis Kearney, is not succeeding very well in Massachusetts; and perhaps the best thing for all parties would be to put him in control of Memphis for a year or two. That unfortunate city is again smitten with yellow fever, and all the inhabitants who can leave have already taken their departure. Trade is at a standstill, and a strict quarantine is maintained by other towns against arrivals from Memphis. Evidently a renewal of the scenes of the last outbreak is looked for. Yet the experience of that terrible time has not taught the people prudence, and Memphis continues to be even more filthy than New Orleans was before General Butler took it in hand.

LET THEM DO IT.

The newspapers are making a great deal of unnecessary fuss over Kearney's idiotic threat to burn General Grant in effigy on the occasion of that distinguished American's arrival in this city. It is absurd to regard such an act, committed by such a thing as the little terrier of the Sandlot, as an insult to Grant. The day is past, if it ever existed, when Kearney and his horde of ignorant whelps can insult any respectable man, much less the greatest of living Americans. If anybody is insulted it is not the ex-President, but the people of San Francisco at large, and in our opinion they will be very foolish if they trouble themselves to resent the affront. It would be giving Kearney and his "chaws" altogether too much importance. Let them burn a hundred thousand effigies of Grant if they want to. The only effect would be to raise him higher, if possible, in the estimation of his fellow citizens. Without doubt there are many convicts at San Quentin who would gladly burn both in effigy and in the flesh the officers who arrested them, the judges who "sent them up," and the jailers who keep them there, but the benevolent wish hurts nobody. For decent people to stir up a row because these unwashed cubs gave a one more convincing proof of their ignorant fanaticism, would be the hight of folly, and would give the city a worse name than it already has. If the Sand-lotters are left to work their own sweet will in this matter, they will do themselves far more harm than anybody else.

NEW YORK STATE CONVENTION.

The New York State Republican Convention which assembled on the 3d instant, was addressed by Vice-President Wheeler and Senator Conkling, with special reference to the next Presidential election. The usual denunciations of the Solid South were indulged in, and a reference to General Grant as the probable nominee was enthusiastically applauded. There can be no doubt that no man in the Republican party now possesses anything approximating Grant's strength, but whether it would be sufficient to overcome the unwritten law against a third term is doubtful. Outside of the erratic Blaine there is no one with a tithe of his popularity. The fight is to be made on a "bloody shirt" platform, which we regard as ominous of the future. If the South succeeds in installing a Democratic President, and the present assertions of Republican leaders are based on fact, then the days of the Union are numbered. This continual harping on the lost cause is demagogical to the lowest degree, and should be reprehended by every patriotic American. It can only lead to another civil war.

A NEW VICEROY OF INDIA.

Late advices from London state that Lord Lytton has resigned his high office of Viceroy of India, and that he will shortly retire in favor of Lord Dufferin, late Governor General of the Dominion of Canada, and at present Ambassador to the Court of St. Petersburg. Lord Dufferin has been, probably, the most uniformly successful British diplomat of our day, and promotion has borne a corresponding ratio to his merit. Earl Beaconsfield's penchant for brilliant men, especially for brilliant literary men, is well known, and it would be difficult to point out a more fitting successor than Lord Dufferin to Lord Lytton. The latter, it is surmised, prefers the flowery paths of literature to the uncongenial tasks of diplomacy or Oriental administration. "Owen Meredith" can well afford to retire upon his laurels, and the "Star of India" will be supplemented by his elevation in the peerage to an earldom. The world of letters will look forward to the fructification of his genius in leisure.

Baldwin Theater.—By reason of their former acts of dramatic piracy Messrs. Herne & Belasco have forfeited their rights to any consideration or belief in their ability as authors. The question that presents itself, whenever one of their "original" plays is produced, is its source. In all their former efforts this has been comparatively easy to discover; but in this last instance they have, so far, succeeded in baffling research. To my mind it is a jumble of everything, with some old English melo-drama as a foundation. The character of "Terry Dennison" is reminiscent of "Enoch Arden," "Rip Van Winkle" and "John Perryhingle." The others of the dramatis personæ have no original peculiarities, but are beings as you find them in the orthodox drama. The hero, "Terry," is a man of singular business versatility, combining the two somewhat antipodal avocations of miller and sailor, this last phase of an over-active life being again sub-divided into fisherman, lighthouse-keeper and Arctic explorer. The introduction of the mill in the play is wholly inexplicable. It is irrelevant and implausible. It has not the slightest tinge of probability, and bears no connection to the plot. The only possible explanation is, that it is brought in for the sake of scenic effect. The motive of the play itself is a noble one. Heroic self-denial is a grand virtue in itself, and something we can all admire—in others. In the ultra practical present such sacrifices are good things to read about. The play is not skillfully arranged; some of the scenes are very strong in dramatic force and intensity, others, on the contrary, weak and flat beyond description. The story is not ingeniously developed. The audience are oft at sea and not en rapport with the idea of the intrigue. The denouement, which can be nothing else but the death of "Terry," is easily foreseen; but by a series of postponements this winding up becomes a matter of uncertainty, and the audience's curiosity and interest is excited. When two or three opportunities are offered magnanimous "Terry" to join the heavenly gang, and he fails to take advantage of the occasion, the auditor begins to think that there is perhaps something new and novel in the way of dramatic culmination in store. But this fervent hope is speedily dispelled, for the curtain finally falls on the expected and anticipated finish. The play could be made stronger and more telling if the knowledge of "Chrystal" and "Ruby's" abnegation came to "Terry" in the fourth act at the wharf scene, without the premonitory incident in the first act of his finding "Ruby's" picture. The motive being a simple one, with no ramifications, there can be but little play of ideas or words, and six acts of the same thoughts and words result in a very natural feeling of tediousness. There is no underplot or comedy features to enliven the monotony of the dialogue, or to light up the darkness of the mental misery portrayed. The home scene in the third act is devoted to this necessary brightening up, but it fails entirely of its purpose. The fun is slightly gross in action and utterly devoid of humor or wit in speech. The dialogue throughout the whole six acts is commonplace and ungrammatical. The resume of all this is that the play is a tedious, unskillfully elaborated arrangement of some good play. The naturalness and plausibility is everywhere sacrificed for the benefit of the scenic artist, the stage carpenter, and also to the peculiar talent of some of the actors. The acting this play receives is far more meritorious than it deserves. Herne, in the leading role, is eminently satisfactory throughout, particularly in the last acts, where he introduces touches of "Rip Van Winkle" business—a character he plays with commendable ability. Mr. Haverstick, having at the last moment wisely determined to postpone for the present his dramatic debut, it was undertaken at short notice by Mr. F. H. Thompson. If it is Mr. Haverstick's determination to appear on the stage professionally, it will be more dignified and advantageous to choose for his debut some legitimate character, or at least one whose requirements are of a nature to be filled by the abilities this gentleman has shown as an amateur. Mr. F. H. Thompson is a young, ambitious actor, who has satisfactorily filled, so far, the different parts assigned on the local stage. On this occasion he is hardly equal to the emergency, although his efforts are praiseworthy. They betoken study and intelligence. At the same time, although the close study of some talented actor's method is commendable, it must not degenerate into a simple imitation; and Mr. Thompson, in this instance, falls into that defect. The characters of "Uncle Davy" and "Owen Garoway" are admirably played by Messrs. Jennings and Bishop. They are original, clean-cut impersonations, reflecting credit upon the two actors. Miss Corcoran plays the ingenue throughout. This will do very well at the commencement, but should give way as the play progresses to a more staid, a deeper, heavier-hearted demeanor. A husband, a lover and a child are three heavy responsibilities upon a woman, and when to this is added an eternal struggle between love and gratitude, inclination and duty, the mind and body are far from the light, cheerful feeling and manner of Miss Corcoran's individuality. Miss Corcoran is a young actress of talent and ability, and, considering her limited stage experience, very clever in every respect. She is essentially an ingenue, and must not attempt emotional characters. It has been remarked before that our child prodigies are many in number and precociously precocious in ability. This is an opinion I do not share in, for to me the eternal tremole of Zoe Tuttle's artificial pathos was enervating and annoying. But little Maud Adams, who will be remembered as appearing in A Celebrated Case, is a remarkable child. She is free from the parrot-like delivery and stilted gestures of most infant actresses. She is as natural as can be wished, or expected. The honors of the strong scene at the base of the monument, in the fifth act, must be conceded to her. The scenery and effects are very remarkable. The coast scene, with its beach, waves and surf, is very effective, and so is the rain-shower, although the water falls in spots and patches. The mill scene is intensely realistic in every respect; it is set with an attention to minutæ that is rarely seen in this city. The rest of the settings are all of the highest standard, although the monument in the graveyard scene rather overshadows the church. Mr. Belasco, who now fills the position of stage manager, is evidently a man of detail—something that is necessary in this position. Mr. Dayton's ideas of stage setting are ingenius and effective, but in actual scene painting he is of a very inferior order of talent. This play will be continued until further notics.

The Quarterly Entertainment of the Western Addition Literary and Social Club will take place at Western Addition Music Hall, California street, near Fillmore, Monday evening, September 15, 1879.

California Theater.—The douhls hill this week has drawn good houses. Both of the pieces on the programme have already been reviewed, so that extended review is unnecessary. Champagne and Oysters is a trifle, without the slightest redeeming trait of either dramatic ingenuity or clever dialogue. In the hands of anyhody hut true comedians, with a large amount of spontaneous fun, it would he insufferably dull and stupid; hut Messrs. Crane and Rohson, through their vivacious drollery, succeed in arousing the risihilities of the audience and keeping it iu good humor. Keene has this week toned down the insanely extravagant manner he assumed in the character of "Thornhuck." This is to he commended, for, as played at first, it was a piece of acting utterly ridiculous in its wild exaggeration. In the Comedy of Errors, the comed'ans this week have alternated their respective parts, and hy this means created a certain amount of extra fun. Our Bachelors was produced last evening, of which uotice is reserved. It is, to my mind, the hest thing in the repertoire of these clever fellows. A revival of Forbidden Fruit would also have been acceptable. On Monday, A. D. 1900 will he played for the first time. It is advertised as a laughable, quizzical absurdity, etc. It is supposed to picture life after the millenium of Woman's Rights has come.

Bush Street Theater.—The new programme of the Minstrels has been given to audiences that filled the theater to its utmost capacity. The success which minstrel performances meet with in this community evidences artistic appreciation of a very low standard, but it is useless to dilate upon the subject from an intelligent or æsthetic point of view, in the face of such overwhelming marks of public taste and favor. The songs are all new this week, but not especially noticeahle hy any novelty or excellency. There is a banjo divertisement, which is novel and pleasing, and a rather funny act hy Charley Reynolds, entitled Magic Exposed. The Cotton Pickers is also very ludicrous. Billy Rice gives one of his inimitable lectures, and Harry Kennedy continues his clever ventriloquial acts. The performance ends with a hurlesque on Pinafore. The principal features are the Moon, Hebs and her gang, and last, hut not least, Billy Rice's "Sweet Little Butter Bowl." As a whole, the hurlesque is very funny and worth seeing. Next week will he the last of this troupe. Their engagement has so far heen a very successful one, something in keeping with Manager Locke's proverhial good fortune.

German Theater.—The production of the Two Orphans, last Sunday, attracted an immeuse audience. Irschick played the part of "Henriette" in an admirable manner. All the resources of her great talent were drawn on, and the result was an impersonation of rare merit. Notwithstanding the powerful impression produced hy the exercise of this lady's wonderful abilities, the honors of the evening must he awarded to Miss Lindermann, whose "Louise" was pathetic in the extreme. This sweet little girl is a young actress of great promise. Her method is true and pure, her manner of speech and gesture heing free from exaggeration and extravagance. She is so fresh and uatural in herself that her mere appearance is a matter of pleasure to the audience. She is an American girl, horn in St. Louis. If this little lady has an eye to pecuniary advancement, she should, by all means, join the American stage. Of the male portion of the cast little can he said in praise. They were all very fair, hut seemed out of their element in the melodrama. Next Sunday Irschick appears in one of her celebrated creations, Grisoldis.

Tivoli Gardens.—H. M. S. Pinafore is now in its tenth week at this popular resort, and has been greeted with crowded houses nightly. Trial by Jury has also kept the audience in a state of jollity as well. The style of having gardens where admirahle music can he had while drinking one's favorite hrand of heer and munching the savory sandwich has for some time been popular in the East, and the present rage in San Francisco seems as though it will continue here. Mr. Samuel Fahian, a genuine Californian, deserves a great deal of credit for the capital manner in which he has trained the singers in Trial by Jury and Pinafore. We understand he has outdone himself in the new piece, composed and written hy Mrs. S. R. Church, a San Francisco lady, entitled The Wreck of the Pinafore. He has trained all the performers and carried to a heginning the whole of the musical part of this opera, which will hs produced with a new and augmented orchestra next week, the Vienna ladies and Mr. Fabian retiring. We believe Mr. Widmer has charge of the new orchestra. If so, it is sure to be a good one.

Chit-Chat.—The daughter of Edwin Booth is a good shot with the rifle.——Because of the Exhihition, the Paris theaters took, in 1878, nine million francs more than in 1875-77. Lucky Paris!——Mary Andersou has added to her repertoire Love; or, the Countess and the Serf.——Out in Colorado it was "hahy-ranching" Little Buttercup practiced when she was young and charming.——Patti is suffering from a severe attack of pharyngitis.——Cornet Levy hands over every penny to madame. "I sail for America soon, if that is what you refer to," replied the famous composer. "Have you ever visited America hefore?" "Never." "What! Never?" "I never have, 'pon my honor." (Exit Olive, remarking: "Why, damme, it's too had.")—— Jennie Lee has not yet worn out "Jo." She is tryiug it again in London. ——Frank Lawlor, whose connection with the California has ceased, will prohably support Booth on his tour.——A satirical London print speaks of Miss Rose Eytinge as being "fat, dark and fifty," at which remark the lady naturally kicks.——Genevieve Ward, whose father (well known in this city) died in New York last week, has made a great success in London in her new play, Forget Me-Not.——Venie Clancy, pretty Venie, is to he married at the end of the season, and will then leave the stage. ——Gus Williams' new play, Our Senator, is likely to be a success.—— Ada Dyas has almost concluded to go to Wallack's. Rose Wood will he juvenile lady there, taking the parts after Miss Dyas.——Gounod has heen taking legal proceedings against the director of the Vienna Opera to recover a royalty upon the performance of Faust.

Pyramus & Thisbe.—Rehearsals of this new comic opera are progressing favorahly and studiously. The first performance has been postponed from the 22d to the 29th inst. This will ensure a more complete performance, giving, as it does, an extra week for all preparations. The costumes, scenery, properties and accessories will he all new, especially gotten up for this production. Manager Locke is sparing no expense to make this production a hrilliant one in every respect; sometbing that will appeal to the culture and refinement of the city. The auditorium is on this occasion to he handsomely decorated.

BOSCOVITZ'S CONCERT. DASHAWAY HALL.

"Intimes" classics, in homeopathic doses, is not a regimen of ponderous efficacy. The insipidity and tastelessness of "Chopin" gruel having proved nauseating enough, Mr. Boscovitz has awakened to a sensibility of some enlightenment, and now perceives that a persistency in its prescription would end in intolerance. In his curious hotch-potch programme for last Monday evening may be found the promiscuous offspring of at least a dozen different composers; but this is not of itself an objectionable feature on the contrary, a variety of tastes may thus be gratified. Beginning with Mozart, Boscovitz follows in the shade of a brilliant renown by a test pound on an improved piano with a kind of performance facetiously called an Improvisation, which really and practically means a kind of nondescript makeshift key-board adventure that has been so often indulged in that it cannot, take it as you may, be played wrong; and, if consistently sound in its construction, which is a very great improbability, it may be passable enough. Then comes a new departure, which may be, though oddly if it is, of a "high class development" order, which is to enlighten us benighted outcasts in this out-of-the-way musically barren wilderness. Mr. B. seems to think that our vulgar Californian natures can be mollified into classic civilization by rough grinding with Hungarian dances, and polishing off with English jigs. This may be a possibility, but without aiming at anything like conceited sufficiency, an improvement might be suggested, more likely to secure the desired result: Why not try the social and national "nigger dance," and the equally captivating Irish jig? A good old-fashioned "Dan Tucker Reel" is something sensible and to be proud of, and, in the whole category of jigs, where is the compeer of "Lary O'Gaff" or the "Sprig of Shillelah." True, it requires a special talent to do either creditably, but as Mr. B. has now availed himself of superior display powers, where there is a genuine desire the task is shorn of many difficulties.

With praiseworthy forethought, Mr. B. has provided against any mishap in Hungarian dance development, by securing the able assistance of Miss Helene Coe, a young lady evidently well grounded in the necessary mechanical antecedents to a refined and commanding display; but with the best and most amiable intentions she may be frustrated in her endeavors to carry mediocrity into popularity. It takes but very little incompetency to blemish high finish, and she can afford to protect herself without seeming unduly selfish.

The contiguity of the sublime and the ridiculous is funnily exemplified in supporting the classicalism of Mozart by the sublimely illustrative grandeur of Hungarian fandangos. Now that "high development" concerts have become what they really are, there is but one step further to go to cap the climax: let Mr. B. and his company join hands and finish off with a grand walk-around!

Wheel about—reel about—just do so,
Every time you turn about jump Jim Crow.

Bah! Are we forever to continue in the light of barbarians to every conceited adventurer from continental Europe, when, in reality, we are abundantly stocked with native-born superiority? The very best general pianist that ever visited California is a genuine American, Frank Gilder; and the very best in the United States, the co-equal of any in the world, is a Britou—Mill.

SPORTING ITEMS.

Pedestrianism.—Messrs. Lawton and McNeil have received $100 entrance money from each of the following gentlemen, entered for the coming six day contest at the Mechanics' Pavilion: A. McLennan, S. J. Meaney, H. McGinn, — Matteson, A. R. Reid, W. H. Scott, J. W. Smith, J. Stewart, J. A. Santos, S. D. Thomson, R. Allen, F. Rosenham, L. Berger, W. M. Blake, J. Bowman, J. Callahan, The California Boy, W. H. Chenewith, J. A. Carmichael, G. Dewey, G. Duplissed, G. E. Dunn, W. L. Evans, L. Francois, J. Fergusson, P. T. Cannon, C. Harmon, K. Hedley, P. McIntyre, F. Lee, F. Merrifield, P. Udin, W. Vance, G. E. Wilcox, H. Wilson, R. Brooks, L. Hart, F. Wagner, A. Green and "F. C."——The unprecedented number of entries and assured success of Lawton and McNeil's pedestrian tournament is, no doubt, due to the fact that their character and position are a guarantee that there will be a fair field to all and the best man will win.——Several ladies are already entered for the female contest to follow the men's walk.——At Platt's Hall, Thursday, Steve Brodie, the New York newsboy, ran five miles in 36½ minutes, while exercising for his 75 hour "go as you please" exhibition. The six-day walking match at Platt's Hall, between Von Berg and La Chapelle, is now on. A large number of people visit the place night and day. La Chapelle at present leads, and, no doubt, will keep her position till the end. Brodie, the New York news boy, is also on the track, in his seventy-five hours, go-as-you-please.

Shooting.—Gerber defeated Randall in the contest for the cup, at Folsom, last Saturday. Score, 24 to 22. After the shoot for the cup, pools were shot for, Frank Maskey being the winner, with a clean score of 20 and another of 15.——Prizes for the pigeon shooting tournament at the Sacramento Fair were awarded as follows: First, $150, C. Robinson; second, $100, W. E. Gerber; third, $90, F. Maskey; fourth, $80, O. D. Brown; fifth and sixth, $75 and $70, were divided by Kane and F. Bassford; seventh, $65, H. Bassford; ninth, $50, W. B. Hamilton; tenth, $45, F. M. Benson; eleventh, $40, G. Routier; twelfth and thirteenth, $35 and $30, divided by A. Cook and J. D. Bailey.——We extract the following from a communication from Messrs. Paine and Beckwith, of whom we spoke a few weeks ago as having leased part of the Suisun marshes:

ON BOARD HUNTING YACHT "WAVE," September 10th.

We are the pioneer hunters here, having been on this ground for the last twenty-three years, long before any one thought of "taking it up," and hunted unmolested for years. After a while others began to come in, and we had to divide with them. And still they came, and we divided again, and kept dividing until nothing was left, when finally parties who had recently come were going to lease it over our heads and turn us out altogether. So we acted in self-defense and leased it ourselves. The property that we have leased is called the "Chamberlain Tract." It contains about 4,800 acres, and is comparatively only a small portion of the Suisun marshes. The northern boundary is six miles below Bridgeport by water, and extends from the Cordelia to Suisun slough, and only a small portion is good hunting ground. We have re-let to other hunters all but a few ponds in the immediate vicinity of where we lay with the yacht, as we have no desire to monopolize anything. We are poor men and want a chance to make a living, and have invoked what protection the law will give us. That is all. The public must be our judges. * * P. & B.

——Quail season begins Monday next, September 15th.——Sportsmen whose business will not allow of a long absence from the city will find the following places easy of access and well stocked with game: At Searsville, about seven miles from Redwood City, S. P. R. R., quail are very abundant; also all along the road between these places. From Ross Landing on the N. P. C. R. R., two miles from San Rafael, all along the road and in every gulch to the Laguanitos on Tamalpais mountain. At Butterfield's, just opposite and east of Fairfax Station, three miles from San Rafael, berys in every gulch. From Taylorville to Olima, on the N. P. C. R. R., easy hunting and quail in any quantity. From Nicasio to Petaluma, quail in thousands, and a great many hares; take S. F. & N. P. R. R. In Sonoma county quail are so thick in the various vineyards and destroy so many grapes that the owners are glad to give permission to hunters to shoot them. There are any quantity of quail at Novato, S. F. & N. P. R. R.; permission must be had of Sweetzer & De Long. Every gulch on the Saucelito Rancho has large bevys of quail; permission must be had of S. R. Throckmorton or E. B. Gould.

Swimming.—The tournament at Alameda, under the auspices of the Neptune Club, commences at 2 P.M. to-day. Our anticipations that great interest would be taken in it are verified by the unusually large number of entries for all the contests except the professional race. We think this will be the finest amateur exhibition of swimming and diving ever given in America. The prizes cost over $220. Following is a list of contestants: 1. Swimming race for amateurs; prize, a handsome gold medal: John Spring, Mr. M. E. Harris, Solon H. Williams, Kenneth Melrose, R. B. Cunningham, J. J. Searle, E. B. Deane and Joseph Taylor. 2. Swimming race for boys under 16 years; prize, gold medal: John Stoddard, R. Nickerson, C. Searle, G. M. Tyler, J. Dermody, S. Lafferty and E. E. Webb. 3. Fancy diving; prize, gold medal (amateurs): J. Hammersmith and Geo. Dall. 4. Swimming race for amateurs who have never won a prize; prize, gold medal: K. Melrose, K. Catton, R. B. Cunningham, H. Morse, W. Alexander, C. Bock, A. T. Field, G. M. Tyler, H. Frank, A. Hull and W. E. Dinan. 5. Swimming race for professionals, for a prize of $50, for not less than three entries. Entries at noon yesterday: Berg and Fleming, with understanding that they will start anyhow. 6. Diving match for amateurs; prize, gold medal: J. Taylor, J. Adams, C. Dall, J. J. Searle, R. B. Cunningham, G. Dall.——Daily is at Coney Island. He expects to make a match with either Webb or Boynton, and is confident of beating them.

Yachting.—The model yacht race last Saturday, on Oakland Creek, was won by E. A. Fields' Iona, E. Johnson's Lizzie second.——The outside race of the S. F. Yacht Club on Admission Day brought out seven starters—Mr. Guttes (no name), Clara, Chispa, Consuelo, Frolic, Lively and Emerald. The no name won handsomely. Time, 1h. 41m. 10s., followed by the Clara and Frolic. The course was from Meiggs' Wharf to the seven-fathom buoy.——At the annual election of the Pacific Yacht Club the following gentlemen were elected: R. S. Floyd, Commodore; J. McDonough, Vice-Commodore; J. C. Kelly, Treasurer; Stewart Menzies, C. O'Connor, J. C. Kelly, E. O. Blethen, M. H. Martenstein, J. C. Tucker and H. C. Langley, Directors. The excursion round the bay, and the ball and entertainment at the Club House were a great success. Three hundred sat down to dinner. The Aerial showed great speed before the wind, but lacked stiffness, going close hauled.

Fishing.—Salt water fishing is the only kind worth anything at present. The best places are as follows: Just beyond Fort Point, from the rocks, quantities of perch, blue and red cod. Sea trout (quite game) are caught. These fish are all very large. It is advisable to use a float, fishing among the rocks; also a very strong line. Low tide is best. Good fishing can be had off Angel Island, opposite Saucelito; also around the hills on the beach south of Sancelito. In Bolinas Bay the salt water fishing is also immense.——Trout are not biting well in any of the lakes now, although Dr. Jessup caught the biggest real trout (hook-nosed, spotted and square-tail), in Lake Merced last Sunday yet hauled. He weighed 6½ pounds.——Salmon are peddled on the streets, in spite of the closed season.

Rowing.—The additional time given for practice by postponing the St. George and Columbia Regatta, is being used to the utmost advantage by the crews. The Pioneer Club are perhaps the most regular in practice, most of their crews being out every day.——Tom Hoare, an ex-champion of England, is dead.——Trickett has signified his intention to accept Hanlon's challenge to row for $2,000 a side, but refused to allow anything for expenses. There is, however, good prospect of a race being made.——Hanlon will most likely row Courtenay, at Chatauqua Lake, before he visits Australia.

Boxing.—The manly art is becoming very popular in San Francisco, and the number of gentlemen who put the gloves on, and the proficiency of our athletic clubs, prove that it is the correct thing. Among professionals there seems at present no desire to find out who is the best man, but a match between Hogan and Haggerty may be looked for as soon as the former returns from China.——The new style of glove made by Fred. Bushy, of 412 Market street, is coming into general use. It is considered a much greater protection than the ordinary glove.

Baseball.—The game between the California and Athletic Clubs, at Oakland, last Sunday, was closely contested and marked by fine play on both sides. The former club won; score, 5 to 3.——Games next Sunday: At Oakland—Athletics vs. Oaklands; at the Recreation Grounds—Omahas vs. Knickerbockers.——The Chicago Club, who will most likely win the League championship, are expected here in October. They will play at different towns along the railroad on their way out.

Archery.—The Archery Tournament at the State Fair is showing the remarkable proficiency of our California toxopholites. The Pacific Club made the best score in the club shooting, 1,437; Eureka, 1,031; Capital Bow, 916. F. C. Havens, of the Pacific Club, made the highest individual score on record in America, 527—beating W. H. Thompson's score, made at the Chicago Tournament, by 63.

Bicycling.—Keen and Edlin rode a ten-mile race at Leicester. Keen won by six yards—time, 33 m. 21 sec.; five mile time, 15 m. 8 sec.——Our local club has some good riders and fine machines, but do nothing but road work. A bicycle race would be a great novelty here, and we think could be got up easily if some lover of the sport would offer a suitable prize.

SEPTEMBER.

The golden rod is yellow;
The corn is turning brown:
The trees in apple orchards
With fruit are bending down.

The gentian's bluest fringes
Are curling in the sun;
In dusty pods the milkweed
Its hidden silk has spun.

The sedges flaunt their harvest
In every meadow nook;
And asters by the brook-side
Make asters in the brook.

From dewy lanes at morning
The grapes' sweet odors rise;
At noon the roads all flutter
With yellow butterflies.

By all these lovely tokens
September days are here,
With summer's best of weather,
And Autumn's best of cheer.

But none of all this beauty
Which floods the earth and air,
Is unto me the secret
Which makes September fair.

'Tis a thing which I remember;
To name it thrills me yet;
One day of one September
I never can forget.

—H. H., in Scribner for September.

SHALL WE PROTECT OURSELVES AGAINST ENTERPRISE AND PROGRESS?

The whole principles on which modern political and social life is based in the United States are those of complete freedom and justice to all, and if our country shows to-day the most conspicuous example in the world of a fettered foreign commerce, still the internal trade of the country is absolutely free. Notwithstanding occasionally such backslidings as those of the United States and Germany toward temporary protective duties, still, just as the battle of personal freedom has been achieved in the chief civilized countries after numerous fierce struggles on the battle field, in the halls of legislation, on the platform and in the press, so is the battle of the liberty of purchase and sale in the most advantageous markets for each individual now being fought out in various countries of the world. In England particularly the battle of freedom of purchase and sale by each individual has been fought out with the most satisfactory results, and, during the last forty years, the development of internal industry and of foreign commerce has been enormous, and the bold and sanguine movements of British capital in all parts of the world have been altogether unprecedented. This unfettered freedom and fair field to all has given an immense impetus to British energy and enterprise, and made the Britisher, in spite of his insular origin, his strong prejudices and his aristocratic institutions, the most cosmopolitan person in the world next to the American.

In the United States, however, where the field for enterprise and the opportunities for making fortunes are altogether unrivaled, we have circumscribed the field for purchase and sale; and having set this example of dictating to ourselves and our neighbors that we shall not purchase where we think best, or at the price which is lowest, just as if we might dictate that no American shall go to the Roman Catholic church, we are now in danger of this antiquated patriarchal system being applied to all classes of enterprises. The Sand Lot orator argues that, if Congress can decide that a farmer shall pay a tax of 50 to 100 per cent. on the clothes he wears, or on the machinery he uses, without any compensating bounty being received for his wheat, why should not a Railway or a Water Company, or a Mine, pay 30 or 40 per cent. of its earnings for the benefit of the community at large? It is difficult to draw a line between these two classes of propositions, because both of them are arbitrary forms of enormous taxation, punishing the individual and not taking merely his individual share of the taxation of the country. It is confiscation pure and simple, when it reaches such large dimensions and is levied so unequally. But in a country where every private interest fights for special legislative benefits, and the principle of unrestricted purchase and sale has been long ago lost sight of in the greed of individuals, there is no respect either for the just rights of property or for the proprietary rights of the individual. The free American counts it his proud prerogative to deposit a slip of paper, with a few names printed on it, in a ballot-box, once a year or oftener, and he proclaims his country by that act the freest in the world, and pities the effete monarchies of Europe. But when he crosses the street from the ballot-box to purchase a suit of clothes, or a piece of silk, or some agricultural machinery, he finds he cannot buy these articles at their actual cost, but must pay a tax of from 40 to 100 per cent. to some manufacturers in Connecticut or New Jersey. Smarting under this restriction on his freedom of purchase, he looks round to see if there are not some paying institutions or corporations on which he can help to levy 30 or 40 per cent. for the general benefit, and accordingly there is kept up a perpetual warfare against the rights of property and of individual wealth which restricts industry, diminishes the demand for labor, and makes insecure the wealth which men have laboriously built up by perseverance, intelligence, economy and good judgment. The motto of this section of Americans is, "tails we win; heads you lose." If enterprising men will spend their capital, time and energies in large undertakings and lose their all, this class of envious Americans are perfectly satisfied; but if these enterprising men succeed in developing and building up a valuable property, then the same class proclaim that large enterprises and wealthy men are hostile to the spirit of republicanism, and immediately set about to see how they can form a party of political wire-pullers to confiscate part of the property thus worthily acquired. We maintain that this buccaneering spirit at work in these days and in the Republic of the United States to hamper enterprise and confiscate individual wealth, is infinitely more oppressive and indefensible than were the levies of the robbing barons of the Rhine, and the sooner we return to the true principles of freedom and justice, with all citizens amenable to just laws, but not in danger of confiscation by special legislation, the better will it be for the welfare and prosperity of Americans and for the reputation of the nation. Enterprise and progress must have a free and unrestricted field.

She sang soprano sweetly—
Her voice was like a lyre;
But on Sunday she ate onions,
And thus busted up the choir.

THE DAY BOOK
FROM
Saturday to Saturday.

Simla, September 6th. At a late hour Thursday night a messenger traveling post haste reached Alikneyl from Cabul, and informed Major Connolly, the British political agent, that the British Embassy at Cabul had been attacked by several Afghan regiments, and that the military escort of the Embassy were defending themselves. The Viceroy of India ordered the troops at Alikneyl to move upon the Shutargarden Pass. General Roberts has been ordered to advance on Cabul, while General Stewart is ordered to hold Candahar and concentrate at Candaba. The forces in the Khyber Pass are being strongly reinforced and will operate on Jellalabad. Major Connolly telegraphed Friday night the substance of a letter received from the Ameer of Afghanistan, who confirmed the news of the revolt, and adds that the regiments which have mutinied were joined by the populace. The Ameer's arsenal and stores were first plundered and destroyed, and the British Embassy was then attacked by overwhelming numbers.——CHICAGO, September 6th.—Speaking of the growth of the California salmon industry, the Tribune says: N. K. Fairbanks, of Chicago, is now experimenting with them at Geneva Lake, and believes that, properly started, they will live and thrive in fresh water as well as salt water. If the result shall demonstrate the correctness of his theory, he proposes to stock Lake Michigan.——VICTORIA, September 6th. H. M. S. Rocket, with the Imperial Commissioners on board, has returned from Barclay Sound, where a critical examination for defensive purposes was made.——Arrangements have been made to open the marble quarries on Taxada Island. Wharves will be erected for shipping.——ST. PETERSBURG, September 7th.—Eighty-four young persons sentenced to hard labor and deportation to Siberia for political offences, have left Moscow under armed escort.——PARIS, September 7th.—Arnado de Noe, better known as "Cham," the caricaturist, is dead. He was born in Paris on January 26th, 1816.——LONDON, September 7th.—A correspondent at Bombay asserts that symptoms of discontent have been noticed at Cabul for some time. The bearing of the population toward members of the Embassy has been defiant. The force defending the Embassy numbered seventy-nine. They fought with the greatest bravery. It is said that the Ameer's son is fatally injured. A large number of mutineers were killed. After the buildings of the Embassy were fired, the survivors sallied out and defended themselves desperately, but all were killed, including Major Cavagnari. Intense excitement prevails throughout India. It is believed at Paris and Vienna that the outrage is due to Russian intrigue.——LONDON, September 8th.—A Calcutta dispatch reports that the disturbances at Badakshan were not serious. Affairs at Herat are unsettled. The Khrum Valley is infested with robbers. Trade by Shutargarden Pass has been stopped. The force ordered to leave Candahar on the 8th of September has been instructed to remain, and the city has been re-occupied.——LONDON, September 7th.—A dispatch from Prome says the massacres in Mandalay continue. Diplomatic intercourse between the Burmese Court and the British has virtually ceased. The Cabul outbreak will probably encourage King Thebau to create an open rupture with England. The Rumpa rebellion will be stamped out in a few weeks.——BOMBAY, September 8th.—Orders have been given for collection of transportation. The Punjaub is being scoured for camels. The Khyber column is not expected to advance at present, as all available means of transportation will be sent to the Kurum force. The Insurgents have sent messengers to all the tribes, calling on the whole country to rise in arms. It is believed that a Heratese regiment has left Cabul for Kerat, to induce that city to join in the revolt.——LONDON, September 8th.—A Simla dispatch says: Grave fears are entertained that the Ameer has joined the insurgents to save himself.——BERLIN, September 8th.—Owing to persecutions by the Government the number of students in Russian universities is rapidly decreasing. Harvest prospects in Russia are unfavorable.——BRUSSELS, September 8th.—The Institute of International Law, now in session here, has voted in favor of a resolution recommending that the various States agree that the destruction or injury of a submarine telegraph cable is an offense against the law of nations.——MADRID, September 8th.—Canovas del Castillo has been charged with the mission of officially asking the hand of Archduchess Marie Christine of Austria in marriage with King Alphonso.——The report that 20,000 troops would be sent to Cuba is contradicted. The Government will only replace troops whose term of service in Cuba has expired.——FALL RIVER, September 9th.—The spinners to-night issued a second appeal to the workingmen of America for aid.——LOUISVILLE, September 9th.—The strike of the molders was inaugurated at the Ohio Falls Car Works, at Jeffersonville, this morning. At present only the freight department of the extensive establishment is involved. The strikers demand that wages be increased from $2 to $2 50 a day.——LONDON, September 9th.—The leaders of the Ashton Trades Union fear they will be unable to prevent a strike, as the mill bands believe it would be beneficial in reducing production, even if it did not prevent a reduction of wages.——At a meeting of the shareholders of the Union Spinning Mills, at Oldham, running 900,000 spindles, a suggestion to run on short time, or to stop the Oldham Mills entirely, so as to bring pressure to bear on the Liverpool cotton market, seemed to meet with great approval.——GLASGOW, September 9th.—It is estimated that 3,000 people are still out of employment here. The iron trades only are doing well. Building trades are in the worst condition, and it will be necessary again to make provision to assist the unemployed the coming winter.——SAN FRANCISCO, September 10th.—The schooner General Harney, which arrived at Honolulu August 31st, brings the following news from the Arctic whaling fleet, up to August 1st: The bark Helen Mar had 7 whales; bark Eliza, 2 whales; bark Thomas Pope, 6 whales; bark Norman, 2 whales; bark Hunter, 5 whales; bark Sea Breeze, 3 whales; bark Progress, 3 whales; bark John Howland, 5 whales; bark Northern Light, 1 whale; bark Abram Barker, 5 whales; bark Alaska, 1 whale; bark Rainbow, 5 whales; bark Coral, 4 whales; bark Dawn, 1 whale; schooner C. M. Ward, 1,000 pounds whalebone, 1,200 pounds walrus bone; Hawaiian schooner Giovanni Apiani, 400 pounds whalebone, 1,600 pounds walrus bone.——PARIS, September 9th.—The Bulletin des Halles says: The first threshings in the west and northwest of France show a very poor yield, both in quality and quantity. Though France will not have to purchase so largely as last year, she will require fifteen to twenty million hectolitres, and must buy it almost exclusively in America in competition with England.——LONDON, September 9th. It is said the cereal harvest in King's County, Ireland, has been virtually lost in consequence of heavy rains and floods, which began Saturday last. There are also very bad reports from County Down with regard to the crops.——Belgium, Holland, Italy and Spain will be buyers of food in America, as well as England and France.——ASHTON-UNDER-TYNE, September 9th. One of the greatest struggles ever known in the cotton trade here will probably be entered upon by the end of this week. Employers decline to withdraw their notice of five per cent. reduction of wages, and the spinners and weavers are determined to resist the reduction. If a strike ensue, nearly all the working people in Ashton District will be involved, and the strike will probably be protracted, as the Spinners' Union is amply provided with funds.

THE FUTURE OF RAILROAD POLITICS.

To thoughtful men it has always seemed a misfortune that the question of fares and freights should he made a subject of political contest. It was an evil in many ways. It was demoralizing to political parties, hurtful to individual voters, and harassing to the transportation companies. It gave political charlatans an opportunity, of which they were not slow to avail themselves, to blackmail the railroads into buying them off; their price had often to he paid in the shape of assistance to political advancement, and thus one evil hegat another. Nor could it he expected that these raids would always he sternly resisted. The trustees of a vast property were forced to a choice hetween evils; they had to aid the politicians in order that the value of railroad property might not he ruthlessly legislated away. The had principle having unfortunately become established, that local Legislatures might do pretty well as they pleased with railroad property, it was in the nature of things that the railroads would seek to protect themselves. Self-preservation is the first law of nature. Capital had to take care of itself, and proved itself ahundantly ahle to do that, as it always has and always will. But considerahle demoralization was undouhtedly the result. Both the old political parties were very ready to strengthen themselves hy railroad support, aud the new party has not heen a whit hehind its predecessors in that respect. The sooner that condition of things passes away, the hetter it will he for all political parties. The railroad taken out of politics will he a great advantage all round. It will relieve railroad men of their greatest lahor and worry, and leave them free to increase transportation facilities. It has heen said that the anxiety and lahor involved in protecting the railroads from confiscatory legislation has far exceeded the auxiety and lahor which sufficed to huild them. This state of things may well he put an end to. We think the time has come for putting and end to it. We think, too, that the means for ending it have heen provided. If the newly elected Railroad Commissioners discharge their duties in fairness, and in ths spirit of the Constitution that has clothed them with the most extraordinary powers ever conferred upon mortal men, we think they may formulate a tahle of fares and freights that may he accepted as reasonahle hy hoth the railroads and their customers, and that, as a result, the railroad may thereafter hid adieu to political management. The Constitution provides for the fullest inquiry. It gives the Commissioners all the powers necessary for that purpose; they are to call for persons and papers, examine hooks of accounts, and cause witnesses to testify, and may punish for contempt. After full investigation, they are to find a judicial judgment on the very large question that has heen suhmitted to them. They are not themselves experts, and therefore they will necessarily have to depend very much upon the testimony of those who are. It will he their business to take into consideration a numher of exceedingly complex problems. It will he their duty to master a most difficult subject that may well oppress them with a sense of grave responsihility. There are men fully their equals in point of natural ahility, who have heen engaged in railroad management most of their lives, who would yet shrink from the performance of such a task as that now imposed upon the popularly-elected Commissioners. This, at least, shows that the inquiry, preliminary to preparing a tariff of fares and freights, must he made as thorough and as exhaustive as possihle. There can be no jumping at conclusions if the suhject is to he fairly and honestly dealt with. That the framers of the Constitutiou intended that it should he so dealt with is evident from the carefulness with which they provided the necessary machinery for instituting a full inquiry. The Gorham and Cohen methods of making reductions to please private malice, and in violation of public justice, will not, we are persuaded, he listened to for a single moment. Bids for popular votes should find no place in the settlement of so important a question. Gorham offered a reduction of twenty-five per cent; Cohen went further, and offered thirty-three and one-third per cent. The people accepted neither hid. They chose Commissioners who personally had hound themselves to no such pledges. Messrs. Cone, Stoneman and Beerstecher are free to decide this high judicial case according to the testimony, with justice toward the public on the one hand, and without prejudice toward the Railroad Company on the other. The question heing approached and determined in this spirit, the result cannot hut he a desirable one in many ways. A record will he made which will serve to educate the people to a better understanding of the railroad question than that which they have acquired from the false figures of Cohen, or the heated harangues of Gorham. Above all, the settlement of the question upon a fair basis will take the railroad out of politics, to the great satisfaction of its managers, and to the advantage of party politics, and to the great good of the people generally. This, we know, is a great deal to expect. Our fear is, that the trading politicians may prove strong enough to defeat so desirahle a consummation. Thoughtful men, however, will do well to lend their influence to heat the politicians in this.

HONOR TO WHOM HONOR IS DUE.

The election being over, it is proper to give honor to whom honor is due. The Republicans have won substantial victories in hoth the city and State. The campaign, on their part, was most admirahly managed in all its details. The headquarters in this city was for weeks a scene of downright hard work. Few persons, unacquainted with the facts, would imagine all that is involved in the skillful manipulations of all the elements of success that enter into a great contest such as that which has just heen passed through. Arrangements have to he made for the conduct of primaries, for the meeting of nominating conventions, for ths employment and proper distrihution of speakers, for the hiring of halls, for the answering of an immense country correspondence, for resisting the assaults of the opposition, and for a thousand and one other things which it is needless to enumerate. Every day unlooked for emergencies arise, which have to he promptly met. Every possihle point of attack must he carefully watched. The whole State, and every corner in it, need to he under vigilant surveillance. There must he a good understanding of the weakness as well as well of of the strength of your own forces, and your opponents must he equally well understood. The manager of such a campaign must ever he on the alert, with a keen eye along the whole line, ready to do the right thing at the right time and in the right way. It is only doing honor to whom honor is due to say that, in Marcus D. Boruck, the Republicans had a secretary who filled the hill, as manager, with the highest degree of efficiency. To his clear judgment and never-tiring industry the successful issue of the campaign is largely due. He deserves well of his party.

BACK TO CABUL.

Hark! the trumpet calls to arms—
Every note a wail of pain;
And the veteran, hattle-worn,
Turns him to his task again.

Withered, if he failed to turn,
Were the hays that wreathe his hrow,
Worthless were his victories won
If he rested from them now.

For the peace that he hath earned
Is hy treachery o'erthrown,
And the hlood on England's shield
Can he washed with blood alone.

Lo! her sons lie cold in death,
Murdered with a Judas-kiss;
Naught hut ruthless sword and torch
Can avenge a wrong like this.

Scant the news from far Cahul;
But, what matter? This we know:
That they died as Britous should,
With their faces to the foe;

That they scorned to ask for grace,
Placing in their swords their trust;
That for every Englishman
Twenty Afghans hit the dust.

But a vengeance, swift and sure,
Soon shall waste the traitors' land;
They have done this thing hefore,
Leave them to old England's hand.

Generous is the Lion's wrath
When he meets a nohle foe,
But no mercy even he
On the traitor will hestow.

THE RIGHT POLICY TO PURSUE.

After the first flush of victory is over a calm and critical examination of the field shows hut little reason for undue exultation. True, we have secured a good State administration, the Boards of Supervisors and Education, and the Board of Equalization, hut the complexion of the Legislature is far from reassuring, and unless the Republicans make it an object for the Democrats to unite with them, the Grangers and Workingmen will practically control that hody. Had a combination heen effected three months ago upon the conservative hasis then indicated hy the NEWS LETTER, the present aspect of affairs would have heen vastly improved, and we should have carried the entire State and city to the complete discomfiture of the Sand-lotters. We merely advert to this unaccepted counsel in order to point the moral of what we now advise. It is this: Let the Republicans and Democrats elected to the Legislature unite their forces without fail before that body meets; it will be too late afterwards. Overtures to that effect will come with grace from the stronger side, and the Democrats are now in a frame of mind to accept them, hecause their party is and must remain a cypher in California politics until the Workingmen's party shall have heen dishanded. There is at present no sign thereof—on the contrary, that party has elected the Supreme and a majority of the Superior Judges, a majority of the Railroad Commission, and the chief executive officers of San Francisco. It is idle to deny that, considering the elements opposed to them, they have succeeded heyond the expectation of dispassionate observers. To use a short phrase, "they have drawn hlood," and having polled a larger vote, especially in this city, than the Democracy, the latter—what remains of it—will gravitate toward ths W. P. C. as the avenue to office in the future. In reality there has heen merely a change in name and leaders—nothing more. Hence, we repeat, now is the time for Republicans to ahsorh the fragment remaining of the "grand old party," else, as sure as fate, it will he gathered into the Workingmen's and Grangers' fold, and the contest he interminahly prolonged. It is useless to enlarge upon such patent facts. Unless the Republican leaders are hlind, they will not permit the "hig head" of victory to overrule these views of sound policy. If a desire to monopolize all the loaves and fishes causes a rejection of the possihle alliance here outlined, the sequel will prove that present victors had less regard for the public welfare than for the spoils of office.

BEGINNING TO FLOP.

The "Chronicle" magnanimously announces its intention to accept Perkins for Governor, now that he has heen duly elected; hut ominously declares that it will keep a watchful eye upon his future conduct. In other words, if Perkins hehaves himself to suit the Chronicle, that sheet will allow him to retain his office, but if he diverges a hair's hreadth from the Chronicle's ideas as to the correct thing (and very nice ideas they are), there will he a call for "more mud" in the live paper's editorial-room. Next to Kearney's threat against Grant's effigy, this is the cheekiest thing of the season. What are we to suppose would have happened if ths Chronicle had not seen fit to "accept" Perkins for Governor? Would it have heen under the painful necessity of annulling the election? And what do the De Youngs propose to do to Perkins if his official conduct fails to please them? Every word of ahuss which they hurled at his head during the recent campaign seems to have given him an additional vote. On the same principle, if the Chronicle would only speak ill enough of him while in office, he might run the State to the devil with everyhody's consent and approhation. It looks to us very much as if the paper in question is crawling over to the winning side, and in our opinion Perkins will find it very difficult to do anything which will seem wrong in its eyes. It would never do for some people to he on had terms with the official who has the power of pardoning vested in his hands.

Five Children at One Birth.—The Cologne Gazette reports from Kettwig that a woman there has just had five children, four hoys and one girl, at a hirth. They only lived a few hours. Though very small, they were well-formed. The mother is recoveriug rapidly.

Boots: "Eight o'clock, surr!" Voice (from the deeps): "Why didn't ye till me that hefore, confound you!"

THE TOWN CRIER.

"Hear the Crier!" "What the devil art thou?
"One that will play the devil, sir, with you."

"He'd a sting in his tail as long as a flail,
Which made him grow bolder and bolder."

Mr. Kiddle, ex-Superintendent of the New York City Public Schools, is making a fight for his place, and seems to have the Board of Education in a tight place. He resigned, he says, because the commotion raised by his book of communications from deceased worthies, such as Franklin, H. J. Raymond, Moses, Shakespeare, Pontius Pilate and Pius the Ninth, was too strong to be resisted; but now he comes forward as a candidate for the position, and he is backed by the teachers. His religious belief is the only thing against him, and the Constitution protects him in that. What is the Board to do? Mr. Kiddle's belief is driveling idiocy, if judged by the book he has written; but he has a right to be idiotic in religion, and it is not denied that he has made an excellent Superintendent of Schools, and is still allowed by his friends to go at large. The indications are that he will go back to his old place, and why should he not? "There was a God yesterday," said the converted Turk, "but I eat him, and to-day there is none." Who is to decide, when it comes to a discussion of religious absurdities?

People had a happy time fifty or sixty years ago. There is a Congregational Jubilee at Westhampton, Mass., and Dr. Clarke has been giving his recollections of the fine old days when there were prayer meetings, four hours long, of a Summer afternoon, and single prayers of an hour's duration. "I used to get tired out," he says, "by these long prayers, but I must record my deep conviction that those holy veterans had power with God." Not a doubt of it. Not even Almighty power could stand such prayers, and the Congregationalists have been living in the darkness ever since. After all, they care nothing for that, for they have the Westminster Confession of Faith, which is the "closest approximation to absolute truth which it is possible for human sagacity and human wisdom to make." Perhaps the most pleasant sight in the world, next to a clean Dennis Kearney, or a two-eyed Ben. Butler, would be Dr. Clarke and spiritualist Kiddle pulling each other's hair, in the presence of Professor Tyndall.

The Scotch Highlanders were always a picturesque race, without breeches—a kind of British sans-culottes—and some of their customs, if queer, were none the less practical. Their habit of sticking their dirks into the table at dinner time, in order to be ready for any little argument, was an extremely pleasant one, and its disappearance is to be regretted. Wild as the Highlanders were, they were kindly and courteous, and it would be an improvement in our modern life to introduce their old forms. Dirks, to be sure, are out of fashion, but there is no reason why we should not have our revolvers alongside the plates at dinner. As things are now, a man is afraid to say "Good morning" on a foggy day, for fear of a negative answer and a half-ounce ball in the diaphragm; but if his own pistol were to the fore, he might be able to make his assertion good. What California society needs this day is a pervading six-shooter; and guests should be provided with arms, as with coffee-cups, at every first-class hotel.

An eminent and justly-respected divine of this city has a fine property at Oakland, with an orchard in full bearing. A friend remarked that much of the fruit lay rotting on the ground, and suggested that it might be well to allow some of the poor in the neighborhood to supply themselves, rather than have the fruit go to waste. "Oh," said the reverend proprietor, "it is not wasted; it makes capital manure for the soil." Some persons thought this very dreadful for a clergyman; but is it not true? And why should not a clergyman know a little about fruit-raising? Moreover, the clerical mind is accustomed to the theological argument, and Dr. ——— clearly saw no difference whatever between manuring directly with the fruit itself, and manuring with the bodies of the poor, after the fruit had passed into them. Scientifically, he was wrong; but one must approve him as a theologian.

The reign of the cowardly little blatherskite is nearly over. The hour of the peripatetic mendicant, who boasts that he has hegged his way over our fair State in order to make it hideous with his blasphemous rantings, has come. Even the besotted rabble that for two years has cheered the filth which rolled from his poisonous tongue is dumb, and the bray of the belated asses who have played second fiddle to the pricked wind-bag, is hushed. In insulting the ex-President of the United States, the scab on the skin of our body politic was badly injured; but the wound which Denis Kearney has inflicted on California is not a mortal one, and when it is healed and business resumes its former activity, the dirty little drayman will be forgotten like one of yesterday's flea-bites, and duly relegated to the obscurity of the wharves and the purlieus of the city-front.

For once a parson has come out in his true light and significance; that parson is the perforated Mr. Kalloch. In his person he has proved that the pulpit may be a place where as much worship is accorded to the Devil as to God, with a slight balance in favor of the former; a place from whose superstitious hight a little eloquence, a free use of truisms and an unlimited supply of cheek can command votes, pick pockets, injure reputations, seduce virtue and save souls. Beecher used to be the boss expounder of this theory, but certainly, from a local point of view, Kalloch is away ahead. Any doubting Thomas, surnamed Didimus, may put his finger in the wound of this political follower of the meek and lowly.

Sweltering citizens, who have ruined themselves, the past few days, in iced lemonade (with a stick in it), sherry cobblers and other quenchers of the fiery heat, have been at their wit's end to know where the hot weather came from. It means Gen. Grant, and it came from the address issued by the Veterans: "The great national heart of America throbs in sympathy, and now grows warmer at his approach." There is yet a week before us, and time to be dissolved in tears—or perspiration. Poor Grant! Poor national heart!

Three white boys set upon a small Chinese, on Thursday, and made him an object. This, says the Animal's Friend, is the result of Sand-lot harangues. True enough. A missionary, last week, in Oregon, deserted his wife and family and ran away with an Indian girl. This, we say, is the result of evangelizing the heathen, and not such a bad result for Mrs. Missionary.

Much has been said of General Grant's great qualities, his genius, and patriotism, and endurance, and wisdom, and even his independence in the matter of the spelling of the word "Chicago;" but no one has yet called attention to his most sublime achievement—the one that will hold distant generations spell bound before his majestic memory. He has been talked at by a greater number of mutton-heads, of all lands and languages, than any other man known to history; and he has lived through it all. Nevertheless, we tremble for him when we think that he has yet to encounter our most eminent professors of gab. It were an ignominious end for the hero of so many battles to succumb to the wagging of jaws; and yet, we fear.

Some of these Mills Seminary graduates can throw a very powerful stream of words from the engine of their cultivated intellects, but they can't bluff everybody. The other day a fully diplomaed Miss of eighteen walked into a music store on Kearny street and asked the clerk for a song, entitled "Demonstrate by ocular proof the verdure of my sepulchre;" and, as he handed her a copy of "See that my grave is kept green," and raked in thirty-five cents over the counter, he smiled blandly, and said: "Is the ditty known as 'Argentine filaments interspersed with the aureate capillary attractions' a novelty to your auricular repertory?" She concluded to go back to school for one more year.

S. Wells Williams, author of the "Middle Kingdom," has been enlightening the Social Science Convention, at Saratoga, on the Chinese Question in California. Like most Eastern writers on this subject, he assumes the existence of the question, and proceeds to treat it with such measure of ignorance as his knowledge can supply, which is a good deal. His paper is full of entertainment and information, but it has no foundation in fact, since there are not now, and never have been, any Chinese in California. The name is a cant term, invented by Kearney and his followers to designate the men of position and wealth, upon whom they are making war.

It is time to put a stop to this sort of thing. Within one week two men have come out in letters to the press denying the published report of their death. This must not go on. Newspaper readers have quite enough to do to keep up with the events of the day without making incessant corrections in the record. When a man is reported dead he must stay so. It may be a little rough on him, but individuals must be content to suffer for the good of the race. We have nothing against Richard A. Proctor, astronomer, or Calvin B. McDonald, journalist, but we regret to find them so lost to the sense of public duty as to persist in saying they are alive.

The "London Times'" money article attributes the flow of gold to America, partly to speculation, and believes that England will be able to liquidate its debt to this country by cheaper means than direct gold remittances. We regret to see the Times meddling with matters so entirely beyond its intellectual grasp, and shall be pleased to forward, by next mail, copies of the seven city papers with seven different explanations of this gold movement, for the information of the Thunderer. That paper will, we trust, confine itself to the local affairs of its own little corner hereafter.

Rev. W. H. H. Murray hacks out of himself, like a snake casting its skin. He has been misjudged, he says; and so he thinks it doesn't matter. His property has been seized by swindling creditors; and so it doesn't matter. We are ready to take him at his word; but if it does not matter, why does he say anything about it? It really begins to look as if there were some remote family tie between himself and the horses he is so fond of; and perhaps he would do well to print on the title page of the next edition of his book: "'The Perfect Horse,' by a perfect something else."

We regret to do anything unpleasant, but it is perhaps timely to remark that Liberia has gone to pieces, and to ask where the Southern brigadiers were who brought about this melancholy end of so much eloquence and philanthropy? They have no Southern brigadiers in Liberia; perhaps that is the reason the little State went to pot. In any case the wreck is there; and the negro exodus to Kansas and the neighborhood goes on to the comfort of all, but the Kansas people.

The very latest thing in spiritualistic humbuggery is a female medium who produces medicines, ointments, etc., in the palm of her hand. The exact kind of medicine she hands over for inspection, experts have not yet been able to decide. It may seem coarse, but this warm weather we have clutched hands which did produce something tangible—sweat. We recommend the experts to accept this as a partial solution of the miracle. None of that physic in ours.

It is believed that General Grant will bribe the Captain of the China steamer to turn back out of the Golden Gate as soon as he learns that Kearney is still loose. This will have a bad effect on third-term stock; and the Republicans now think of importing Roscoe Conkling to engage the agitator in a duel of billingsgate, in some hope that each will choke the other before the steamer arrives.

The White-Stocking Base Ball Club, of Chicago, choose an unfortunate moment for their visit here. Kearney is spoiling for somebody that he can swear at safely, and a white stocking fills his boots with loathing. He may die of excitement, and we can't afford to spare him, now that everybody has got tired of the Meigg's Wharf monkeys.

Rough on the Police.—The papers report the finding of a woman's body in the bay, and its identification in these terms: "She was a woman of dissolute habits and well known to the police." We should like to hear now from Mrs. Police. After all, reform was very much needed, and we shall see about it when Mayor Kalloch is in office.

Quail-shot was so scarce down near Los Angeles, last week, that an enthusiastic sportsman bought out and used instead the entire stock of pills from a druggist. He says that, somehow or other, he managed to kill every shot. The only drawback has been the difficulty to get any one to eat the game.

A squab monthly, edited by three aspiring compositors, has for the last two months delighted and astonished this community. Its name is The Avalon. Some of the clips are passable, and its advertisements artistically displayed.

There has been a good deal of talk from Kearney the past two years about "hanging" first this man and then that, in one way or another; but it begins and ends in talk. The only hanging he does is to hang fire.

NOTABILIA.

THE PEDDLER'S SONG.

Lawn as white as driven snow;
Cypress black as e'er was crow;
Gloves as sweet as damask roses;
Masks for faces and for noses;
Bugle-bracelet, necklace, amber;
Perfume for a lady's chamber;
Gold quoips and stomachers,
For my lads to give their dears;
Pins and poking-sticks of steel.
What maids lack from head to heel:
Come buy of me, come; come buy, come buy,
Buy, lads, or else your lasses cry.

WILLIAM SHAKSPEARE.

The wise resolution of the Managers of the Fair to prolong the exhibition for a week, affords an opportunity to all those who have missed the sight of Neville & Co.'s splendid display at the south end of the building, up stairs, to repair the oversight. Even the few who are not interested in open-air life and sporting can derive satisfaction from an inspection of their tents, awnings, sportsmen's tackle, twines, seines, nets, wagon and horse-covers, and the infinity of useful articles made of canvas and twine, while to lovers of the woods and the mountain stream the show is a perpetual pleasure. Every kind of bag that can be asked for is there, in cotton duck, in paper, in burlaps, in cord and twine; and the mermaid seine twine, and mermaid cotton rope for fishermen's use, are superior to anything ever seen on the coast. Now that the season calls to the open country, campers-out and fishing parties must supply themselves without delay. Especially remarkable is their infinite variety of awnings and tents. Most persons fancy that four poles and a roll of canvas will make a tent, but Neville & Co. have as many styles as there are buyers. Their hexagon is one of the most complete ever seen; firm and comfortable as a house, and yet a mere feather in weight. In fact, so portable are all the articles offered by this house for sportsmen's use, that one may take with him on a month's shooting or fishing excursion all the home comforts within a compass smaller and no heavier than a light trunk. It had been thought that a camp cot was perfect when it weighed but thirteen pounds. Neville & Co. have one eight pounds in weight, and capable of being rolled into a few inches' space; absolutely the best ever seen in any country. The quail season is just open, the election is settled, there is a momentary pause before the rush of winter business, everything beckons us afield with rod and gun. A visit to the establishment of Neville & Co., California and Davis streets, is a necessity to every Nimrod before he sets out to take his prey.

"I am inclined to believe," said a fop to a lady who had refused to sing, "you are fishing for compliments." "Oh, no," replied she, "I never fish in so shallow a stream."

"What may your age be?" asked a census-taker of an unmarried lady, who was only too clearly not in her prime. The lady's answer is not recorded, though it was most likely crushing. At the same time, how easy it is for every lady to avoid such impertinent questions by choosing her bonnets and hats at Mrs. Skidmore's Home of Fashion and Novelty, 1114 Market street! Every style of headdress from her establishment is perfect in its effect; and no lady who cares for her appearance fails to visit Mrs. Skidmore's at least every week, to keep the run of the Parisian taste. The grand Fall Opening on Wednesday and Thursday of this week was an event in fashionable circles, and the store is every day crowded with ladies, anxious not to be left behind in inspecting the latest arrivals.

The ambassadors of the Powers at Constantinople find themselves forced to make representations concerning the ill behavior of the Turks in the city; and the government of the Sultan has declared that the lack of good-breeding and morality complained of is the result of the neglect of the law and the prophets, and he has promised to enforce the observance of these. Much may he done by consistent effort, and yet the shortest way to secure good morals and clear consciences in Islam would be to introduce F. & P. J. Cassin's Golden Plantation Whisky, which makes a gentleman of every one, Turk or Christian.

Miss Analine de Flukey, at Saratoga, asked Chawles why he didn't take a glass of Congress Water to improve his general appearance and the perfume of his breath. Charles was, naturally, mortified; and yet he deserved the lesson. If, instead of living riotous days, he had frequented Swain's Restaurant, 213 Sutter street, where the most exquisite order and elegance prevail, and eaten the lunches and dinners there provided, better cooked and served than anywhere else, Analine would have fallen desperately in love with him and been his blooming bride ere this.

Napa Soda is the purest and most refreshing beverage at this season of the year, when the sharp winds are dying away, and the atmosphere is undergoing the soft changes which lead in the warm, revivifying rains, and the exquisite loveliness of our autumn months.

It is the concurrent testimony of all writers, philosophers or poets, that wine makes glad the heart of man, the happy happier, and the despondent merry. Good wine, of course, is meant; and good wine should, therefore, be in demand by the successful and the unsuccessful candidates alike. A glass of Landsberger's Gerke Wine, with an appetizing breakfast or a snug dinner, will put a soul of joy into the hearts now bowed down by defeat, and make the future yet more rosy to the chosen few.

Bradley & Rulofson's great photographic establishment has been working double shifts since Monday last, to meet the demand for likenesses of the new rulers of the people; not one of these gentlemen, naturally enough, being disposed to sit to any other artists than those acknowledged to be at the head of even our accomplished body of photographers. The riches of the gallery, 429 Montgomery street, in faces of distinguished men and women, are quite astounding.

All who have been hoisted by a steamboat explosion—and what good American has not?—will remember how very chilling it is to come down two or three hundred feet into a great deal of wet water, when you don't know how to swim. At the Neptune and Mermaid Baths, foot of Hyde street, North Beach, every one may acquire this necessary accomplishment with ease and pleasure, under the scientific training of Professor Mohor.

Keep the blood pure by using Dr. Jayne's Alterative, and you purge the system of many malignant elements which, left to themselves, may develop into some Scrofulous Complaint, Skin Disease, Mercurial Affection, Scurvy or Goitre. This Alterative, by entering into the circulation, thoroughly purges the blood, and removes any morbid tendency to disease which exists in the system, and at the same time sustains the strength of the patient. Sold by Crane & Brigham, San Francisco.

One of the jokes of the campaign is against the country papers, which publish no news of the election, though they come out (nominally) three days after it. At the same time, not one of these papers is so much in the dark that it does not know the entire superiority of Montanya's Union Range over all others in the market; and the constant inquiries for this wonder-working apparatus at the store, on Jackson street, below Battery, keep the whole force busy.

With the coming of the Fall Season, Carmany & Crosett, 25 Kearny street, have brought out a very fine assortment of everything in gentlemen's wearing goods. The newest and most stylish articles are now on exhibition, and their stock of underwear is absolutely unrivaled in the city. Their improved best-fitting Dress shirts are not to be equaled, and no man can be said to be dressed who has not supplied himself at this complete establishment.

At the hotels of the great summer resorts in the East no lady is allowed to enter unless she makes oath that she will wear two new dresses daily during the season. This seems to be rather heavier than Hilton on the Jews, and yet one must draw the line somewhere. On this coast the sine qua non of a gentleman is one of White's hats, from 614 Commercial street; and next year no Eastern watering-place will admit a man without it.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Melbourne Punch.—This live contemporary of ours is always a welcome visitor when the Australian mail arrives. As a weekly, like ourselves, it has attained the venerable age of over 25 years, its July 26th issue being No. 1,252—Vol. XLIX. The illustrations, after caricatures of eminent politicians and statesmen of Victoria, are always excellent, and are the best evidence of the talent the artists employed. The accompanying writing, as a specimen of pure English, shows equally well the ability of the essayists and contributors. Take this as a sample:

BEAUTIFUL SNOW.

Once I was like the beautiful snow,
And the sinful taint of this earth below
Had not disfigured my pure white soul,
Which still preserved its snow-white scroll.

Once I was like the snow; and in vain
The name of the Maker I ne'er had ta'en.
But that was, alas! in the sweet long ago
When none knew the author of "Beautiful Snow."

But now I eurse with might and main,
And seem to have "Beautiful Snow" on the brain
By day and hy night; wherever I go
Some demon inquires, "Who wrote Beautiful Snow?"

At an evening party, when talk gets slow,
Some ninny says, "Chadwick wrote Beautiful Snow."
And when into hed my limhs I throw,
My wife asks, "My dear, who wrote Beautiful Snow?"

Road, river and rail, as I wend to and fro,
I hear, what I never saw, Beautiful Snow.
When leaving my measurs with Milton and Co.,
I am told that Sigourney wrote Beautiful Snow.

My Chinese fish-hawker, too, must have a "show,"
And deelares "Confneius lightee Beautiful Snow?"
Till softened my hrain hy degrees 'gan to grow,
And I "bothered the author of Beautiful Snow."

The etching of "Esau," in the August Portfolio, is disappointing, hut the fault does not lie with the etcher. A more unpromising suhject could hardly be selected than a tall, hairy man, leaning on a spear and looking nowhither. We agree to call him Esau, hut nohody can say why; and the name might as well be Joel, or O'Higgins or Soustchenko. The success of the number is the "Magdalen Tower and Bridge," a delightful picture, full of atmosphere and light. In the text, Mr. Lang treats of Shelley and Landor, in his Oxford paper, and Mrs. Heaton continues her notes on Stanfield. In his "Aestheties," Mr. Hamerton answers Dr. Leihreich's theory of the yellowing of the lens of the eyes, a fault of vision specially treated by him in a lecture on Turner some years ago, and not noticed hy Mr. Hamerton in his recent "Life of Turner." The theory, he now says, seems to be fallacious, because:

"1. The painter whose eye-lens is yellow sees all things yellower than they really are. He is not afflicted with the infirmity when he looks at nature, and exempt from it when he looks at his palette or his picture; the affliction is permanent alike in the field and in the studio.

2. Consequently, as the painter's eye supplies yellow to the natural scene, it will supply yellow in the same proportion to the mixtures on his palette and his canvas, which will appear to him as yellow as nature appears to him, even when they are not more yellow than nature is in reality. This being so, it does not appear that the painter's infirmity will cause him to use more of ths yellow pigments." This is sound criticism, one may say.

Ths most interesting note in the "Art Chronicle" is that on the exhihition of "Bronzes and Ivories of European Origin," at the Burlington Fine Arts Club. This ranges from the later days of Greek Art to the heginning of the 18th century, and eomprises about 550 works, of the rarest and most valuahle in existenee. At the Belgian Gallery Mr. Tristram Ellis has a collection of eighty fine views in Cyprus, which ars praised as in every way excellent. Etchings of the principal of thess ars now in preparation.

Mr D. H. Talbot, of the Cosmopolite, Sioux City, Iowa, has issued, in a handsome pamphlet of 170 pages, 8vo., under the title of "Puhlic Land Laws," an exhaustive compilation of the laws, rulings, decisions and late acts of Congress, with reference to the agricultural, mining and other lands of the United States, with the instructions of the General Commissioner regarding the same. Compiled, as it is, from official sources, and accurate, so far as we have tested it, this pamphlet should he in the hands of all who are interested in land matters. It is neatly printed and sold for the sum of fifty cents.

The "Coast Review" for Septemher has a numher of interesting articles. A tahle shows the comparative resources and liabilities of the twenty-three savings hanks in California, as follows:

Resources—July 1, 1878	$67,466,827 51
Resources—July 1, 1879	60,168,711 25
Decrease	$7,298,116 26

The liahilities show decrease of $39,265 for Capital Stock, $322,133 96 for Reserve Fund, $6,512,435 64 for amounts due depositors, and $424,280 88 in other items. All business men and property owners should study the Coast Review.

"Appleton's, for Ssptember, is an entsrtaining number, ths hest articles heing: "How to Popularize Wordsworth," and Karl Blind's second paper on "Russian Conspiracies." Mr. Cooke's "Hour with Thacksray" is pleasantly written, though superfluous enough, for who imagines Thackeray to havs heen anything hut a gentleman? The useful and the lively are always agreeahly mingled in this magazine, and the novels ars generally good. The Book Notices deal with Froude's "Cæsar," Mullock's "Is Life Worth Living?" "Couture's Art Conversations," and the usual reprints.

The "California Hortioulturist" continues to hold its own, under ths editorial guidance of Mr. Chas. H. Shinn; and the September numher is full of items interesting to the practical and the sentimental mind. Credit is editorially given to E. J. Hooper for ths coloring of the illustration, which is nevertheless not colored.

"OUR SHEET MARKET."

Notwithstanding abundant proofs to the contrary, the unthinking ma-ity continue to believe that the editorial columns of the newspapers are ten in the interest of the public. So they are when that interest co-des with the proprietors, and not otherwise. The influence of the is an article of commerce, valuable alike to the buyer and seller, if readers are unable to see where the editorial leaves off and the ad-ement begins, it is simply owing to their own stupidity and the ter's craft. We propose making "Our Sheet Market" a permanent ture, and its quotations will frequently reveal the true inwardness of little games played upon a confiding people, wherein their vanity is kled for the purpose of extracting their coin in a most insidious man-. Of course, this will be physic to our journalistic brethren, but they t make up their minds to take it with good grace. We cannot notice our contemporaries at once, but they can rely upon our attention in due e. All the papers take strict party views of the late election. The Re-blican press claim an overwhelming victory for their party, which is rrect, considering it was gained on a minority vote. The Democratic believe it will result in driving the Workingmen back into their old rty; but as the W. P. C. polled a larger vote and elected more officials n the Democratic party, the latter is now in the same position that homet was with the mountain. The trouble is that the old Bourbon lers seldom learn and never forget. The Alta merits praise for its servative course during the late campaign, and the absence of person-ties in its columns. It argued logically, without fulsome praise to nds nor calumny to enemies. We think, however, it errs in desiring contest the election of the Workingmen's candidates, on the ground of bery, in promising to refund one-half of their salaries to the treasury. e entire Board of Supervisors (elect) would he compelled to vacate, if Alta's assumption is correct—because they bribed electors by promis-a reduction of taxes to one per cent., and by other very specific ges. It is impossible to bribe a whole community. The Post believes re will be Republican, Democratic and Greenhack candidates for the sidency, and that the Workingmen will support the Greenhacker. e same journal administered a timely rebuke to Kearney for his fool-threat to hurn General Grant in effigy, and its sentiments have been animously re-echoed by the press. The Call believes neither party to satisfied with the results of tbe election, and advises tbe Republicans t success, hased upon divisions of the opposition, is always insecure. epts the Republican Board of Supervisors with "Argus-eyed suspi-n." The Bulletin apparently considers things too much mixed to be y jolly. It accordingly indulges its surplus steam in an article on wire lways and the use of compressed air as a motor for street cars. Of rse the late Bilk party and its organ receive the regulation kicking. e Examiner thinks there is no need of stating the Democratic vote, and for the N. C. P., it says that, like the serpents in Ireland, "there isn't y." This is the most unkindest cut of all. The Chronicle is best des-bed by a sage-hrush paper, which says that since the election its ed-rials are as mild as a "float cocktail," which beverage is compounded of ua pura with a whisky cork floating in it. The Sacramento Record-Union gards the election as a conservative victory. The Sacramento Bee thinks alloch will make a good Mayor, but hopes he will not abandon the pul-. Per contra, the Stockton Independent asserts that Kalloch will edily become more unpopular with his party than poor senile old nes. Talking of parsons, the Virginia City Enterprise goes on the war-th after "Vagabond Evangelists"—preaching frauds of the revivalist pe, whose success depends upon indelicate language, huffoonery and man gullihility. Mentions one who told some of his unconverted flock at "It would make God's stomach sick to look at you." (In that case, course the Heavenly Physician would he called in.) The Oakland Tribune calls upon the Regents of the University to proceed immediately th the building of the Art Gallery, for which Mr. H. D. Bacon donated collection worth $50,000 and $25,000 in cash, which the last Legislature pplemented with an appropriation of $25,000. Mr. Bacon bas threat-ed to withdraw his offer unless tbe Regents take some action. It is, no uht, annoying to tbe donor named, hut the Regents are now consider-g the acceptance of one out of tbe many plans for an Art Gallery tendered em according to advertisement some months ago. The Gold Hill News s a "logical and sensible" article on railroad builders, who are usually garded by the fickle populace as public benefactors before building, and bloody highwaymen afterwards. It contrasts tbe ringing of bells and e honfires at their advent to the subsequent attempts to confiscate or ipple their property. But that is ungrateful human nature all over. he Eureka (Nev.) Sentinel states that John W. Mackay openly asserts s intention to oppose Senator Sharon's reelection because he shirked the ver hill, and adds, that no man can be elected who is opposed to the nanza firm. We believe this report should he taken cum grano salis, t if the Silver State should go back on Mr. Sharon, he bas only to reg-er in San Francisco to find his public merit duly appreciated. Senators aron and Jones are the only men the possession of whom California vies Nevada.

PRIMATIVE INNOCENCE.

In a letter read at a meeting of the Academy of Natural Science, of hiladelphia, Dr. Charles A. Siegfried, U. S. N., writes as follows: "We ited an island called Botel Tobago while surveying a rock, eighty miles st of South Cape, off Formosa. We found a race of aboriginees, proba-y from Malay stock. They knew nothing of money, rum or tobacco. ey gave us goats and pigs for tin pots and brass buttons, and would ng around us all day in their canoes, waiting for a chance to dive for mething thrown overboard. They wore clouts only; ate taro and yams inly, though they bave pigs, goats, chickens and fish, and cocoanuts so. Snakes abound, of the hoa variety, I judge. Their thatch houses e low, with much overhang of the roof, surrounded by stone walls, rongly made of laid stone, to protect them from mousoons. Their ddy-fields contain immense quantities of taro—Colocasia aroidea, my tany says. They are peaceful and timid, do not mark the body or de-rm the face or teeth, and seem happy enough in their condition. I found em fairly healthy. They bad axes, spears and knives, but all of com-on iron, the axe being made hy imbedding the handle, instead of the ndle piercing the iron, as with us. Their canoes are beautiful, made ithout nails, and are ornamented usually with geometrical lines. The ir is worn naturally, the men partly clipping theirs. I saw no valuable etal. They wore the beards of goats, with small shells, as neck orna-ents."

"The World," the Flesh, and the Devil.

[By a Truthful Penman.]

The Friendly Zulus.—Dining at the Aquarium, I paid my shilling afterwards to see the "savages." I am bound to say that they struck me as having all the belongings of half-civilized men, who in English garb had loafed about the towns of South Africa, and one or two of them seemed to be half-breeds. They danced, they smoked, and they threw assegais at an enormous target a few yards removed from them, and exhibited their skill by hitting it. But their time was mainly passed in sitting down on the edge of their platform in a state of semi—or rather nine-tenths—nudity, to be pawed by the ladies who had come to see them. These public dalliances between London nymphs and naked Zulus excited the indignation of a gentleman who was standing by me. "It is disgusting," he said. "I can get paragraphs in many papers, and I shall call attention to this." Still more horrified was he when he observed two ladies stroking a savage, whilst two others were fanning him. "I am going to smoke a pipe this evening," he observed, "with the most important leader writers of the daily press; they must know this." Vainly have I looked for the denunciation of these awful beings, and en attendant their thunder, I venture to suggest that even to those who, like me, are not over squeamish, this pawing business was not an agreeable sight, and that it might be well if a partition were to separate the "savages" from the amorous impulsiveness of the "ladies."—Atlas in the World.——It certainly must be a great honor for an Austro-Hungarian nobleman residin England to entertain as his guest an Archduke of the Imperial House of Hapsburg. But I donbt whether, on a recent occasion, this feeling was altogether shared by the other guests invited to meet his Imperial Highness. Coarse practical jokes are not relished even when they are played by men in one's own position in life, upon whom one can take revenge; but when they are practised by a person in a more exalted position, they become intolerable. It is no consolation on finding one's boots and shoes full of water to know that it was a scion of the House of Hapsburg who had done the deed.—— What is a name worth? A good deal, apparently, in the case of Alfred Tennyson, who is so fully alive to the magic charm of his patronymic that he has declined to become the heir of certain estates in Lincolnshire, rather than exchange it for Turner. The Laureate's elder brother inherited Grashy Hall and some neighboring farms many years back, and for the sake of the £1,000 or £2,000 a year which they yielded he entirely dropped the Tennyson, and became the Rev. Charles Turner, a name which stands on the title-page of his book of sonnets. He died a few months ago, leaving no issue, and his wife followed him to the grave within a few weeks. The next heir is the Laureate, but he will not accept the condition which rigorously enforces the entire suppression of the Tennyson. Doubtless there will be found a brotber, or a nephew, if not a son, willing to forego the prestige attached to the family name, for the sake of a comfortable inheritance, but the succession is still, we believe, unsettled.——Some recent statistics on the subject of cattle and sheep in some of the important grazing regions of the world are as follows: Uruquay, with a population of 400,000, has 6,000,000 cattle and 12,000,000 sbeep; the Argentine Confederation, with 2,000,000 inhabitants, had, in 1878, accordin to official announcement, 15,000,000 head of cattle and 80,000,000 of sheep. There are no available statistics for the table-lands of Brazil and Central South America. Australia and New Zealand are estimated at 6,000,000 head of cattle and 61,000,000 sheep.—— A great-grandson of Racine, we see, has just been helped to a title of Marquis by the Pope. For tbe benefit of our countrymen and others we may as well state here that any person who wants to obtain a similar distinction from the Vatican can purchase it on comparatively cheap terms. The list of prices is as follows: For a duke's title, £480; marquis, £320; count, £240; haron, £160. Such titles have currency in continental society, are a sure ladder to the hand of an heiress, and on the whole seem to pay well. There are certainly worse investments in the market.—World.——I was having my bair cut a day or two ago, and I fell into conversation with tbe operator. "Times," be said, "are very bad; we have four young men less in our establishment than last year, and our customers economize on everything. They even buy fewer shirts. Last year we used to be sent for sometimes twice a day to hrush and curl the hair of stockhrokers; this year there is hardly a stockbroker who has his head washed."—T. T.——There is considerable timber left in tbe world yet. A late report of the English Government on the timber supply of their colonies states that Nova Scotia has 9,000,000 acres; Ontario, 180,000,000 acres; Quebec, 73,711,114 acres; New Brunswick, 6,000,000 acres; British Columbia, 110,000,000 acres—aggregating a total of 378,711,114 acres. Forest fires have caused much destruction in all these places. In Australia steps have been taken to replant portions of forest land and to protect the remainder. Baron Von Mueller, of Melbourne, is taking the lead in this work.——We wonder that more persons do not follow the example of Mr. Hall and Miss Wyatt, and conduct their correspondence in shorthand. It ought, indeed, to be nniversally taught in schools, but for this a more simple system than any of those now existing sbould be invented. Almost all reporters nse tbe system of Pitman, and by its means a speech can be taken down with facility. But for ordinary use it is too difficult. You have first to acquire the phonetic alphabet, whereas it would be easy to base a system upon the existing alphabet, making tbe vowels by dots and the consonants by lines, with a few arbitrary signs for words such as "the," and the terminations, such as "ion," "ing," etc.—World.——There were 1,200 street accidents in 1868, and 2,800 in 1878, and tbis notwithstanding the "islands" which have been formed at wide crossings, and the greater number of police that are now employed to regulate the traffic. Whence, then, this increase of accidents comes we cannot conceive, unless, times being bad, people take less care of their lives and limbs.——It is all very well to indulge in learned disquisitions as to the manner in which the plague of rats in the Deccan can be stamped out; hut it is well known that the larger part of the native population is imbued with a strong religious prejudice in favor of the rats. Moreover, the belief is general that the spirits of those who perished in the famine have entered into the rats, so that in killing them they consider they would be injuring tbeir relations.—— Les Etats-Unis de Europe says, respecting the financial position of several nations, that (1.) England, in consequence of ber absurd move in Afghanistan and of an iniquitous war in South Africa, will this year see her budget in deficit 60,000,000 of francs. (2.) Austria in balancing hers finds a deficit of 192,600,000 francs. (3.) Germany has closed her financial year with an excess of expenditures over receipts of 7,750,000 francs. (4.) Russia has expended in the late war 100,000,000 francs. (5.) Italy has difficulty in making both ends meet. (6.) France alone, at peace, free and industrious, balances her financial ledger with an excess of receipts of 100,000,000 francs. She is following in tbe steps of the United States of America, which are so quickly extinguishing the enormous debt incurred during the war of secession.—Investigator.——Lady Waldegrave, who died a few weeks since, is known to have left behind a journal which she kept from day to day, and in which she faithfully recorded all those observations of men, women and things which she was so competent to make. It is said to be particnlarly truthful as regards persons, and many are, therefore, trembling in their shoes to know when it will be published. ——The Conqueror, the most noteworthy of the armor-plated vessels now being constructed at Chatham, is the first turret-ship that has been built almost altogether of steel. She will cost about £310,000, the estimate for the hull alone being £230,000.——A correspondent, writing from Constantinople, says: "The British fleet is now anchored at Mitylene, and signs are not wanting to show that before long that island will form the next link in the 'Britisb Protectorate chain' of Asia Minor. Already tbe intelligence has reached Constantinople that surveying parties from the fleet are preparing plans for waterworks to supply the town of Mitylene." ——I bave frequently protested against the London butchers buying American meat and selling it as English meat, and at English prices. I am told on very good authority that there are not three butchers in the West End who do not practice this deceit. But it would appear that the butchers are not alone in fault. I nnderstand that a considerable portion of the beef tbat arrives from America at Liverpool is sent up to Scotland, and from there sent to the metropolis as Scotch beef. All this arises from the folly of the consumers, who, instead of insisting on their butchers selling them American beef at its legitimate price, turn up their noses at this excellent meat, and then smack their lips over it when it is termed English, and paid for as English. I should be glad, however, to know how long the public are to be swindled out of about twopence on every pound of beef that they consume.—T. T. in World.

A GOOD PLAN.

Anybody can learn to make money rapidly operating in Stocks, by the "Two Unerring Rules for Success," in Messrs. Lawrence & Co.'s new circular. The combination method, which this firm has made so successful, enables people with large or small means to reap all the benefits of largest capital and best skill. Thousands of orders, in various sums, are pooled into one vast amount and co-operated as a mighty whole, thus securing to each shareholder all the advantages of the largest operator. Immense profits are divided monthly. Any amount, from $5 to $5,000, or more, can be used successfully. N. Y Baptist Weekly, September 26th, 1878, says: "By the combination system $15 would make $75, or 5 per cent.; $50 pays $350, or 7 per cent.; $100 makes $1,000, or 10 per cent. on the stock, during the month, according to the market." Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, June 29th: "The combination method of operating stocks is the most successful ever adopted." New York Independent, Sept. 12th: "The combination system is founded upon correct business principles, and no person need be without an income while it is kept working by Messrs. Lawrence & Co. Brooklyn Journal, April 29th: "Our editor made a net profit of $101.25 from $20 in one of Messrs. Lawrence & Co.'s combinations." New circular (mailed free) explains everything. Stocks and bonds wanted. Government bonds supplied.

This Popular Hotel, together with the detached Cottages, which are not the least of its attractive features, have been newly furnished throughout, and are now open for the reception of guests. Those desiring to visit the most enjoyable of all our sea-side resorts, can make no mistake in deciding upon Pescadero.

IT IS EASILY REACHED,

and is unsurpassed in the excellence of its climate, the beauty of its scenery, and in the attractiveness of its truly remarkable sea beach. Those extraordinary pebbles, among which are to be found agates, opals, sapphires, etc., were never so numerous as now, the past Winter having thrown up immense numbers of curiously-shaped stones, which for ages have been subjected to the everlasting motions of the tireless Pacific. GOOD TROUT FISHING is obtainable in the Pescadero river.

DIVISION AND DISTRIBUTION OF ELECTRIC LIGHT.

A method of dividing electric light (not the electric current, but the light itself) has been devised by two engineers of San Francisco, E. J. Molera and J. C. Cebrian. The scheme looks plausible, but the public can afford to wait till it has been put to a practical test. We give the inventors' own description of the modus operandi of their system: "We take," they say, "the most powerful source of light attainable, and place it in a closed chamber (the chamber of light). Every wall of this box is a condensing lens, which will shape the light into a beam of parallel rays. If we intercept one of these beams of parallel rays of light by a reflector, the light will be bent or reflected according to the position of the reflector; and it may thus be sent into any desired direction, horizontal, vertical, or any way inclined. When the reflector intersects the whole beam of light, this latter one will be bent totally; if only one fraction of the sectional area of said beam is intersected, then the corresponding fractional part of the beam will be bent, leaving the other fraction thereof to follow its former direction. Therefore, if one of said beams of light is intersected at different points of its length, by different reflectors, intersecting different fractional parts of its section, said beam will be divided into a great number of secondary beams, going in any desired direction, and if these secondary beams are treated in the same way, the main beam can be divided, subdivided, conveyed and distributed to any number of distant places. If we inclose the main beam in a tube or pipe, and every secondary beam in smaller tubes, branching out from the larger one adjoining it, and we keep the above said reflectors at the elbows and intersections, or T-pieces, formed by all these tubes, we obtain a net or system of pipes or tubes similar to those used in the distribution of gas and water.

"Such is our system: in front of every side or face of our chamber of light, we place a box or pipe inclosing the main beams of light; these pipes are laid along the streets; at every side street a smaller pipe will branch out from the main one; at their junction we will place a reflector which will divert into the side street the desired percentage of light. And thus we can provide every street of a city with one or more pipes carrying a known amount of light. Then, from said street-pipes, service-pipes will be run into every lamp-post and every building, and at the intersection of the latter pipes with the street main we will insert proper reflectors, the size of which will determine the amount of light supplied by every service-pipe. In the same way that at present the gas-burners of all the rooms in a house are in direct successive communication with the gas-meter or service-pipe, for said house, through a net of pipes laid along ceilings and walls; similarly in our system, a net of properly branched-out pipes will put in communication every room of a building with the above-mentioned service-pipe; only that we will place at every junction, occurring in said net of pipes, a proper reflector, which will determine the amount of light carried by the corresponding pipe. Thus, the light may come into the rooms through the ceiling or through the walls, every room having as many outlets of light as desired. But the light will enter in a beam of parallel rays; therefore, in order to properly shape it for use, we will place at every outlet of light a diffusing lens, called a secondary lens, which will send the light around in any predetermined shape; thus completing the system of division and distribution of light from a single station to any or all the rooms in a city, and with any desired intensity."—Popular Science Monthly.

"BIZ."

Our tonnage supply has been largely increased during the week by the arrival of twenty or more ships of the largest class. Some of these were in ballast seeking, others were Coal ladened, while others brought full cargoes of general merchandise. Our spot supplies of staple goods have been largely increased by these timely arrivals. At this writing we have in port a fleet of 24 disengaged vessels, registering 30,000 tons. On the European herth we have a fleet of 40 ships, of 57,000 registered tons. The engagements for Wheat during the week have been quite numerous, some dozen or more Grain charters having been written for Europe. Altogether some 20 vessels have been secured for various voyages. Those to Havre or Liverpool direct were based upon 42s. 6d@45s. to a direct port, 47s. 6d.@50s. to Cork or Falmouth for orders, U. K., or if to the Continent, 2s. 6d. more added. These rates may now be said to rule, but the present requirement seems to be light. Oregon has not yet entered our market for her tonnage supply, but we are looking for some demand ere long from that quarter.

Hawaiian Interests.—During the week we have had three or four arrivals from Honolulu, laden chiefly with Sugar and Rice. The former is mostly of refining grades, and comes under contract to the California Refinery. This week's sugar receipts from Honolulu aggregate 19,266 packages, and from January 1st to September 1st Island imports foot up 35,806,646 lbs. Some of the Eastern papers have recently started the idea that Sugar is now being conveyed to the Sandwich Islands and shipped from there here clandestinely in order to obtain the benefit of free admittance here under the Reciprocity Treaty. All such stories are simply sensational and without a particle of foundation. There is not a word of truth in it, nor is there any door open for frauds of that nature. The Hawaiians themselves would not permit it for a moment, and as for our Custom House authorities, appraisers, consuls, etc., they are all too wide awake for any such fraud, nor would it be wise to attempt it. Mr. Dimond, of this city, returned from the Islands on the last steamer, whither he went for the purpose of arranging with the planters for the disposal of their Sugar crop. He reports that the hulk of the Sugar has been already sold to and contracted for by the California Refinery at a price agreed upon, and which seems to be altogether satisfactory to the Island planters. We are not advised as to the price actually paid therefor. The Sugar will, therefore, for the most part, fall into the hands of our Refinery this year, as has been the case ever since the passage of the treaty. This charge made at the East of sending Sugar to the Islands for smuggling here under the treaty is, no douht, the outgrowth of a feeling of disappointment at the East upon the part of some New Yorkers, who are deprived of a market upon the Pacific Slope for a portion of their refued surplus, hut this they cannot expect to enjoy to any extent. Certainly not in the near future, for the reason that California capitalists combined with Island planters are driving ahead at the Islands their irrigation schemes, canals, etc., building Sugar mills, redeeming wild lands and doing everything possible to increase the arahle lands of the Islauds, and it will not be more than a twelvemonth before the Sugar crop of the Islands will be largely increased; and yet, we think, no more rapidly or faster thau the increased world consumption of Sugar will require it. There are some here who think that the Sugar development at the Islands will operate as a har to the prosecution of the Sugar Beet interest in California. This we do not believe, nor are we a firm heliever in the practicahility of raising successfully Sugar Beets in this State. All experiments of this nature heretofore made have been unsuccessful. There is too much Alkali in our soil, and, although some good Sugar has been made from the Beats, yet no small proportion of it has a bad smell. And the Syrup product has not yet heen found to he available—too much Salt in its compilation. Not less than three Sugar Beat factories or companies in California have already made a fizzle of it, and yet there are others disposed to try again. This time we hope they will make a success of it.

Hawaiian Rice.—The character of the Island Table Rice very closely resembles that of the Carolinas, and is a great favorite here among families, and generally commands the very highest market rate. Recently, some 2,000 hags were received, and all purchased at once hy a leading Front street jobber at or about 6c. per lb. Recently it is is said that several small invoices of this superior Table Rice have been sent to Chicago and intervening cities, where it is much liked. Our imports of Hawaiian Rice from January 1st to September 1st aggregated 2,404,382 lbs.

Our Export Trade to Hawaii is steadily increasing. The arrivals and departures of vessels to the Sandwich Islands has received a great impetus since the passage of the treaty, and our merchants, and citizens generally, are well pleased with the Island development. The Islanders draw heavily upon us for Machinery, Steamers, Iron, Lumber, Flour, Grain, Cattle, Horses, Mules, etc.

The Bag Ring has not yet bursted, hut is still up to its old tricks of hambouzling the poor Granger, farmer or others in interest. During the week an invoice of 100,000 Calcutta Grain Sacks of recent importation, 22x36, were thrown into auction, and sold hy S. L. Jones & Co. (possibly hought in) for cash at $8 45, all taken in, and the announcement publicly made that 250,000 more would he offered Friday on the same terms. It is said that the combination have too good a thing to let up on, and occasionally we say—stand from under.

Coffee.—The market at the moment is very quiet, at steady prices; stock light.

Coal.—Our supplies have been considerahly increased during the week, hut the cargoes were mostly placed prior to arrival.

Case Goods.—The market for Salmon and other goods in this line continues without animation; prices rule low.

Chemicals.—By the arrival of the ship Eskdale, from Liverpool, supplies have been largely increased, with a quiet market.

Hardware, Nails, Metals, Etc.—There seems to he rather more tone to the market, looking to an improved range of prices ere long.

Paper.—It is said that a California Company has contracted with the Morning Call to furnish supplies, for a seasou, at the low price of 7c.

Salt.—The market is firm at 15c@20c for coarse and fine Liverpool. Stock light.

Teas.—The "Quickstep," from Yokohama, to Macondray & Co., hrought 4,700 packages and 40 jars. Price for Japan, 35c@37½.

Quicksilver.—The market is said to be dull, at 40c. The exports hy sea, from September 4th, are as follows:

	Flasks.	Value.
To Mexican Ports, per Nuevo Pacifico, Sept. 4th:
Thos. Bell & Co	550	$16,830

Flour.—The market is dull, and prices rule in huyer's favor.

Wheat.—There is an active demand for export at $1.65@1.67½, whils millers are forced to pay $1.70@1.72½ per ctl.

Barley.—The market is very sluggish at 85c.@90c. for new crop Brewing; old, ditto, $1@1.05; old Coast Feed, 65c.; new, ditto, 70@75c.; Chevalier, hright, $1.50@1.70 ₱ ctl.

Corn and Oats.—There is very little husiness doing—the former at 85@90c. ₱ ctl., the latter $1.25@1.45 ₱ ctl.

Hops.—The receipts of New are light at 22½@25c.; Old, 10@12½c.

Tallow is in fair request at 5½c., and for Refined 7⅞c.

Wools.—The stock of Spring Clip is well nigh exhausted. Fall Clip arrives sparingly, and is wanted at 12½c@18c for fair to good fleece.

Fruits.—Our market ahounds with Blackherries, Strawherries, Raspherries, Figs, Grapes, Peaches, Plums, Pears, Apples, Quinces, Bananas, etc. Oranges and Lemons are scarce. Melons, like Fruit, are very pleutiful and exceedingly cheap.

CUMBERLAND MINE.

Extraordinary Richness!!—Challenges Comparison with any Mine in the World! Experts Invited to Visit the Mine and See for Themselves!

News from the Cumberland Mine, Yavapai county, Arizona, continues to be of the most wonderful character. Shaft No. 1 shows free gold from the surface down to the bottom of the shaft—distance, in straight line, 70 feet, and by work done, 108 feet. The assays from this shaft are unparalleled in the history of mining, running from $40 a ton to the tremendous sum of $4,612 a ton. This latter is a black quartz body, nine feet thick. Shaft 2, on which work is being prosecuted, is showing up most wonderful ore. This ore contains sulphurets. Shaft 2 is at bottom of hill, 500 feet from Shaft 1. The presence of sulphurets in Shaft 2 proves almost conclusively the great depth of the ore body. Superintendent Collins' letter, of September 7th, says:

"If you think it advisable, I can send you blocks of ore weighing one-half ton each, like that forwarded to-day. • • There is no question about quantity. • • Gold can be found from one end of claim to the other."

Surely, this mine is proving a bonanza more startling than any of the surprises of the last 30 years on this coast. A list of assays by Professor Irelan will soon be published. Meanwhile, we are informed by the President, George W. Ciprico, that any experts of reputation—who may desire to inspect the Cumberland Mine, to satisfy themselves or their friends as to its richness—can obtain a letter to the Superintendent by applying at his office, 417 California street.

SANITARY NOTES.

The deaths this week number 102, as compared with 86 last and 61 the week before—an increase in two weeks of 40 per cent. The mortality from violence is excessive, viz: 5 casualties, 2 homicides and 3 suicides. There were 67 males, 35 females and 12 Chinese. The mortality of infants is also excessive, there being 37 deaths under 5 years of age, as compared with 15 two weeks ago. Zymotic diseases are on the increase, and this week we have 2 typhoid fever, 3 diphtheria, 2 diarrhœa, 1 cholera, 4 cholera infantum, 2 cerebro spinal meningitis. The other principal causes were: 16 consumption, 8 pneumonia, 4 cancer, 3 of infantile convulsions; 2 each of Bright's disease, enteritis, liver disease, puerperal fever, and one each of apoplexy, alcoholism, brain disease, bronchitis, epilepsy, hœmoptysis, heart disease, peritonitis, rheumatism and syphilis. There was no death in the Third or Fifth Wards. There were 10 in the Fourth, 17 in the Tenth and 17 in the Eleventh Wards. Eighteen deaths occurred in the public institutions. It is impossible to doubt that the high mortality is chiefly caused by the heat and the consequent fermentation of refuse. In several instances we have been able to trace the illness of children to over-crowded and ill-ventilated bed-rooms, poisoned with sewer gases.

The late fatal accident on the Matterhorn brings to mind the account given by Frederick Whymper, formerly of San Francisco, and one of our contributors, of the ascent in which he took part: His party consisted of Lord Francis Douglas, the Rev. Mr. Hudson, Mr. Hadow, Michel Croz, one of the best guides in Switzerland, and two other guides, named Taugwalder. The ascent was safely achieved, but in descending, roped together in a line, Mr. Hadow slipped and upset Croz, the shock jerking Mr. Hudson and Lord Francis from their feet. Had not the rope snapped, all seven must have fallen together; as it was, the four leading men rolled helplessly over a precipice of 4,000 feet, at the foot of which their bodies were found the next day by the three survivors.

Next to a pair of eyes and a pair of legs, a sportsman wants powder that will go off, and not stand around. Quails and ducks attend to their business of getting out of the way; and Hazard's Powder is the thing to stop them. For duck-shooting, we recommend F.G., and for quail, F.F. or F.F.F. All who handle guns know that these brands shoot with more force and leave the gun cleaner than those of any other maker. Now is the time to try them.

The total number of vessels which passed through the Suez Canal in 1878 was 1,550, of which 1,227 were British, 89 French, 71 Dutch, 44 Italian, 38 Austrian, 22 German, 21 Spanish, 8 Egyptian, 8 Japanese, 6 Danish, 5 Swedish and Norwegian, 4 Portuguese, 3 Turkish, 2 Belgian, 1 American, and 1 Zanzibar. The total tonnage was 2,178,316 tons, of which 1,726,946 tons were British.

Mr. P. B. Kennedy, the famous glove manufacturer, 232 Kearny street, has just received 2,000 dozen of his seamless gloves, in all shades of color, as well as black and white, and with every number of buttons, from 2 up to 16. These are the only really faultless gloves in the city. His new styles of parasols and sun-umbrellas are also attracting the attention of the fashionable world.

The largest assortment of canes ever imported to this coast is now at J. M. Litchfield & Co.'s, 415 Montgomery street, comprising some beauties in ivory and gold heads, something very genteel in Malacca and Manilla, and also a splendid lot of ruhber canes.

The well-known firm of Bush & Scudder, at 22 Post street, was dissolved by mutual consent on the 9th September. Mr. David Bush, having purchased his late partner's interest, will settle up the affairs of the firm and continue the business at the same place, on his own account.

St. John's Presbyterian Church, Post street. Rev. Dr. Scott, Pastor, will preach on Sunday at 11 A. M. and 7½ P. M. Public very cordially invited. Communion at the close of morning service. Bible Classes and Sunday School, 9½ A. M.. Prayer and Praise Service, 6½ P. M.

"Plant Sweet Flowers on my Grave," is the title of an excellent new song and Chorus, by Eddie Fox, of minstrel fame. Published by F. W. Helmick, Music Publisher, No. 136 West Fourth street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

"The Principles of Light and Color." By Edwin Babbitt, D.M. For sale by Boericke & Tafel, 234 Sutter street.

THE BATHER'S DIRGE.

[BY TENNYSON MINOR.]

Break, hreak, break,
On thy cold, hard etones, O sea!
And I hope that my tongus won't utter
The curses that rise in me.

O well for the fisherman'e boy,
If he likes to he soused with the spray!
O well for the sailor lad,
As he paddles ahout in the hay!

And the ships swim happily on
To their haven under the hill;
But O for a clutch at that vanish'd hand,
And a kick—for I'm catching a chill!

Break, break, hreak,
At my poor, bare feet, O sea!
But the artful scamp who has collar'd my clothes
Will never come back to me. —Funny Folks.

THE CABUL MASSACRE.

The particulars of ths Cabul massacre are, in a general way, familiar to the world by this time. Exactly how the British Envoy and his followers died will, prohably, not be known for some tims to come; but this we know—that the little band died with their face to the enemy, and disd as Englishmen at bay always do die—beneath a hecatomb of their assailants. This, also, we know—that vengeance swift, surs and deadly, is closs at hand. When England's sons ars slain in fair and open hattle, their country mourns for them as a mother for her children; but she honors a brave foe and seeks no vengeance. All the privileges of war, all the stratagems and advantages which war justifies, shs is willing to grant and to accept; but we may be sure that ths slaughter of an Envoy, whose person, together with those of his suits, was sacred under rules which even the most barbarous nations are familiar with and observe, England will neither forgive nor forget. Already, among the England-haters of this country, there are to be found those who contend that the Afghans, not understanding or recognizing the inviolable immunity of an Amhassador, were justified in injuring the invading British in whatever way they could. Such chatter only shows ignorance, or something worse, for it is well known tbat the semi-civilized nations of Asia are even more punctilious in all matters pertaining to ambassadorial etiquette than Europeans. Nor is it any excuse to say that tbe assailants were an irresponsible and uncontrollable mob. The attack was made by regiments of regular soldiery, who accomplished their fell work under discipline, and left the scene in good order to prepare for resistance against the vengeance which they knew was inevitahle. In Afghanistan, as much as in England or the United States, regiments are officered by men of rank and responsibility. Without their guidance and leadership, the soldiers could, or would, have done nothing. Yakoob Khan himself may not be to blame, but, if he has no more control over his psople than this, he is not the right person to he even their nominal ruler, and so, we believe, the British Government will soon come to think.

But behind the Ameer and his officers there looms up the same shadowy figure which brought about all the trouble with Afghanistan in the first place. Having failed in an attempt to gain a diplomatic footing at Cabul without England's knowledge, Russia, by false promises, induced the late Ameer to insult the British Government and then left him to his fate. She had not the courage, after all her boasting, to meet the English face to face and declare that if Afghanistan was to be conquered she wanted a share of the spoils. On the contrary, she swallowed the bitter pill, to the disgust, but not to the surpriss, of the civilized world, and sat quietly down while the British took the country and advanced their Indian frontier to an impregnable line. But when this is done and a treaty made, then Russia hegins her insidious work. There is every reason to believe that to her emissaries the recent massacre is due. At all events, her newspapers, particularly the semi-official organs, gloat of the disaster, and calculate cold-bloodedly upon its effects. But they calculate erroneously when they say that England's scientific frontier is destroyed. Why do they believe it to be destroyed? Because, according to them, England will now have to conquer and hold the whole of Afghanistan. They could not make a greater mistake. England does not want the whole of Afghanistan. She is content to have her Indian frontier where it is. But she will punish the Afghans, and she will take care that Russia does uot have the Afghan country. But the Russian organs more thau ever betray their unholy satisfaction when they add to the necessity for this conquest that it would be contrary to treaty. In short, England must take the Ameer's dominions, and again she mustn't. To crown these malicious absurdities, one, at least, of the St. Petersburg papers proposes that Russia and England partition Afghanistan between them, and so join their Asiatic possessions. This would be a very pretty arrangement. After England has done all the fighting Russia is to come in and take half the spoils! Treachery and cowardice are not likely to be rewarded in that particular fashion just now, however.

THE MORMONS.

It seems rather strange that the United States Government should address a circular to foreign Governments on the subject of Mormonism at all; still more strange that they should go to the length of protesting against further Mormon emigration from England, Germany, Norway, Sweden and Denmark. Such a document, however, is said to be on the way, and the respective Governments are requested to dissuade their subjects from "yielding to the inducements of the Mormon missionaries." This is all very well, and no douht according to the law of the United States bigamy is a criminal offense. But the right place to put a etop to it is in Utah. To attempt to prevent the landing of Mormons is absurd. The people will come in as ordinary emigrants, and then go on in the usual way to the Mormon settlements. Mormonism had its origin in America, and if the law were enforced there polygamy would soon come to an end. But the truth is, that Mormonism is not eo easily stamped out. To confess the failure openly would not suit the Federal Government, so it resorts to this roundabout method of action. It is, however, too much to expect that foreign Governments will bestir themselves to accomplish indirectly what the Americans ought to do on their own account.

SYDNEY INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION.

AUGUST 2, 1879.—The building is rapidly approaching completion, and the large doms will be finished in a few days. Extraordinary progress is heing made in the erection of the exterior building. Ons machinery hall will shortly he in possession of the Commissioners. All new arrangements are made for motive power and shafting for machinery exhibits. The French man-of-war Rhine, with Captain Mathieu, Director-General, and staff, is expected daily. The Japanese exhibits arrived per Athol, and are stored in the huilding. Up to date nearly 5,000 cases from various countries are to hand. Various European courts are already crowded with cases, and unpacking will commence shortly. New South Wales exhibits are commencing to arrive. There is a splendid ethnological collection from Fiji and other South Sea Islands, collected by officials of ths Wolverins, now in the huilding. The grand organ has arrived, and will be erected as soon as the platform for its reception is finished. Mr. Gresley Lukin, Executive Commissioner for Queensland, takes possession of the court of that colony next wesk to commence the decorations. Tasmania is making great efforts to hold an equal position with ths neighboring colonies, and is sending a tin trophy, weighing seven and a half tons, besides other valuahls productions and manufactures.

The Californian mail, now at Auckland, brings his Excellency the Right Honorable Lord Augustus Loftus, K.C.B., President of the Commission, and a large number of American exhibits. Arrangements are to bs made, by which no money for admission will hs taken at the entrances of ths Exhihition, as it is considered it would cause obstructions and dslay, but tickets will be sold at ths principal business estahlishments, and at offices appointed hy the Commission.

TAMMANY'S SECESSION.

The withdrawal of the Tammany Delegates from the Syracuse Convention is the strongest proof yet given of the disintegrating influences at work in the National Democratic party. It is virtually a surrender of the State government to the Republicans, with a strong probability that the presidential electors will also bs secured by them. Without entering into the merits of the rival factions, it is apparent that ths Democratic party throughout the Union must be thoroughly reorganized and rid of its imbecile lesders, if it hopes to succeed in ths presidential campaign. It has been handicapped by the unpopularity and inahility of ths men in control, and the Greenback and Labor parties have drawn their principal strength from it. Able and honest leadership alone can prevent its splitting up into fragments. One thing is certain, Mr. Tilden has carried his rule-or-ruin policy beyond the limits, and must now pay the penalty hy relinquishing his ambition. The full effect of his insane course will not appear until its results are summed up in the Ohio and other State elections. He may flatter himself that he has beaten Tammany in the gubernatorial contest, hut Tammany has made him a "dead duck" for the Presidency, so that honors are easy on both sides. More brains and less hulldozing are absolute necessities to rescue the Democratic party from its morihund condition, else it will go down to its grave "unwept, unhonored and unsung."

MR. GLADSTONE'S CHALLENGE.

Mr. Gladstone's challenge is bold, and he tells us that he nails his colors to the mast with resolution to stand by them. "At no period of my puhlic life have the issues inviting the judgment of the nation been of such profound importance—including the management of finance, the scale of expenditure, and the constantly growing arrears of legislation. I hold before, as I have held in the House of Commons, that the faith and honor of the country have heen gravely compromised in the foreign policy of the Ministry; that by the disturhance of confidence, and lately even of peace, which they have hrought about, they have prolonged and aggravated public distress; that they have augmented the power and interest of the Russian Empire, even while estranging the feelings of its population; that they have embarked the Crown and people in an unjust war; that their Afghan war is full of mischief, if not of positive danger, to India; and that by their use of the treaty-making and war-making powers of the Crown they have abridged the just rights of Parliament, and have presented its prerogatives to the nation under an unconstitutional aspect which tends to make it insecure." Mr. Gladstone admits that there is no demand for a general election just now, though there might well he, he thinks.

Another vessel is now on its way to China—namely, a torpedo boat of the newest design, and like the Alpha, Beta, Gamma and Delta, is to he followed by other similar vessels for coast defense. At the present time wefare engaged in supplying China with the most formidable engines of modern warfaie, and the Imperial authorities are shrewd enough to buy only the hest of weapons and the most carefully designed ships and boats they can get. When we consider the use which has been made of modern appliances by the Chinese in Central Asia it is at least not improbahle that a similar use may be made of these new purchases to carry out a long-determined policy. At any rate India, which depends for so large an amount of its revenue on the free reception of opium hy China, can scarcely view without disquiet ths accumulation of the means of attempting to exclude it when that course is thought advisahle at Pekin.

Talmage in London.—It is not an uncommon hoast of Irishmen that they are scattered all over the world, and are multiplying like rahbits, to accomplish the secret designs of a merciful Providence in civilizing, Christianizing and Roman Catholicizing the nations of the earth. Retorting upon this well-known boast, Talmage remarks: "Perhaps; hut all the while God so loved the Chiness that He made 300,000,000 of them." "Yes, truly," remarked, loudly, a casual holy Roman, who was listening; "hut He made only one Talmage."

DEALING ON MARGINS.

It is customary with the stock exchanges of other and older cities, when any important change in business methods is contemplated, or made necessary by law, to make the requisite preparations and announcement ninety days in advance of the specified time. Under the new Constitution, Art. IV, Sec. 26, "All contracts for the sale of shares of the capital stock of any corporation or association, on margin or to be delivered at a future day, shall be void, and any money paid on such contracts may be recovered by the party paying it by suit in any court of competent jurisdiction." The Legislature is empowered to regulate or prohibit the buying and selling of shares in any stock board, exchange or market, under the control of any association. This, without doubt, is for the purpose of enabling the Legislature to effectually crush any opposition on the part of the brokers. The mandate is, do thus and so or be abolished. There can be no argument, however, against the fact that margin dealing in mining stocks is intrinsically bad and productive of more losses and bankruptcies than all other causes put together. It therefore behooves the stock boards to prepare for the coming change and announce, without delay, their purpose of fulfilling the law. Any opposition will be sure to meet with retaliation on the part of the Legislature. Verb. sat sap.

A Vienna correspondent reports that in consequence of the bad harvest and numerous floods, the distress in parts of Hungary threatens to become appalling during the coming winter. A dispatch from Candabar says that General Hughes' brigade has been ordered to Khelah-Ghilzai. The regiments at Herat mutinied on the 5th instant, and murdered their commanders. An Ali-Khegl dispatch saye: Intelligence has been received here of a terrible outbreak at Herat. The troops revolted and murdered the civil and military authorities.

IS THERE TO BE A STOCK DEAL?

It is said that, in consequence of the mines looking well at several points along the Comstock lode, there is likely soon to he greater activity at the Stock Boards, and considerahle appreciation in values. We do not own or control the diamond drills ourselves, and, unless we did, we should be sorry to venture a very pronounced opinion as to what these promises of roseate hue are hased upon; hut we do know that some good developments that would send the market up with a boom would be exceedingly well, timed just now. Nothiug inspires an ordinary Californian with confidence in the prosperity of the State equal to the discovery of honanzas and a lively stock market. Recently, times have heen dull, and peopls have had the hlues; hut only let there be a good old-fashioned stock deal, hased upon real developments, and forthwith there would come over things a most marvelous change. Men's faces would quickly wear a different appearance. Where now pale hrows are sickled o'er with thought and sadness, there would coms relief and sunshine. We are a mercurial people, perhaps a little too easily depressed, and certainly just as too easily elated. The striking of a veritable honanza would do the busiuess, and cause our city to speedily enter upon a renewed life of activity and of hope. Who knows hut that a few weeks may serve to reveal a new Con. Virginia or California mine? There are hright prospects at several points on the grsat lode. Ophir is most promising, and something more, hut, after all, the king pin to the whole situation at the north end is right hstween Union and Sierra Nevada. In regard to Ophir, the fact that the 2,400 station of the incline will he opened hy to-day, preparatory to operations on that level, and also to the sinking of the incline on down, is also worthy of consideration. The continuation of good milling ore in the Hardy vein running north on the 2,100 level and ths width of the vein are significant, as is also the ahundance of low grade quartz on the joiut Ophir-Mexican crosscut west on the 2,000 level.

Owing to the difference in levels of the Union and Sierra Nevada, the connection hetween the shaft of the former and the raise from the 2,200 level of the latter, made last Saturday afternoon, was a surprise to everybody. But it was made none too soon to please the people. The official announcements in the reports to-day—that in ten days more cages will he running to that level, and that the pipes will he laid through to the C. & C. shaft to carry away that long-time trouhlesome Sierra Nevada water hy Saturday next, at which time, also, the new pump-rods of that shaft will he in and ready for use—are really honeyed words.

The developments along the ore vein ou the 2150 level of tbe California are encouraging, and may lead to something important yet. The situation in Bullion and Exchequer is somewhat improved since last report hy the connection hetween the 2000 and 2135 levels of the Consolidated Imperial and Alpha hy their joint workings. The point of ahsorhing interest in this section is, however, the 2600 of the Alpha and Consolidated Imperial mines. It is purposed now to supplement the operations on the 2400 level. The joint crosscut on that level was run east through vein matter 185 feet with a flattering outlook. Tben in other districts the chances are good. Bodie is promising well. Eureka Consolidated continues dividends, with paying a two-dollar one to-day, and with a prospect of continuing them for a long time to come. These are a few of the sources whence large expectations are derived. Let us hope that they will be realized. Something always has turned up to renew prosperity in California just when that something was needed to renew it. That is one of the principal charms of our State. It may he dull for a while, hut it won't stay dull for any length of time. It never has, and we don't helieve it will now. Apart from mining expectations, other things are looking well. The crops have heen fair, and prices are good. Money for our surplus produce is comiug into the State. The election heing satisfactorily ended, confidence is being restored, and the hetter times, anxiously looked for, will soon he here. It would wonderfully accelerate their progress if a honanza were uncovered. But, with or without that, their advent is certain. Every readable sign indicates a renewed business prosperity.

THE RIGHTS OF AUTHORS.

Now that authors are a power in the land we may soon expect something like a reasonahle international copyright law. It has long been a reflection hurled at the United States that they respected no foreigner's rights to the fruits of his hrain lahor. The work of men's hands was sacred, hut the works of their intellects might he stolen hy any publisher. We had few, if any, authors to he served in the same way ahroad, and hence we stole with importunity. But things are changing. Our writers ask protection for their works in other lands, and are very willing that foreign writers shall receive the same advantage in ours. This mutuality of interest is sure ere long to hring ahout a much needed international copyright law or treaty. Our National Constitution gives to Congress the power to extend the necessary relief. It provides that "Congress may pass laws to promote the progress of science and useful arts, hy securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries." There is no country which acknowledges the complete and perpetual right of an author to the ahsolute control of the publication of his work in the same way that it recognizes the right of a farmer to property in the potatoes that he raises. Copyright is everywhere the subject of statute law, and the purpose of the protection is not so much the caring for the abstract rights of the author as it is the promotion of the public welfare. Those who hold to the perfect and perpetual right of ahsolute control of publication hy the author need not dispute this, because they may reasonahly argue that the public welfare cannot be promoted hy a deliherate and persistent disregard of private right. They may rightly argue that such disregard is publicly demoralizing, and contend that the foreign author should he included in the protection equally with the domestic. Then again, the public are advantaged hy the hetter works that are produced under the system of protecting a man's right to his own. If every thief may steal what you produce, the result will he that you will produce little that it will he worth his while to steal. The higher and ahler the literature of the nation, the hetter and nobler will its people be. Great works require for their production exceptional mental efforts. Such efforts are not usually made except under the incentive of some stimulating motive. The hest stimulus is a high reward for great results, and that can only be ohtained hy protecting authors in their rights of property.

An interesting case hearing upon the short-horn mania has just been tried at Gloucester assizes. A hull was exhihited at the Annual Short-horn Show at Birmingham, in 1875, as hy Grand Patriot out of Gracetul. The animal was, of course, supposed to be of this most distinguished parentage on hoth sides, and skilled judges awarded it the first size. There Mr. Allsopp saw the hull, aud hought it for the sum of 115 guineas. So far, however, from the hull having the five successive crosses necessary to entitle him to he considered a hull of high degree, it was proved conclusively that this prize-winner, Grand Patriot II., was only hy a pedigree bull by an ordinary cow. Mr. Allsopp, however, was quite satisfied with his purchase, and the bull hecame part of his herd. As a result he is now the happy possessor of some ssventy calves, whose grandmother is an ordinary cow, and is likely to add another fifty-eight to the number of these low-caste heasts, thus lowering the whole character of his herd. The jury came to the conclusion that Mr. Allsopp had heen imposed upon—as no douht he had—and awarded him the sum of £750 damages. Nothing was heard during the trial of the judges at the Birmingham annual show; hut it would he curious to learn how they came to award the first prize in the short-horn class to a half-hred hull whose pedigree they had not investigated.—Pall Mall Budget.

The village of Puys is now the fashionable suhurh of Dieppe, and tbe presence of two such eminent romancers as the Marquis of Salishury and M. Alexandre Dumas gives the place a special interest in the eyes of the inquisitive traveler. The heaven-horn Minister and his family are at the Chalet Cecil, hut the natives of the place do not see much of them, and seem to he surprised that they are not more frequently invited to enjoy the Marquis de Sa-lis-hu-ry's hospitality. They set more store hy Alexandre Dumas and his three daughters, who are made much of hy the inhabitants, out of gratitude, perhaps, for their grandfather, who invented Puys; and another notahle resident at the little village is M. Surquet, who enjoys the distinction, such as it is, of heing an Under-Secretary in the Ministry of the day, and of patronizing art hy paying long prices for very had pictures.—Vanity Fair.

London, Septemher 17th.—Khushi, ahout forty miles from Cabul, is to be occupied by the British in a few days, and converted into a rallying point for all chiefs who may elect to join the English.——Simla, September 17th.—The military authorities have received information tending to show that frontier trihes have partially interrupted communication hetween Khyba Pass and Cabul. A sergeant, with some more of the escort of the British residency, have arrived at Ali Khel.——London, September 17th.—A considerable portion of the Irish harvest is irreparahly lost. Potatoes have heen partially blighted, and on many farms the whole crop is gone.

Lord Dunmore is about to sell his famous herd of shorthorns. This reminds me that I never yet could understand, though I have tried, what especial thing it is that makes this especial kind of cow so especially valuahle. The strain of "Duchesses" was first originated hy one Bates, a Yorkshire farmer, and has hecome for some reason so costly that cows of this race sell for many thousands of pounds. But why are tbey so valuahle? I cannot discover that they give more or better milk, or more or better calves. All I can learn is that tbey are more "fashionable" tban other hreeds, which means, as far as I can ascertain, that they are more admired hy the Duke of Devonshire. Fashion in honnets, and fashion in tying back, I can understand; hut what on earth can he the meaning of fashion in cows? What we want from cows is milk and beefsteaks.—Vanity Fair.

The Sand-Lot Exile.—Tbe whelp which answers to the name of Denis Kearney has seen fit to get out of down during the season of Grant's reception. The Sand-Lot, where he wasgoing to hurn the ex-Prssident in effigy, is to echo to a salute in the General's honor. How hadly the poor little dog did put his foot in it, to he sure, when he made that threat! But he has still a chance to go out into the brush and secretly commit to the flames a dummy Ulysses for tbe edification of his family and the mosquitoes.

Lord Chelmsford and his staff arrived at Plymouth, where he and the officers with him were accorded an enthusiastic reception. At the request of the Prince of Wales they proceeded to the yacht Hildegarde, and were received most cordially by his Royal Highness, who congratulated Lord Chelmsford on his victories in Zululand. In matters of detail he has expressed his conviction that the war ended with the battle of Ulundi, and that Cetewayo will either surrender or be killed hy his subjects, who are desirous of peace.

A report of the Medical Department of the Russian Army shows that, of the 1,400,000 hoys registered as having heen born in 1855, there were living in 1876 only 610,000, or 43½ per cent.

THE DEVIL'S DEATH.

(We publish, by request, the following highly humorous tribute to the popular [illegible] C. B. Bishop, written by Emile Lawson, which was read at the last [illegible] of the Celsian Association of the Medical College of the Pacific, of which he is President]:

There settled down in Delaware
In eighteen hundred and eighty
A new-fledged doctor—but all declare
In matters of science weighty.
All the M.D.s left in deep despair,
The druggist could coin no money,
And all because of this wonderful man
Who was so exceedingly funny.
That the cripples who brought their crutches along
Went off on a beautiful canter,
And pain turned to joy, at this medical boy,
And tears into laughter instanter.

But the sexton cried, let me clap my spade
On this scientific trollop;
I'll rake his Trapezius fore and aft,
His Latissimus Dorsi I'll wallop,
Why, he's never sent me the very first corpse
To fill even a single hole up.

All rusty are my piles of crape
Sighed the waiting mantua-maker,
I'll mold his visage to such a shape
Roared the furious undertaker,
Why, he's raised digestion to such a pitch,
That the only ones who are getting rich,
Are the butcher and the baker.

And Satan was growling down below
At the scarcity of fodder,
Nobody dead—nor likely to go,
And we're perishing for chowder,
And he roared, proceed ye lazy imps—
Proceed at once to dish up
The cresses, the crackers, and the shrimps,
While I go out and fish up
That wandering cell among the nymphs,
That delicate, nebulous, angel-fish, called Bishop.

So, he baited his hook with a capital joke,
And he chuckled quite enraptured,
But his fishing-line he nearly broke
As the jolly prize was captured;
And he hastened to hoist him on a spit
'Mid the wildest incantations.
Poor Bishop groaned, e an't you wait a bit
For your infernal rations?
Yes, yes, said the devil, I've changed my mind,
Don't one of you touch a morsel,
For some amusement I am inclined,
We've had nothing lately of the kind,
So we'll lower this witty parcel,
And have a genuine comedy,
And a grand full-dress rehearsal.

Go dress ye, fiends, in your Sunday clothes
And polish your sooty faces,
And take your seats in the gallery—
We'll reserve all the full-dress places
For the doctors—a noble company,
While this noted medical-actor shows
His best dramatic graces.

Then the play began, and the upper tiers
Broke out in the wildest racket,
Like a shower of hail the buttons flew
From off each bursting jacket,
From the boxes rang the loudest cheers,
And deafening shouts of laughter,
While the plaudits of the orchestra
Went up from pit to rafter;
And the devil laughed till his diaphragm
Like a balloon expanded,
And an old thoracic aneurism
Was so fearfully distended
That at last it broke, and a spouting stream
In crimson jets ascended;
So, they had to ring the curtain down,
And thus, the long satanic reign
In a grand collapse was ended.

THE CITY AWAITING GENERAL GRANT'S ARRIVAL.

The city, as we write, awaits General Grant's arrival. What hour he will get here is entirely a matter of speculation. Barring accidents, he ought to enter the Golden Gate this (Saturday) afternoon. It is true that the City of Tokio is not really due until Sunday, and under ordinary circumstances she could hardly be expected ahead of time, for the Pacific Mail Company's boats are wonderfully exact as to their hour of arrival. During the last two years the seven thousand miles of steaming between Australia and here has been done with a regularity that has not varied to any appreciable extent—no steamer having been more than ten hours under or ten hours over the appointed time. The same is measurably true of the boats on the China line. The capacity of every ship is so well tested by experience, that the performance of each is well known. How many revolutions of the engines it will take to drive the Tokio from Yokohama to San Francisco is known almost to a mathematical certainty. Strict orders are given to make only so many revolutions per minute, so that under average circumstances it is known to within a few hours when she will arrive. If she should meet strong westerly winds, she would be ahead of time. Commanders who have wives awaiting their arrival, like to make port on Saturday in preference to Sunday, and hence we incline to the belief that it will not be Commodore Jeff. Maury's fault if he does not enter San Francisco Bay with his distinguished passenger this (Saturday) afternoon. The city is already for the reception with which it proposes to greet the great General. Bunting is flying in all directions; the city never looked gayer; the local authorities are ready to do their whole duty in the premises, and citizens generally only await the booming of the guns announcing the arrival of the city's guest in order to show their enthusiasm as they have never shown it on the arrival of any other man. It is most pleasant to see the hearty union that has taken place between those who formerly wore the blue and those who donned the gray. This most happy consummation is one of the most agreeable results of the enthusiastic reception about to be accorded to General Grant.

The Ameer and the Massacre.—The opinion that the Ameer Yacoob Khan was a party to the Cabul massacre seems to be gaining strength in England. Should this prove to be the case, and there seems small reason to doubt it, the trouble will assume a more serious aspect than if the butchery had been committed by mutineers, since it will mean a complete renewal of the war. It will, however, be as unfortunate for Afghanistan as for England. Had the Ameer and his officers not been implicated the punishment of the rebels would have been all that the British could have demanded, but when the treachery becomes national the nation must be held responsible. In the recent war Cabul was spared; if it is wicked and destroyed in the coming contest nobody will have much sympathy for its inhabitants.

A GLANCE AT THE GAY CITY.

Along all the business streets below Montgomery, the stores are decorated with flags and streamers and shields inscribed "Welcome to Grant." The Exempt fire-house in Portsmouth square is covered with flags and banners, and large streamers hang from the liberty pole to the roof of the house. On Kearny street the display is very varied. Lines of flags don the street. Some of the individual displays are very fine, notably that of the White House, which is decorated with bunting from floor to roof; the flags of America, France and England are grouped with great taste, the effect being heightened by a liberal use of streamers and evergreens. Flavin, of the IXL, has a fine display of streamers and shields, and a good picture in the center, bearing the inscription, "Our Hero Welcome Home." The United States Treasury is covered with streamers and flags. The triumphal arch at the entrance to New Montgomery street is a very elaborate affair; the pillars are about ten feet square at the base, and are covered with red and white cloth; at the spring of the arch are placed figures representing Columbia, holding the national flag. In the center is a fine picture of the hero of the day, guarded on either side by a U. S. soldier and sailor. Bunches of flowers, festoons of evergreens and gay streamers, make up a whole at once striking and artistic, the only fault being that the great mass of the Palace Hotel tends to dwarf the appearance. Market street is decorated as far as Eighth street, and presents a grand display of bunting between Fourth and Fifth streets; the decorations are very fine, and are brought into prominence by the dead cold exterior of the W. P. C. headquarters, which, being undecorated, look like a dungeon in a row of Sumner-houses. The Republican headquarters are covered with bunting and festoons and drapery. All the theaters are gay with color, the most artistic show being made by the California. On Montgomery street, the Masonic Temple, the Occidental Hotel, Lick House, Nevada Block, the Stock Boards, Col. Andrews', Russ House, Bullock & Jones, all the newspaper offices, British Benevolent Society, Kohler & Frohling, Donohoe, Kelly & Co.; Willey & Co., Le Count Bros.; Selby & Co., Union Club and Coates' ale-house are all handsomely decorated. The principal banks and the State Investment Insurance Company attract the eye by their tasteful adornments, and the public buildings are striking, even in the fluttering splendor of the long streets.

GOOD PROSPECTS AHEAD.

The unanimity of feeling and the lavish expenditure of money in the appropriate reception of General Grant indicate the return of the "good old times" of which all Californians are justly proud. After five years of comparative stagnation, we have weathered the Horn of Adversity and are once more sailing along the Pacific with buoyant spirits and prospering breezes. It needed something extraordinary to start us in motion, and now that the start has been made, let every man do his level best to profit by the agreeable change. We are rid of politics for a while, and, with a conservative government insured, there has never been a more favorable time for the inception of great undertakings than the present. Let capital come out of its retirement, and we do not doubt that labor will meet it half way. All over the East industry is being renewed and extended, and it will be our own fault if we do not join in the national chorus of "Hard Times Come Again No More!" At any rate, let us try, and whether it is a Grant "boom" or otherwise, we opine that none will look the gift horse too closely in the mouth, provided it carries us over the stream.

A "very peculiar, if not unique" case of albinism is recorded in the Lancet. The subject is a girl of eleven years of age, having pink eyes, with the usual photophobia, but hair of a bright-red color.

SKELETON SKETCHES.—No. 7.
The She-Epicure.

When honest Mr. Peter Jerring proposed for the hand of pretty Barbara Miffle, the young lady's father, a shy, careworn man, cleared his throat, and said: "My dear Peter, if I were selling you a horse you would expect me to inform you of any defects it might have, should you not?"

"It would he very kind of you to do so," answered Peter Jerring, civilly.

"It would he my duty to do so," replied Mr. Miffle in a sententious tone; and he sighed. "Well, I am not selling you my daughter, though I shall no doubt derive considerable pecuniary advantage from parting with her; hut I feel bound in honor to tell you of her defects."

"Don't, don't," said love-stricken Peter. "You are, perhaps, a little exacting, as a father—h'm—has the right to he; hut I do assure you Miss Miffles has no faults."

"None to affect her character, that I admit. Barbara is a good girl, and I daresay means well; but, my dear Peter, she's awfully greedy."

"Ah! is that all?

"I am afraid you wou't say 'Is that all?' when you see tbe hills she will run up for you at the confectioner's and fruiterer's. Why, at school she spent all her pocket-money on sweets, and she got into debt besides. Haven't you noticed what a knife and fork she plays at dinner?"

"I have remarked tbat Miss Miffle has a good appetite, but I rather like to see that," said Peter Jerring, with a laugh. "I don't like your namby-pamby girls who are afraid to own that they are fond of steaks and porter."

"If it were only a question of steaks and porter," moaned the sorrowful father. "However, I don't like to put you out of conceit with my girl. I have warned you, and that is enough. After all, you are a rich man, and can well afford to keep an expensive wife."

"I am not rich," demurred Peter Jerring. "But let us hope that with fifteen hundred a year I shall be ahle to keep a table that will satisfy my wife."

"Let us hope so," echoed Mr. Miffle, as if he felt rather desponding on the suhject; and the consent to Peter Jerring's marriage with Miss Barbara having been thus given, the hridegroom expectant left his future fatber-in-law's study and repaired to the garden to join his intended bride. He found her among the strawberry-heds, holding in one hand a cabhage-leaf half full of powdered sugar, into which she lovingly dipped her strawherries as fast as she plucked them.

A most pretty sight this seemed to the amorous Peter, who was of a not unpoetic turn of mind. While he breathed his tale of love into Barbara's ear she went on eating fruit, aud, at the magic moment, wben he implored her to he his, she gracefully gatbered the biggest strawberry she could see (one almost as hig as a small tomato), rolled it into the sugar till it was all white, and then offered it to her lover's lips by way of answer.

"You bite off half of it first," was his softly-murmured prayer.

She sweetly complied, and bit off the higger half, then Peter ate the rest, and in a loving transport pressed the stalk to his white waistcoat, where it made a red stain. This, by a happy inspiration, he forthwith compared to his heart's blood, which he would always be ready to shed, said he, for the girl of his choice.

A month later the teuder pair were married, and Barhara's appetite at the wedding breakfast left nothing to be desired.

Peter Jerring was a young mau of abont thirty, who had nothing to do heyond trying to amuse himself. He owned a fine mausion in a country town, and before marriage had resorted to many honorahle expedients for killing time. He was lieutenant in a rifle corps, Vice-President of a Society of Postage-stamp Collectors, and Secretary to a Soup Club. He was constantly busy ahout work that might well have been left undone; and, in discharge of imaginary duties, he saddled himself with an amount of correspondence that would have appalled a solicitor. He spent quite £50 a year in stamping letters.

In taking a wife, he had cherished the unavowed purpose of increasing his tasks, hy giving hospitality to the numhers of persons with whom he was—to use his own term—"officially" connected—e. g., his brother officers in the rifle corps, his fellow-committeemen of the Soup Club, and the various ladies and gentlemen who collected stamps under his auspices. As to these last, he ratner hoped to become President of the Stampers, and to have the meetings of the club held at bis house every week, coincidentally with a dinner and a party. As soon as bis honeymoon was over, he said fondly to his young wife: "My darling, I want you to manage a nice little dinner for twelve every Thursday evening. The President of our Stamp Cluh is getting beyond his work; if we feed the members of the Board well, I daresay they will promote me to his chair next election-day."

"You shall have nothing to complain of, love," answered Barbara, dutifully; aud the fact is, that she so schoolcd her cook, that her hushand's Thursday dinners soon became things that were talked about reverently hy all who were lucky enough to get invited to tbem.

Barbara Jerring spent a good deal of her time studying the divers cookery-books that have been published since the days of Mrs. Glasse, and she was an expert connoisseur in the science of roasting and boiling. A pretty woman withal; always well-dressed and smooth tempered, she had nothing in her appearance or manner that suggested an addition to menial pursuits; and, though visitors might call at a moment when she was anxiously engaged in rolling the paste for a pudding, they saw no traces of flour on her hands when she flowed into the drawing-room, all spruce and smiling. She therefore passed as the model of a housewife, and her husband thought her such. To be sure, tbe tradesmen's bills that he had to pay after he had been married three months seemed to bim a little stiff; but then how well he had breakfasted, lunched and dined in the meanwhile! Even to the five o'clock teas which Mrs. Jerring inaugurated, and to the little "snacks" in which she indulged before going to bed—everything was perfect. Being of a somewhat dyspeptic habit himself, Peter Jerring had never fairly appreciated food of any sort until he had become a married man; hut Barbara charmed his appetite, as it were. Her dainty side-dishes would have tempted a monk out of his vows of abstinence on a fast-day; and what with her excellently-buttered muffins of a morning, her entrées at noon, her tea-cakes at five, her salmis and supremes at dinner, her consommes and salads at supper-time, Peter gradually became conscious that he was consuming far larger quantities of nourishment than were good for him. He had first one attack of indigestion, then another, and he lost his slimness of waist. As for Barhara, she got plumper and plumper; and, what is worse, the increase in her girth was accompanied by a correspouding decrease in her intellectual vivacity, so tbat a time arrived when she seemed unahle to talk about anything else but eating and drinking. If spoken to about family affairs, she yawned, fidgeted, and answered in languid monosyllables; hut if her husband, licking his lips, said: "My dear, that is a savory smell of truffles coming up from the kitchen," she would rouse herself like a charger at the sound of the trumpet, and hold forth on the divers methods of accommodating the vegetahle-pearl of Périgord, till she reminded one of a Methodist deaconness preaching on an inspired theme from a tub-top.

Now, this was all very well; hut a man requires something more in a wife than that she should be able to expatiate on the art of dishing-up food. Peter, for instance, having won the good graces of the Stamp Cluh hy his Thursday entertainments, was growing anxious about his election to the Presidency, and devoted many arduous hours to the compilation of a memoir which was to be read at the next quarterly meeting of the Club, and which treated of that exhaustive subject, "The growing scarcity of three-cornered Cape of Good Hope stamps." He had some reason to expect that his wife would take some interest in this composition which would set the seal to his fame; but so far from doing so, Barhara, heing one day in want of paper to cut frills for some cutlets, carelessly abstracted the manuscript from his study, and clipped it with her scissors. "I couldn't find any clean paper, dear," said she, artlessly, when caught hy her husband in the very act; "hut, as we are dining alone, paper that has heen written on won't much matter, you know."

"Won't matter?" roared Peter, his first shock of faintness culminating in furious wrath. "Why, it's the labor of three months you are destroying in that fashion!"

"Oh, you can write the essay again; you are so clever," said Barhara, sweetly.

Peter was not appeased. This was his first conjugal tiff, and the accumulated bitterness of many months now burst from his lips. "I have much to complain of in you, Barhara," he cried excitedly; "I saw you at the pastry-cook's again to-day at noon."

"Why, hut I go tbere every day," she answered innocently.

"You go there to eat ices and sponge cakes at noon, when you lunch here at one! Are you utterly insatiable, then?"

"I don't know what that long word means, Peter; but it seems to me that I have every right to eat ices if they agree with me." Thus spoke Mrs. Jerring

"Ah, and I daresay you think yourself entitled to consume sandwiches and huns toward three in the afternoon, when you are going to take tea here at five?" "Perfectly. Why not?"

"And to carry home bags of sweetmeats which you eat in the middls of the night when you awake. I caugbt you at that game last night."

"Well, it's your fault if I wake up in the night—you snore so terrihly!"

"Better and better! Be saucy now," retorted Peter, indignantly. "But pray tell me, now, where the money is to come from for all your gluttonous orgies?"

"From your pockets, I suppose," answered Barhara drily; for her dander was up by this time, and she spoke with the spirit befitting an outraged wife. Her retort, however, only exasperated her husband.

"I'll put you on short commons," shouted he. "We'll dine off plain roast and boiled with a pudding, like others of our station; and you shan't see an entrée except on Sundays. As for truffles——"

He stopped short, for Barbara had cowered under the unmanly threat, and was shedding hitter tears. One is sorry to add that the consequences of Peter Jerring's roughness did not end here, for Barbara's heart and stomach were such tender allies tbat any attack on the latter wrung all the chords of the former, doing deadly injury. At dinner that evening, the aggrieved wife's eyes heing all swollen with weepiug, she could eat nothing. She sat looking mournfully at soup, fish and entrées, hut when the roast came on the sight was too much for her, and she fell down in a swoon. Alas! that swoon was apoplexy; and when the doctor arrived post-haste, he could only certify that poor Mrs. Jerring was dead.

One may imagine the awful self-uphraidings of her husband!

He took his hereavement, indeed, so much to heart that he forthwith resigned his vice presidency of the Stamp Club and his secretaryship of the Soup Committee. How could he hear to talk of stamps or to think of soup, remembering all tbat had passed at his last interview with Barhara? He abandoned himself to preparations for his wife's funeral; and hy way of rendering a graceful homage to the poor departed one's proclivities, he resolved that all friends who attended that sad ceremony should be regaled with a stand-up luncheon.

Speaking to his cook in the mortuary chamher, Peter Jerring discussed the arrangements for this hanquet in a tone of suitable gloom.

"We must havs foie-gras sandwiches. She dearly loved those, and so do I," said he, sadly.

"Sball I put mustard in them, sir," asked the cook.

"I suppose so; isn't it usual?"

"Well, poor missis never let me do so, sir. She said it wasn't the thing. However, there's room for two opiuions about that."

"Ah, well, it's I who rule now, so we'll have mustard," said Peter Jerring.

"Never!" cried an emphatic voice, that seemed to come from the uether world, and poor Barhara, wrapped in her shroud, sat holt upright in her coffin. She had only heen in a catalepsy, and the heresy of mustard with foie-gras had given her a shock which brought hack life. "Never, never," repeated she, with flashing eyes; "and mind, an ordinary loaf won't do for these sandwiches, you must have new French rolls."

"My darling!" ejaculated the penitent hushand, overcome with emotion, and he dropped on his kuees; hut at the same time he did not forget to turn to the cook and say: "Bring up a snack, your mistress must be hungry!"

Since then he has ahandoned himself to his fate. He and his wife are getting to be the fattest couple in these isles. —Truth.

SELF-MADE.

My life began when my coin was spent;
I woke one morning without a cent,
I had health and strength, but nothing more
To keep the wolf away from my door.
It was up hill work for many a day,
And nobody helped me—I pushed my way.

It made me bitter at first, I own,
When my friends forgot me one by one;
It was not my lot to meet or see
The brother born for adversity.
Now the struggle's past and I'm proud to say
That nobody helped me—I pushed my way.

Often with nowhere to lay my head,
Sometimes in want of my daily bread,
Through all my health and courage were spared,
I seldom grumbled, never despaired,
Though my path was dark and my sky was gray,
And nobody helped me—I pushed my way.

I toiled and struggled along, you see,
And reached the topmost branch of the tree,
I climbed alone and alone I stand,
Nobody reached me a helping hand.
The struggle was hard, it was no child's play,
But nobody helped me I pushed my way.

Yes, that is always my proudest boast,
The one upon which I dwell the most—
Yet I've a wish that I seldom own—
It pains me sometimes to stand alone;
I would almost rather have it to say
That some one who loved me had smoothed my way.

San Francisco, September 15th, 1879.

WHO IS MR. EDWIN TURNER, SURGEON OF SAN FRANCISCO?

Alleged Felony by a Surgeon.—Edwin Turner, 33, well-dressed, described as a surgeon, residing in Hastings-street, Hampstead road, was charged with having stolen two pairs of stockings, value 1s. 7d., under the following circumstances. Mr. B. J. Abbott appeared for the prisoner. A boy named Harry Smith, assistant to George Clark, draper and hosier, of 117, City-road, deposed that at about five o'clock on the previous afternoon the prisoner asked to be shown some child's stockings. Then he wished to see others. Having selected what he wished, two pairs were missed. He had seen the prisoner putting his hands inside the breast of his coat; and witness having called his employer, the prisoner was accused, and took the missing goods from his coat. In cross-examination by Mr. Abbott, the boy admitted that the prisoner, when producing the stockings, said that he was absent-minded at times, and might have taken them. The prisoner, when given the bill, did not say that all the things were not down, and call attention to the socks. Mr. Abbott, in defense, said that his client was a surgeon, recently returned from San Francisco, and about to sail again for that place on Saturday next. He (Mr. Abbott) had numerous testimonials to the prisoner's character, and it was certainly unlikely that a man in his position would have committed such a petty robbery. He had bought the socks for his daughter, whom he had brought to England with him, and had plenty of money in his possession to pay for them. He had suffered from sunstroke, and was at times absent-minded. Mr. Bushby, having inspected some of the prisoner's testimonials, said that, under the circumstances, he thought he might discharge him, as it appeared he had not left the shop with the goods.—London Daily Telegraph, August 21, 1879.

SENATOR JOHN P. JONES.

Mr. Jones is once more among us, for the brief interval until Congress shall resume again. However much may have been gained by the passage of the Silver Bill sixteen months ago, there is much for the Senator, with his enthusiastic energy, still to accomplish; and though he is Senator for Nevada, we always look upon him as a son of California, and one of those who, by his energy, generosity and intellectual power is a credit to this State. Because, if he has done much for Nevada, we really believe he has done and is doing more for California. The question of free and unlimited silver coinage is still to be achieved, and the arguments in favor of this course are so strong that we have no douht they will ultimately prevail; and if so, the credit of bringing about this desirable consummation will he due to no man in the United States so much as to Senator John P. Jones. We regret to say, however, that California, which is more interested in this question than perhaps any other State in the Union, has not only done nothing for silver, but bas, in its ignorance, placed obstacles in the way of the wider adoption of silver. Is it too much to hope that enlightened self-interest will teach the people of the Pacific States something of the merits of this question, so that they may not he a drag upon the efforts of the worthy Senator for their own benefit.

A Centipede's Deadly Claws.—Several Mexicans were in camp at the mouth of Memphis Creek, Utah Territory, and were lying about the fire, when one of them, Telestoro Crucas, saw a large centipede, fully nine inches long, traveling slowly over his leg. Knowing that the least motion would make him sink his deadly claws into his skin, without moving his leg he got out his revolver and waited until the beast had almost reached his knee, when, slowly putting the mouth of the pistol to its head, he pulled the trigger, and the centipede was gone. But a centipede's claws are quicker than gunpowder, and Crucas began to cramp in a few minutes; the track of the reptile along his leg began to turn a brownish yellow, and the place where it was killed swelled up frightfully. Crucas rapidly grew worse, and in a little over four hours afterward he died in great agony. But the strangest part of the whole story was, that the bullet from Crucas' pistol cut a small nick in the fore leg of a mule that was tethered near by, and at daylight the next morning the mule was also dead, with the leg so swollen that the skin had burst in several places.—Mountain Messenger.

We call notice to our Pioneer Pianiste's advertisement. Notwithstanding all the new foreign talent, this lady still stands at the fore.

"PLEASURE'S WAND."

"We Obey no Wand but Pleasure's."—Tom Moore.

California Theater.—A. D. 1900 is exactly what it is entitled on the bills, a dramatic absurdity. There is nothing new in the dramatic use of the theme of woman's rights. There are plays and farces by the dozen in which there are women who wear pantaloons and are masculine also in speech and demeanor. The opening act promises a rather minute elaboration of this idea, but the author seems to have become frightened at the immense possibilities before him, and to have contented himself with a few sketchy scenes, sufficiently ridiculous to produce unthinking laughter. There is a plot, but it is flimsy and unfinished. The fun is created by the simple mention of facts entirely contradictory to our present ideas of the proper relations and occupations of the sexes. There should have been some attempt at dressing the characters in accordance with the expressed condition of things. But, after all, there is enough in the performance to make all laugh, and that is what the public demand. Although the parts assumed by Robson & Crane are short and devoid of much dialogue or business, they make up for it by their inimitable humor and fun. Time and practice will enable them to elaborate and improve their characters, and this farce will undoubtedly become one of their best attractions. Not from any particular merits, but because it is laughter-creating. The strong-minded female characters, in the hands of Mmes. Kate Denin, Saunders and Fanny Young, were all admirably and intelligently played. Opportunity was given Misses Harold and Chapman to look pretty, and they had no difficulty in meeting this requirement. In their sporting costumes in the first act they looked very chic; Miss Harold particularly so. It was a pleasing study of the curve. This is the last week of these clever comedians, and their return will be anxiously awaited, provided they bring along some clever vehicle for their comic abilities. On Monday the grand military allegory, The Color Guard, will be produced, under the auspices of Lincoln Post, G. A. R. This spectacle will be continued through the week.

Baldwin's Theater.—Chums has run through its second week to good business. The play has been extensively "cut," and the action is brisker and more satisfactory. The acting throughout is capital, and the scenery elaborate. These two factors constitute the attraction, for the play itself is an atrociously bad one. The plot has merit, but its development is unskilfully and tediously arranged. Mr. Jennings deserves repeated commendation for his "Uncle Davy." It is an exquisite portraiture of a doting, fussy old man, and is alone worth the visit to the theater. The bill for the ensuing week is a varied one. Monday, Won at Last; Tuesday, Diplomacy; Wednesday, Nina Varian's farewell benefit, and Thursday, first performance of Crutch and Toothpick, Sothern's latest success.

Bush-Street Theater.—The minstrels are still drawing large houses. The programme has been slightly varied, but not to any considerable extent. Mr. Rapier, the legitimate tenor of the quartette, sings, "Somebody's Coming when the Dewdrops Fall" with a good deal of sweet pathos. Mr. Roe, the able baritone, has a role which shows his voice to be one of great range of power. Billy Rice presents another specimen of his oratorical abilities, laughable in the extreme. The closing farce is beneath the standard of criticism usually applied to minstrel performances. It is stupid, tedious, without the slightest bit of fun or wit. The coming week will be the last of this troupe. Its engagement has been one of remarkable success. The next attraction will be Oscar Weil's opera of Pyramus and Thisbe, of which more below.

German Theater.—Magda Irschick appeared on Sunday evening as "Griseldis." It was by far the most admirable exhibition of her talents yet given us. The impression produced by her first appearance was but a comparatively satisfactory one. Her renditiou of the Maid of Orleans was rather mechanical and artificial. There seemed to be the indescribable spark of genius wanting. Subsequent appearances of the tragedienne modified this impression, and whatever doubts were left as to her claims as a great actress, were entirely dispelled by her wonderful performance of "Griseldis." It was an impersonation of the highest range of dramatic art, stamped with nature's hand. The support was fair. Next Sunday is Magda Irschick's last appearance. The play chosen is Medea. All admirers of high art should not fail to take advantage of this occasion and witness a truly great artist.

The grand Carnival Ball at the Mechanics' Pavilion excites the greatest interest, and is an assured success. The Pavilion has been superbly decorated for the occasion, with a special eye to the presence of the nation's guest, Gen. Grant, who will be there with his suite and staff. Gen. McDowell, commanding this Military Department, has also been invited and will be present. A special box has been constructed for each of these distinguished officers, and the style of the whole affair is beyond praise. Col. Andrews has multiplied his energies, and drawn largely on his unequaled resources to make this the most brilliant affair ever known in the city.

Tivoli.—Trial by Jury and Pinafore are still running, although this is the eleventh week of H. M. S. The success of this enterprise has been wonderful. To witness clever theatricals while comfortably smoking and quaffing beer is a pleasant, agreeable way of spending an evening, and this seems to be the opinion of the majority of our citizens. The next novelty is The Wreck of the Pinafore, written by Miss Laura Honey. This is a sequel to the other opera, and will be produced shortly.

Grand Opera House.—Pinafore will be played this evening by the Melville troupe for the last time. A large house is expected, as it is for the benefit of the Second Regiment, N. G. C. It is confidently anticipated that General Grant will honor the theater with his presence. Miss Julia Lawton will appear as "Buttercup;" the other characters in the same hands as during the five weeks' run at the Standard. There will be a large chorus and a whole company of marines.

Pyramus and Thisbe.—The careful and minute rehearsals this opera is receiving insures a complete performance in all respects. The joint appearance of Mrs. Kelleher and Mr. Ben Clark is a musical treat. The chorus singers are undergoing rigid drilling under Mr. Stephen Leach's direction, and the scene painter and costumer are actively busy. The first performance of this local opera is announced for Monday, Sept. 22d.

People that are invariably known by the company they keep—Theatrical managers.

Chit-Chat.—The Union Square is to have a new drop-curtain, representing Wagner's Chariot Race.——Sothern is drawing immensely at the Park, New York, with —— Brother Sam!!——Daly's Broadway Theater is to open with Newport; The Swimmer, the Singer and the Cipher. This is a farcical comedy, adapted from the French play of Niniche.——Capoul is singing in opera houffe, in New York. He opened as "Ange Pitou," in La Fille de Madame Angot. Our favorite Jutean takes a hack seat, and sings "Pomponnet."——At Boucicault's Booth's Theater, there are comely small boys, in the tastiest sort of toggery, who administer fans, programmes and soda, or other water, to the pampered audience.——Enchantment at Niblo's, is a great success, as far as scenery and ballet go. On the opening night there was an incipient panic, caused by a small fire on the stage. The audience behaved well, and no trouble occurred.——Chizzola is to play Ristori and Salomi together in this country, next season.——Edward Sothern, Jr.—son of "Dundreary"—goes on the stage with John McCullough. He is only about twenty-one.——Several accidents having lately occurred at the Folies-Bergires, Paris, with the lions there exhibited, the Prefect of Police has forbidden the tamers from performing.——Very true. Stuart Robson says: "Five or ten years from now we shall have no actors worthy of the name, simply because they will have played only a few parts and will not have acquired that readiness, grace and dexterity which were the results of the old methods."——Patti told Minnie Hauk she liked her "Carmen" immensely.——Charles Reade is a grand, fine-looking man, of middle hight, with iron-gray hair and heard, and large, dark eyes of remarkable beauty. In manner he is rather cold but courteous, and especially likes to meet with and talk to Americans.——Rose Wood was in Philadelphia a week ago. She looks very well.——Stuart Robson is forty-three, and has been on the stage twenty-six years.——Barrett has three charming daughters.——May Hart was one day last week married to Charles W. Brooke, Esq., at the country residence of a mutual friend.——Miss Frankie McClellan took Miss Harold's part in "A. D. 1900." for several nights, owing to the latter young lady's indisposition, and did it very satisfactorily.——The theaters are all doing well this week, the city being filled to repletion with country cousins, who have come to witness the reception of our country's first citizen.——"A. D. 1900" was played some three years ago by local amateurs, under the name of "The Spirit of '76." Its author was then given as Mrs. Curtis.

The late R. B. Woodward's will has been admitted to probate at Napa. It names Isaac Hyde, of this city, executor in the first instance, William Woodward in the second, and Samuel Cowles in the third. All property, of whatever nature, is bequeathed to the executor, in trust, to pay debts, etc., to purchase lands and so forth, to collect and pay over rents, etc., and to divide the estate, share and share alike, between the widow and children of the deceased at the time the youngest child, a girl of fourteen, shall have become of age. William Woodward is appointed guardian of the children. Mrs. Woodward and children are to receive a fixed sum monthly, and an additional sum if Oak Knoll, Napa, is made the permanent home. The will was signed in San Francisco, September 28, 1865. A codicil, added October 13, 1875, gives the executor the estate coming to deceased as heir of his parents, and requires him to pay this over to deceased's sister, Mrs. A. S. Goff, of Providence, R. I. Property on Arnold street, Providence, is left to Mrs. Woodward. The heirs are the widow, three daughters and one son, and the estate is valued at $900,000.

The Illinois papers come to us with very flattering notices of the accomplished young aspirant for dramatic honors, Miss Henrie L. Bascom, who left California but a few months ago for professional study. She has displayed powers of a high order, both in deeper and more tragic parts, and in light and sparkling comedy. Her last performance was at Atlanta, on August 23d, and the following Wednesday she left for New York, where a brilliant career is, we trust, before her.

SPORTING ITEMS.

Swimming.—The tournament at the Terrace Baths, Alameda, last Saturday, was quite a success. Every event passed off in good style excepting the professional race, which was a tame affair, giving Flemming almost a walk over. R. L. McPherson won the gold medal for boys. The half-mile swim, for amateurs who had never won a prize, was won by Albert E. Greenus; R. Melrose taking second place. C. Dall took first and C. D. Haven second prize for plain diving. Solon H. Williams won the senior amateur medal, J. Spring taking second; Harris a good third. J. Hammersmith won the medal for fancy diving, giving a splendid exhibition. Superintendents Smith, Cunningham and Williams, of the Neptune Club, deserve great credit for their exertions to make the tournament success ful. The judges were J. S. Knowlton, T. W. Fenn, J. Conroy, J. H. Dey, G. Durbron, J. Martin and Mr. Simmonds. Their decisions gave universal satisfaction.——The great fifty-mile swim, at Newport, was won by Schoner, of Brooklyn. W. H. Daily, the California champion, lost his chance in the race by injuring his knee very severely. Daily's friends here, sympathizing with his misfortune, desire to get up an exhibition for his benefit, and will have a meeting on Sunday at the Neptune Club House, North Beach, to consider what steps to take regarding it. All lovers of aquatic sport and admirers of a man who has proved his heroism by saving twenty persons from a watery grave, are invited to be present and assist.

Pedestrianism.—The competitors for the great six-day walk are all working hard to get in good fettle for the race; some of them we have seen look fit to walk for a kingdom. Of course, they are all confident of getting at least second place, and show a commendable feeling of confidence. It is early yet to pick out favorites, and the task being made more difficult by the large number of men entered who are as yet unknown to pedestrian fame; but the man who looks for the winner from among those who made a place in the late contest won't go far a-field.——La Chapelle won the six-day walk at Platt's Hall, that finished last Tuesday; her score for 142 hours was 257 miles, Von Berg making only 184. We hear that Von Berg will enter the next ladies' walk at the Pavilion, to retrieve her reputation.——Steve Brodie failed to make 250 miles in 75 hours, the distance credited to him being 222 miles and 24 laps, but he is not entitled to any record. He will walk against horses at the Pavilion, after the pedestrian contests close.——At a recent six-day go-as-you-please in Dundee, Scotland, where the walking-time was limited to fourteen hours a day, W. Hughes covered 402 miles.——Fred Davis has failed to put up the coin to run Archie McComb a 100-yard race. Archie is now in town.

Shooting.—The quail season opened last Monday. Reports from all parts denote plenty of birds. The Sportsman's Club secured the services of Sergeant McKenna to look after any unprincipled persons who were too impatient to wait for the season to open. The result was that four law-breakers were arrested, but the brilliant legal talent of our Police Court Prosecuting Attorney found a loop-hole for their escape, and proved that their cases be dismissed.——Good bags have been made at Crystal Springs, past the Seventeen Mile House. At Searsville, about seven miles from Menlo Park, quail are plentiful. At Congress Springs here is good shooting. J. M. Shafter's Ranch, in Marin county, is well stocked, but permission must he obtained from the owner, who is always ready to grant favors to sportsmen, but not to pot-hunters. Around Bonas all kinds of game are plentiful and free to all. Duncan's Mills and up on Russian River afford good sport. Napa City, Calistoga and St. Helena are easy of access, and will reward the hunter who does not mind a little tramping.

Rowing.—The Dolphin Club had a hall and reception at Platt's Hall Thursday night. It was a very enjoyable affair.——All the clubs will turn out to meet Grant. They will form a procession. About twelve crews will participate.——Whitehall boat race at Saucelito on Sunday, for an advertised purse of $100.——The different crews are hard at work practicing for the St. George and Columbia regatta.——Amongst professionals challenges are flying round at an unprecedented rate. Hanlon, Trickett, Courtenay, Riley, Elliot, Boyd and Higgins all want to meet one another.——Elliot has put up a forfeit of £50 to row Hanlan over the Thames or Tyne course, for the Sportsman's Challenge Cup and £200 aside.——Elliot also wants to meet Boyd or Higgins for £200 aside.——Hanlan and Trickett have not yet agreed on their race.

Baseball.—The long looked for game between the California and Knickerbocker clubs will be played at the Recreation Grounds, Sunday, at 2 P.M. The Star and Eagles will play at the same grounds, Sunday, at 2 P.M.——The Hop Bitters club, of Rochester, are in town: Messrs. Higham, Manniug, Leonard Lewis, Murham, McClure, Leary, Morrissy, Cory and Rowen comprise the team. Joe Simmons is their manager.——The Phœnix and Metropolitan clubs play at the Recreation grounds to-day.——Mr. Kelly goes East next week to meet the Chicago club.——Last Sunday the Omahas defeated the Knickerbockers; score, 6 to 5.——The game between the Oaklands and Athletics gave a victory to the former; score, 5 to 2.——A game was played by the Gattling Battery and MacMahons, the former heing the victors; score, 7 to 5.

Yachting.—People who sneer at this sport as a useless waste of money are now breaking their hearts because they have no yacht, and can get no invitation to take a trip on one to welcome Grant. Some ill-advised and malicious remarks, respecting one of our prominent yachtsmen and his love of the sport, have appeared in a daily, dirt-collecting apology for a newspaper, but we are glad to see our best citizens repudiate them utterly, and feel indignant at such a breach of common decency.——The procession of the yachts of both clubs, to welcome Grant, will be a sight long to be remembered.

Archery.—The late tournament has given another fillip to this splendid sport, and we hear of new clubs heing formed all over the State, and of regular practice and splendid shooting by the old ones.——What were Doughty Dan and his cohorts about that we did not hear from them at Sacramento?

Fishing.—The pastime is being neglected now that the shooting season is open, but if any one wants a fine catch of salt water fish let them take a boat and try around Alcatraz. Their reward is certain.

ART JOTTINGS.

Great attention is being paid just now to Decorative Art. Every one seems busy, generally with paper cambric, cotton flags, and atrocious portraits of the man they desire to honor. We had an idea that no further evidence was wanting to display the very bad popular taste for art existing in San Francisco than the decoration of Lotta's Fountain, but the various portraits of Gen. Grant to be seen about the city puts that botch in the shade, although executed by the same artist.

One of these execrable daubs was, early in the week, placed in position at the Republican headquarters. It has since been taken down, as every one thought, for repairs, but it has found a place over the door of the Bulletin publication office.

The daily papers generally have paid a good deal of attention to decorating their various premises, and the amount of originality displayed is, in each case, truly indicative of the character of the journal. While one has set, presumably, the same code of signals used on like occasions since the spring of '49 and fall of '50, another gives evidence of its originality by decorating its premises in a most beautiful and tasty manner, quite different to any one else.

The decorations, as a whole, are not what they ought to be in a city like this. The patchwork business is carried too far altogether by the vulgar display of cheap flags—little nasty things which would disgrace a respectable child's play-house, and, if common report be true, contracted for by the municipal authorities, wiggle in the breeze by the thousand and ten thousand upon each succeeding festive occasion; and then paper cambric should never be used as a decoration; it is vulgar, as much so as would be a gown of the same material worn by a woman. Upon the death of a public man, the use of such stuff in draping is permissable, because such a display becomes a public necessity, and the great cost of better material in such large quantities prohibits its use; but bedecking our shops and public buildings in red, white and blue, (and such r., w. & b.), is not a necessity. Our people generally can learn something about decorating a building by taking a look at the front of the White House. They will observe that the grouping of colors properly is a fine art. They will note too that setting a flag at the proper angle adds vastly to the effect.

Art matters are, it seems, slow. During the absence of the writer quite a number of paintings have accumulated at the various depots, which will be noted in due course. The School of Design is again open, with a good attendance.

A new Art Gallery has been started by Messrs. Schwab & Breeze; on Market street, opposite the Palace. Mr. Schwab was late of the firm of Morris & Schwab, and Mr. Breeze was for many years with Snow & May.

STONE HAMMER OR AXE.

Our widely famed geologist and assayer sends us the following morceau:

1124 Greenwich St., San Francisco, Cal., U. S. of America.

Dear Sir: It affords me pleasure to send you a cast of an Ancient Stone Hammer or Axe, which I hope will prove interesting. The original was found near the "Yellow Jacket Mine," Oro Blanco Mining District, Pima County, Arizona, in the fall of 1877, and brought to S. F. by Gen. George W. Deitzler, who presented it to me. I would call your attention to the remarkable symmetry of this axe. It is evident that much labor has been expended to make it shapely and beautiful, showing that the pre-historic race hy whom it was made had advanced beyond the age of the rude unpolished stone implements which are not uncommon at the same locality. The Ancient race has left many evidences of its higher civilization, which should be carefully preserved and studied. Taking it for granted that this relic would prove of interest to Archaeologists at home and abroad, I have had these casts made for distribution.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully yours,

Henry G. Hanks.

"The World," the Flesh, and the Devil.

[By a Truthful Penman.]

A telegram was received in Colorado, a few days since, directing the proper authorities to arrest a young man who, it was alleged, had run away with his aunt. "I have an order for your arrest," remarked the officer, addressing the supposed criminal. "For what?" "You have been running away with your aunt." "My aunt! Why, she's my wife!" "But wasn't she your aunt before she became your wife? You see, we don't tolerate those kind of goings-on in Colorado." "I suppose you never were in Utah?" remarked the young man, after he had completed his survey of the detective. "No." "Well, as you don't understand the relations of aunt and nephew in that territory, I suppose I ought to explain them to you, and then, perhaps, you may see your duty plainer. My father married my mother." "I suppose so." "Then he married her sister," continued the stranger, without heeding the interruption. "Then he married the sister of his brother-in-law. Then the daughter of his uncle, who was a cousin to his first two wives, then he married her sister, who was the widow of one of his first wives' husbands; then he married her daughter; and a son of this wife married my sister, who was also a widow of one of the other wives' sons. I suppose you are following me," interjected the narrator. "Marry your aunt or your grandmother either, or both of them." "And you won't arrest me?" "No, you might be your own father!"——It is a pity that the English railways, with their diminished receipts and decreased dividends, cannot find some new source of revenue. One of the most fertile sources of revenue in France is a good pilgrimage, which benefits not only the railways in the immediate neighborhood, but even those at a distance. For instance, where last year the northern provinces of France only supplied eighteen hundred pilgrims to Lourdes, this year they have sent forth no less than three thousand five hundred. Naturally, for a pilgrimage to turn out a genuine success, it must be under excessively good patronage; this year the maimed, the halt and the blind were under the immediate care of the Countesse de Pierrefitte and Mdlle. de Fontenay. This one excursion will profit three companies—the Nord, the Orleans and the Midi. The Orleans company, although only charging half-fares, made in one day 103,000 francs. They had to put on no fewer than five special trains, the earliest starting at some unearthly hour. The trip lasted from Wednesday to Monday; and refreshments, both corporal and devotional, were provided at various stations. Might not the Anglo-European Bank take this into serious consideration, and enter into combination with English railways to establish some attractive shrine?——The enormous gooseberry no longer expands; the shower of frogs falls flat; even the sea-serpent fails to interest; but a provincial editor has had a very happy thought enter his head in this silliest of all seasons—viz., the ascent of Mont Blanc on a bicycle.—— Our English railways are passing through the phase which has been successfully tided over by the American companies. Our times of depression have been much less severe, however; and the fact that the loss in net revenue over the half year has been only £100,957 is gratifying. It is scarcely probable we shall have another season so unfavorable for passenger traffic as the last; and as trade revives, goods traffic must improve.—The World.——The Missing Link.—The brilliant idea of saving eighty millions sterling of English capital from hopeless ruin by constructing a line of railway that will restore five great American and Canadian companies to prosperity through the magic of "Western connections" is reported to have assumed practical form. The new line (160 miles long) running between Williamsport and Salamanca is, it is reported, to be constructed with capital furnished by an independent company. Thereby the missing link will be supplied, and the Grand Trunk and Grand Western Railways of Canada, the Central of New Jersey, the Philadelphia and Reading, and the Atlantic and Great Western Companies will gain a new lease of life.—The World.——America, as everybody knows, is a country where, in matters of money-making, "lightly come, lightly go" is a favorite maxim. Nowhere are fortunes more rapidly realized, lost with so light a heart, and, when gone, so quickly replaced by others. Nowhere is personal expenditure so lavish and luxury so cultivated by those who have the means to expend on magnificence in person, dwelling and surroundings. The luxury of these "new rich" sometimes takes the most fantastic and extravagant forms, rivaling anything told of old Rome, of Oriental Sybaritism, or of the prodigal waste under the Second Empire. At a recent dinner given in New York, we are told, the apples were computed to have cost eighteen dollars each. As for the peaches, they developed an altogether new and unexpected feature. They bore the monogram of the owner, traced distinctly in their velvety bloom. The process is described thus: Letters cut from paper are pasted on the peaches while growing. When the fruit is ripe, on removing the paper the letters are found picked out in the most delicate green, the rest of the fruit being rosy and deep-hued. This ingenious device may be commended to the notice of English horticulturists, and, of course, mottoes, anegrams, even declarations, might be managed among the "surprises" for desert.—Court Journal.——A somewhat extraordinary circumstance in horse-breeding occurred at the Roscommon Horse-show last week, when one of the exhibitors, Mr. Taaffe, won three first prizes with representatives of three generations of the same family.——The Queen's Bench Prison is advertised for sale. A speculator has the brilliant idea of purchasing the premises, in order to turn them into a club for the declasses, under the style and title of the Sponging House. Nobody is to be eligible for membership unless he can prove that he has compounded with his creditors, served a term as a financial purge, failed to meet his engagements at Tatt's on a settling-day, sojourned at Boulogne-sur-Mer, or has done something of a kindred nature. The atrium of the building is to be graced with busts of Dick Sheridan, Theodore Hook, and of him who was once known as "the first gentleman in Europe." All orders are to be strictly accompanied by prepayment in bullion. We can foresee that this will be the jolliest rendezvous in town, and a most successful venture for the promoter. As in Australia, in the last generation, it will be considered excessively bad form to make any allusion to personal antecedents. There is just one dangerous feature about the undertaking: too many men may ruin themselves temporarily in order to qualify for admission.—The World.——The Whitehall Review says: In the person of Dowager Lady Lichfield has passed away nearly the last of that once powerful clique of aristocratic dames, the Lady Patronesses of "Almack's." Lady Kinnoull and Lady Westminster now are the only survivors of that body to whose mysterious and unwritten laws all the belles and beaux of the last generation had to submit. Among other rules, there was one laid down by their ladyships that no one was to be admitted to their halls at Willis' Rooms after twelve o'clock. On one occasion the "Great Duke" arrived at the doors a few minutes after time; but even the conqueror of Waterloo had to submit, and was obliged to bow to the sway of ten fair ladies. So at least Lady Clementine Davies states, in her amusing "Recollections of Society."

HAPPINESS.

"See! there she is; down there, down there;
That's Happiness," cries Hope; "for, see!
What crowds rush on, her smiles to share,
From kings to men of low degree."
Cries Hope: "Beyond a doubt 'tis she.
But quick! for we've no time to spare;
She's waiting for us there, down there,
Down there, down there!

"See! there she is; down there, down there;
Beneath the spreading boughs reclined—
Dreaming of beauty ever fair
And love that's always true and kind.
How happy they such dreams who find!
But quick! for we've no time to spare;
She's waiting for us there, down there,
Down there, down there!

"See! there she is; down there, down there;
'Mid country scenes so bright and calm—
Children and corn-sheaves everywhere;
Rough courtships, too, but where's the harm;
How happy he who owns a farm!
But quick! for we've no time to spare;
She's waiting for us there, down there,
Down there, down there!

"See! there she is; down there, down there;
Her Ecce Signum—L. S. D.
What pride in yonder millionaire;
Who wins so much respect as he?
How happy must a banker be!
But quick! for we've no time to spare;
She's waiting for us there, down there,
Down there, down there!

"See! there she is; down there, down there:
She marches to the drum and fife,
And hears the cannon's voice declare
The fame that waits on mortal strife.
How happy is a soldier's life!
But quick! for we've no time to spare;
She's waiting for us there, down there;
Down there, down there!

"See! there she is; down there, down there;
Where jolly tars the anchor weigh.
Smooth is the sea, the wind blows fair,
With rainbow tints the heavens are gay.
How happy in that ship are they!
But quick! for we've no time to spare;
She's waiting for us there, down there,
Down there, down there!

"See! there she is; down there, down there;
Where clouds receive the setting sun."
"Ah!" said the tired man, "I swear
With useless journeys I'll have done;
Indeed, I'm now too old to run.
But, children, you who've time to spare,
For you she's waiting there, down there,
Down there, down there!"

A STARTLING LETTER.

The "Athenæum" has been favored by a correspondent sending a startling letter, received from Miss M. Betham-Edwards, in which occurs the following passage: "I send you the following particulars of a recent scientific invention, just patented, and destined without doubt to play a very important part in our economic history. I think it must he regarded as a solution for once and for all of the great coal question, or rather fuel question, not only among ourselves but abroad. M. Bourbonnel, of Dijon, the celebrated lion and panther slayer, lighted upon the following discovery hy hazard, and, after six years' persistent investigation, brought it to entire "workahle" perfection. He discovered, hy means of two natural substances, inexhaustihle in nature, the means of lighting and maintaining a fire without wood or coal; a fire instantaneously lighted and extinguished; a fire causing no dust, smoke or trouble; a fire costing one-tenth at least of ordinary fuel; and, what is more wonderful still, a fire the portion of which answering to our fuel is everlasting, that is to say, would last a lifetime. M. Bourbonnel's iuvention comprehends hoth stove and fuel. The fires could be on the minutest scale or on the largest. They would be used for heating a bahy's food or for roasting an ox. Being lighted instantaneously, they will be a great economy of time. M. Bourhonnel at once patented his invention, and a body of engineers and savants from Paris visited him and pronounced his discovery one of the most remarkable of the age. He has had several offers for the purchase of the patent in France, but wants to sell it in England, his own occupation heing in another line. Any English gentleman or firm wishing to see his fires and stoves could do so hy writing to him a day or two beforehand. His address is M. Bourbonnel, Dijou. . . . I have seen these fires and stoves. There is no mistake about the matter. It is as clear as possihle that here we have a perpetual and economical source of fuel. Two hundred years ago the discoverer would have surely been hurnt as a wizard."

A curious survival of an old-time institution exists in some remote places in England, viz., the official ale-taster. The ale-taster takes an oath to "try, taste and assize the heer and ale put on sale" in his district "whether the same be wholesome for man's body." The old ale-taster's method of "analyzing" beer for the purpose of detecting the addition of sugar to the liquor was rather primitive. Like most men in those times, he wore leather breeches, and, when he went to test the ale for the presence of sugar, a pint of fluid was spilt on a well-cleaned bench, and the taster sat upon it till it dried. If, on rising, the seat of the breeches stuck to the hench, then sugar was present, hut if not the heer was pure.

THE WATER QUESTION.

The question of the purchase of Spring Valley, by the present occupants of office, is dead and buried beyond the power of resurrection, and as it would be idle to discuss that view of the subject, we have no intention of doing so. But the broad question as to the advisability of the city owning its own water works is one that the Legislature will have to pass upon ere long, and it ought to be taken up and discussed thoroughly, with a view to the cultivation of a correct public opinion. The people of the city ought to arrive at something like a common understanding as to what they want and why they want it. No doubt the reason of recent failures to settle the question was owing to an absence of any such opinion. The matter had not been sufficiently ventilated in public. The pros and cons had not been gone into at length before the whole people. Without that kind of discussion which forms a public judgment it is hopeless to expect a final settlement of so vital and so large a matter. Individual commissioners may be never so well satisfied of the wisdom of a certain course, but, unless they have taken the whole people into their confidence and satisfied them also of its wisdom, it is useless to attempt to proceed to definite operations. In short, this matter must be settled by the majority, and it is essential to such a settlement that the majority take it in hand, discuss it in all its bearings, and thus arrive at a well-considered, correct, definite and determined conclusion. The sooner it is taken up in that way the better. It is a question that requires to be settled one way or the other. If the company is to continue to supply the city, let that fact be determined, in order that proper arrangements may be made for the city's future needs, for further arrangements will soon be imperatively required. Additional reservoirs, new mains, etc., are all essential. On the other hand, if the city is to own its water works it will be true economy to determine that fact at the earliest possible moment. The city is growing, and existing works are proportionately increasing in value. Money is comparatively cheap these times, but no one can predict how long it will remain so. At any rate the matter ought to be taken up at an early date. The papers, now that the election is over, find little of interest with which to fill their editorial columns. Here is a "live" subject that may well engage their attention. It is a good time to discuss it when there are no elections in view. It can now be considered calmly and dispassionately, and without suspicion that everybody's election to office is affected thereby. Our own view is that the city could borrow the necessary capital at a very much lower rate of interest than that which it now pays the company, in the shape of water rates. We pay eight per cent. upon a capital said to be greatly in excess of the actual cost of the works. We could borrow, probably, at about four and one-half per cent. The difference would be the amount of the city's profit upon the transaction. We think that consideration alone would justify a final judgment in favor of San Francisco owning her own water works, as nearly all other large cities do. But there are further reasons of an economical, sanitary and domestic character that will suggest themselves to practical minds, which need not be enlarged upon now, for our present purpose is not so much to treat of the subject itself as to point out that it ought to be treated of by others, and that it would be well to reach some common understanding upon the matter. Considerable money has recently been spent in examining the subject, and materials ought to be at hand that would materially assist in making up a public judgment. In regard to the existing company, it may be set down as a fact that it does not wish to sell its works if it can be let alone to enjoy a fair income from them. If, however, the city concludes to own water works, then Spring Valley would prefer to sell, as, of course, it would not desire a competitor. That is the present status of the water question in a nutshell. The future of the question will necessarily have to be determined some day, and the present seems a peculiarly opportune occasion for considering how it ought to be determined.

REVIVAL OF BUSINESS.

The business outlook is promising, and if every man will do his best to bring about good times they will soon be here. Croakers at this time ought to be silenced, or, if they will speak, they ought not to be listened to. It is croaking that has done not a little of the mischief. Evil predictions often produce their own fulfillment; they destroy confidence, and the withdrawal of confidence causes the retirement of capital and the coming of hard times. We have had our fill of evil predictions. The organization of the workingmen was to produce all sorts of imaginary ills. The passage of the new Constitution was to cause manifold disasters. Neither event was desirable, but both together were insufficient of themselves to seriously retard the prosperity of the State. The evil predictions concerning them did most mischief. Well, now we have experienced both—the Workingmen are organized and the new Constitution has become the supreme law—and yet things go on as usual; nobody and no interest is seriously hurt. The elements of prosperity are still all here, and men pursue the old methods of making money and of spending it. Property is safe and capital is in no danger. Hope, that springs eternal in the human breast, was never more buoyant than now. The signs of revived activity in business circles may be observed on every hand; there are fewer idle men throughout the country than at any time during a long while past. The great manufacturing interests of the country show renewed vitality; the hum of machinery is affording agreeable music to millions. Bountiful harvests have generally rewarded the husbandmen of the country, and, what is better, there is an active export demand for our surplus products at remunerative prices. The mines are yielding well in many new places, and there are promises of big things in the immediate future. Gold is flowing into the country in payment for our superabundant products. The balance of trade is largely in our favor, which it never has been before since the war. The clearing-houses show that the volume of business is 18 per cent. greater than it was this time last year. There are evil omens in many other lands, but in ours there are no such signs. Indeed, the misfortunes of others are likely to prove advantages to us. The destruction of the crops in England and elsewhere will give us better markets. In all the world besides, there are no such excellent prospects as are here everywhere apparent. We have good reasons to be hopeful and expectant. Good times are upon us, and the sooner we realize that they are, and make the most of them, the better.

PARTY INDEPENDENCE.

The question is often discussed, how far the press should be independent of party bias. Newspapers, like individuals, are entitled to their party preferences; but individuals, as well as newspapers, ought to be sufficiently independent of party to be entirely free to tell the truth about it. That is what the great body of the people want to know. The independent press gains respect to the extent to which it succeeds in inspiring the public with a conviction that it stands manfully by the truth as it understands it. It may be in error and yet maintain its own and everybody else's respect; but it cannot cringe to party wrong nor crook the hinges of the knee to the bad nominations of the machine, and yet be deemed honest or truthful, much less independent. The disposition to uphold a party always, and to support every nomination which is regularly made, is the disposition of a flunky, not of a man. The way to make a party respectable is to try to keep it respected, and that is not accomplished by insisting that everything which is done in its name and by its authority is great and wise and good. The duty of even a paper that has strong party predilections is to criticise not less than to sustain party action, and exhortations to party harmony are very apt to be invitations to party disgrace. It is true that a party which is fighting within itself can hardly hope to defeat an enemy; but it is no less true that a party must sometimes fight within itself, or there would be no good reason for fighting the enemy. If a party should suffer itself to be controlled by small men for small ends, why should intelligent men belong to it, or what would be gained by the defeat of the other party? These independent views are gaining adherents among the large city papers. In New York the Times opposes Cornell, and the World criticises Tilden. The Herald gives independent counsel to both parties, and the Tribune has a way of its own. The same is true in other large cities. In San Francisco the press has had a unique fancy to run parties of its own. The Bulletin tried its luck with the "Independents," the Chronicle with the New Constitution Party. Neither succeeded, and it is well that they did not. If they had, they would have abdicated their functions as independent critics. They would, right or wrong, have upheld the products of their own creating. Independent journalism is becoming better understood every day. The more it grows in true independence, the greater will be its triumphs. The News Letter is no man's organ and no party's machine.

WHAT WILL THEY DO WITH HIM?

The capture of King Cetewayo practically puts an end to the war in South Africa. The persistent stubbornness with which the struggle has been carried on by the Zulus has been entirely due to their ruler, but for whose personal influence the war would have been ended long ago. There is no other chief to take Cetewayo's place, and there is every reason to believe that peace will soon be restored upon a permanent footing. The capture of the King is no less surprising than it is fortunate. It was universally regarded as extremely doubtful whether he could be taken at all, but that he would be caught after so short a pursuit is little short of marvelous. It is possible, however, that he voluntarily surrendered himself; though to judge by what we know of his character, this does not appear very likely. What will he done with His Majesty is a question which naturally suggests itself, but is rather a hard one to answer. In a sense he is, and will remain, a prisoner of state, and as such, must be treated with respect and consideration. To simply depose him and allow him to remain in his own country is out of the question, because in that case he would be King again in less than six months. To keep him in any of the neighboring British colonies would be to run the same risk in a scarcely less degree. If he were a semi-civilized potentate he might be sent to England, and there assigned a pension, as has been done before now with Indian princes; but with this old savage such a course seems impossible. Whatever is done with him, let us hope it will be that which should be accorded to a brave and vanquished enemy.

THE COUNT.

The count of the votes in both city and State is a remarkably long time in being concluded. Several important results are not yet distinctly determined. Many persons are anxious to know just how the new Supreme Bench is to be constituted, but at this time of writing it is not possible to tell with exactitude. Ross and Sharpstein are running behind on the Democratic ticket, while Belcher and Myrick are running ahead on that of the Republicans; and it looks as if the latter may yet prove to be elected, and the former defeated. In that case the Court would be constituted as follows: McKinstry, McKee and Thornton, Democrats, and Belcher, Myrick and Catlin, Republicans, with Morrison (Democrat) as Chief Justice. Ross may pull through, in which case Catlin will drop out. That is the way the count looks to us; but as it is still incomplete, and the figures are close, it is impossible to be quite sure of the results. It now appears certain that Berry (Democrat) has beaten McKenna (Republican) for Congress, by a majority of over two hundred. The Workingmen are raising funds for a recount in the city, and claim that it will give them several Supervisors and the County Clerkship.

FESTIVAL DECORATIONS.

The long strings of second-hand ha'penny flags which were used on Independence Day, and again at the Grant Reception, are a disgrace to a civilized community. A distinguished visitor happening here on the 7th of July inquired what it was all about, and being informed, replied: "Well, it is customary for a rash to break out on such occasions, but when the fever disappears the symptoms should disappear also." In fact, these cheap and nasty printed flags should be suppressed as public nuisances and eye-sores. They resemble nothing but the back-yard of a Chinese wash-house. Let the city expend ten or fifteen thousand dollars, if necessary, in purchasing genuine bunting streamers and flags. They will last for years and always look well. No prettier combination of colors exists than the national emblems, and it is shameful to have them made a mockery and scorn. Speaking of devices, the city should have its municipal flag, of the richest materials, to be carried in processions or displayed on public occasions, but we trust it will never again be disgraced with the Brummagim affairs which now offend all ideas of good taste.

Hayes has been making a very "stalwart" speech. Heroic Hayes! and also hasty Hayes, to bid for a little something when Grant is just arriving. It is well done, but avails not. There is no boom possible for a helpless Hayes, let him shake the bloody garment as he will. Who knows or cares to know Hayes?

THE TOWN CRIER.

"Hear the Crier!" "What the devil art thou?
"One that will play the devil, sir with you."

"He'd a sting in his tail as long as a flail,
Which made him grow bolder and bolder."

How many men there are who walk our streets, well dressed, well fed, and to all outward appearance perfectly happy, the source of whose income (if such it may be called) is a puzzle to their acquaintances. It is well known that they have no business, are not employed in any office, and are not (as a rule) maintained by anybody. How, then, do they live? Speculate in stocks? No; that requires a capital to start with, and it is a well-known fact that the only capital that these men have is unlimited cheek. A cheek which no amount of snubbing can cause to blush, and from whose oleaginous surface a hint glides off like a drop of water from a duck's back. This is their sole stock in trade, and a wonderful market San Francisco affords for this commodity. Women fall before its forcible blandishments, mistaking it for high courage, while men are surprised by it into defeat, and only when the possessor of the unlimited cheek coolly jingles their twenties in his pants' pocket do they realize its potency. We could point out a dozen of these enigmas in one stroll down the street, and goodness only knows how many there are who do not come within our ken. Can any one explain how these men thrive while far better men are out at elbows and glad to take a five-cent beer and a cracker as an equivalent for breakfast and an apology for dinner. We propose in the course of a week or so to produce a series of pen pictures of some of the most notable of these well dressed, do-nothing enigmas, and intend that the description shall be so faithful as to leave no doubt as to the identity.

An uncommonly lively specimen of the Mephitis Americana, which both nostrils recognize as skunk, was seen on Wednesday afternoon in the neighborhood of Commercial and Montgomery streets. The high-bred air of the distinguished stranger speedily drew together a mob, mostly workingmen of tender years, who divined, with natural instinct, that they had before them the last of the Honorable Bilks, on his way to the Chronicle office, his bosom swelling with bitter memories and griefs too long restrained. They gathered about him, as rough spirits will, and hustled him with jeers and mocking laughter; but the noble creature passed upon his way regardless, save for a lion-like movement of the tail, which spread among them pale horror and dismay, relentless, pitiless, in the breath of their nostrils. So he fared onward to the inner retreat of the live paper, where a member of the police found him, the last of his race, resigned to death, but stern to die as he had lived. So close was the grapple that the officer has been furloughed for a week, and the Supervisors have voted him $10,000 for his heroic attitude and the strength of his smell.

Another convict at San Quentin kills a fellow-prisoner and the public do nothing! This cannot be borne. Almost the only industry left to us is now threatened by this outrageous competition. How is even our natural genius for killing to stand up against the cheaper and baser prison labor? These men at San Quentin are at no expense; they are boarded, lodged, nourished at the public charge, while the hard-working citizen has not only to furnish his own powder and ball, and his own butcher-knife, but to meet the expenses of a family and pay his taxes. If something is not done by the next Legislature to relieve us it will be a moral impossibility for any reputable person to maintain his family and shoot his neighbor, and the business will fall into the hands of the contractors, who farm the convict industry, which is fast eating the manhood out of our people.

On Wednesday afternoon a crowd collected in front of the Chronicle office, but only those with very bad colds stayed longer than possible. At first it was thought that a reporter had been killed. A closer examination and a longer sniff, however, decided the doubtful matter in favor of a skunk. Some boys were leading this sweet-scented denizen of the forest along Montgomery street by a string, when officer Nash rushed in and clubbed the poor beast to death. In its dying moments it left the gallant officer a legacy which will materially interfere, for some time to come, with his natural sweetness. The gallant victor was heard to exclaim, while wiping his club and proudly gazing upon the slain: "And sure it's a purty baste, but by Jasus ain't it strang."

The Methodists respectfully request the Committee of Arrangements not to have the reception of General Grant on Sunday. The Jewish Sanhedrim respectfully request that the reception be on any day but Saturday. Nothing has been heard from the Mohammedans about Friday, nor from the Old Saxons about Thursday, nor from anybody else about any other day. But we respectfully request that General Grant be invited to turn Chinaman, for this occasion only; unless it seems easier to turn the Methodists and the Sanhedrim into Platt's Hall, and let them fight it out between them.

Mr. Langtry, the legitimate possessor of the reigning London beauty, is suing for a divorce. People had almost begun to look upon the beauteous Mrs. L. as public property, and several persons, one at least Royal, have put in especial personal claims. This, Mr. L. won't stand, and says he would much prefer being a frog and living upon the aroma of a duck-pond, than to leave a corner in anything he was fond of for any one else. San Francisco young men take warning, and don't all marry beautiful girls. Pick out the plain ones; they are far easier to find, and less trouble to keep.

The "Evening Bulletin" has come out strongly in the way of decoration. Deacon Fitch sat up all Tuesday night with a bucket of molasses and swab. In the small hours of the morning he completed the noble painting which now adorns the Bulletin office. It is pretty hard to tell who it is intended for, but people who know say that it is very like Pickering in his younger days, ere the golden tints gave way to the insidious dye.

Mrs. Tressimple's husband went out quail shooting on Monday and brought home a nice bag of splendid birds. Mrs. T. says no quail taste so nice as those her hubby kills; there are no nasty shot in them to hurt the teeth.

The potato crop in Ireland is said to be a very small one, so we may reasonably expect the crop of Michaels to arrive here during the next few months to be an extra large one.

One of the noblest results of this outpouring of the National heart towards the great soldier is the quality of the verse which it inspires, unstrained, but capable of improvement by that process. An original MS. by Huart A. Stector has fallen into our hands, and we cannot refrain from giving a few lines:

Hail to the Hero! He comes on the steamer,
He dines in the cabin and walks on the deck;
While I, in the midnight, with taper's wild glamour,
Far fetched and far flying behold the mad wreck.

Yes! still in the twilight thy glories are sounding,
The nations crowd round thee and hold up their hats;
But Time, with his scythe, sees thy vista abounding
With Plenty, her lap filled with corn and her vats.

Supervisors feel hurt at finding themselves nineteenth on the list in the order of procession, in honor of Grant; and rightly, for the more they are put forward the more the public will feel compelled to observe their total unfitness for anything but the extreme tail-end of every respectable gathering. They would like, of course, to hide themselves, as they ought to; but they must overcome their proper and natural sense of shame at finding themselves in the broad daylight, and try to walk upright. We are responsible for their being our officials, and will bear their presence with what stoicism we may.

The value of great men is not to be calculated. Nations must thank God for their hero, as Carlyle says, and find, as they will, that he is of infinite use. For instance, if Gen. Grant were not a great man what would become of all our little spouters and prancers who leap and scream around him? Their occupation would be gone, and we should find them lying all about the streets exploded with suppressed enthusiasm. Our street-sweeping machine would be used up in no time. Let us be thankful for Gen. Grant.

All the wines and liquors at the great banquet are to be of California growth; so the dealers say, and they ought to know. It will be a matter of interest to medical and other scientific men to study the character of the next day's headaches and dead drunks. For once, at least, we shall have something authentic, or nearly so, on the effects of our pure vintages. All the patriot stirs within us, and we burn to offer ourselves as martyrs in this noble cause. Won't somebody give us $25—for a ticket?

Dr. Reich, German red-hot Republican and Workingman, all the hotter because his name is anything but Republican, is spoiling for a little immortality. He says we are making damned fools of ourselves over Grant, who only wants to be Cæsar; but he swears that Cæsar Grant shall find his Brutus, that is, Brutus Reich. Marvelous like to something we've heard before; but Reich has a fitness for the job. Nature has made him a brute, and art may easily do the rest.

Grant was here twenty-five years ago, or thereabouts, and the statistical mind is struck with awe at the thought of the changes which meet his two eyes, now that he returns. Such contemplations are like thoughts of mortality, wholesome for the soul, and Gen. Grant probably enjoys them as well as the statistical mind; but he has a private satisfaction of his own in the reflection that, just as soon as he can get a chance, he will make the best change of all by running away.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., which nobody ever saw or heard of, has telegraphed for Denis Kearney to enter its asylum for decayed nobodies. This is the way of the world. No sooner is a poor devil used up than everybody is ready to help bury him. Now that the Sand-Lot has been taken from the agitator, there is nothing for him but to hide his face and hold his tongue on Susquehanna's banks. He will give tongue no more.

The prison authorities at San Quentin have a very good way of disposing of their troublesome criminals. Two of them quarrel; one is provided with a knife and kills the other. The man who does the killing is hanged, and thus both are shunted without any further trouble. Three have been disposed of in this excellent manner within the last six months. There are several more ready for the knife.

Some indignant youth writes for rope (Denis is out of town) to keep the streets clear while the procession is passing. A simpler way would be that recorded in the "Pasha of Many Tales" of the great procession in the Celstial Empire, which consisted of all the inhabitants of the land, except three blind old women, who were left to do the spectator business. Let the indignant youth fall into line.

Barnum is said to have offered Grant a large premium for the privilege of traveling him around the country. The General gracefully declined to exhibit his "continental polish" under such auspices, but at the same time will deny no free-born American citizen the supreme privilege of gazing upon his manly form, at a small cost. He doesn't seem very dear at $10,000, as times go.

Speculation has fatigued itself during the past two days with trying to discover where the fearful picture of General Grant came from which has been glaring upon the public from the door of the Bulletin office. It resembles nothing human, but sits upon the beholder like a nightmare. Its secret history is this: Fitch was the model, and the artist was Pickering.

One of our "high-toned and elegant" millionaires has not long since visited Europe. A traveled friend asked him what he had seen, mentioning all the noted sights, among others if he had seen the Dardanelles? "Oh, yes," replied old money-bags; "they dined with us the last night we were in Paris."

Rumor has once more killed the Czar of all the Russians; how, is not exactly known. The Czar himself does not know—in fact, says he feels as well as ever. It is had enough to be shot at by Nihilists, without being quietly done away with by the telegraph. "Uneasy rests the head," etc., etc.

The Post says the city looks "like a bride dressed to receive the bridegroom." Now, what a sweetly pretty and novel idea, to be sure! It is to be hoped Mrs. Grant won't be jealous, or the blushing bride suffer much from the consummation of her fond hopes.

The average Stocktonian is said to be a remarkably cautious individual, and no wonder; when the business of one-half the population consists of putting the other into an insane asylum it really looks as if caution were called for on the part of average folks.

"Smell! yes; what is it?" Police Officer—"Chronicle moving, sir!"

NOTABILIA.

THE PEDDLER'S SONG.

Lawn as white as driven snow;
Cypress black as e'er was crow;
Gloves as sweet as damask roses;
Masks for faces and for noses;
Bugle-bracelet, necklace, amber;
Perfume for a lady's chamber;
Gold quoips and stomachers,
For my lads to give their dears;
Pins and poking-sticks of steel,
What maids lack from head to heel:
Come buy of me, come; come buy, come buy,
Buy, lads, or else your lasses cry.

WILLIAM SHAKSPEARE.

Gen. Grant has traveled this wide world over, like old Rosin the Bow, and some day will go to another. He has seen the manners and the cities of many races and tribes, has eaten and drunken with tame men and with wild, under the North Star and the Southern Cross; he has been the guest of the kings and of the great of the earth, and now he has reached San Francisco and Swain's Restaurant, 213 Sutter street, where he has had the most delightful breakfast and dinner he has enjoyed within three years. He has briefly expressed his pleasure at the style, the elegance and the comfort of this model establishment.

Capt. Smith, who is best known as the husband of Horace Greeley's daughter, is lecturing the world on the "True Ideal for American Youth." His theory is summed up by a captious critic in these words: "Strive to become a captain and to earn the name of Smith, and there's no telling what may happen to you." A shorter road to glory would be to find a range that could do better cooking than Montanya's Union, from Jackson street, below Battery; but, though the road is short, thousands have failed, and tens of thousands will fail, in trying to travel it.

Have you ever observed how mad it makes a man with a sore throat because he can't swallow about two hundred and fifty times every four or five minutes.

In the old days of San Francisco, when Eighth street was miles out of town, and the festive grizzly disported himself at the corner of Van Ness and Market streets, sportsmen used to put in, under stress of weather, at the Mission, and get a glass of something cheering. They tell great stories of the old rum and cognac of those times; but it is acknowledged by all that F. & P. J. Cassin's Golden Plantation Whisky is ahead of anything ever put into a glass with water, hot or cold, or straight without.

An ingenious French painter, who was talking about costume with some foreigners, maintained that much of the dignity associated in our minds with the face and form of Washington, was due to the starched cravat about his neck. "Remove that," he cried, "and Washington will descend at least thirty degrees in the eyes of his admirers." Carmany & Crosett, 25 Kearny street, have now on hand an unequaled assortment of articles for neck-wear, so perfectly adapted to face and figure that they bring out the beauty of every man's individuality.

When a young lady wants to appear in a blaze of glory she indulges in a little torchon lace.

It is announced that the King of Abyssinia claims the strip of coast ceded to Egypt in 1877, and threatens, if his claim is rejected, to go to war. The King, who is called Negus at home, very naturally cannot be made to agree with a good Mahometan, to whom Negus is a forbidden indulgence; but the severity of the Prophet's rules has been relaxed with regard to sparkling wines; and Landsberger's Private Cuvée finds favor equally with the Khedive and with his enemy, as the most healthful and delicious of all vintages.

Monday last, as the shameless noon was hammered from the towers of the city churches, four thousand sportsmen might have been seen passing along the streets, with resolution in their eyes, their guns on their shoulders, and in their powder-horns Hazard's F.G, for ducks, and F.F. or F.F.F. for quail. And they have done capital work since they went, for Hazard's has more force than any other brand of powder, and the gun is left very clean after using.

The scarcity of stovepipe jokes this season suggests that the "times are out of joint."

Herbert Spencer, the great English philosopher, is hard at work on his "Psychology," which he hopes to finish before health and strength give out. It seems a miserable thing that a man of great intellect should spend himself in such labor, when practical psychology is within the reach of every one who can purchase one of White's hats, 614 Commercial street. The soul naturally utters itself in the face of the man who wears this perfect head-dress.

Of the six thousand most distinguished men of San Francisco who waited upon the returning hero, not one is wanting to the completeness of Bradley & Rulofson's famous gallery. The value of such portraits as these artists take is merely beyond calculation, for the coming historian of the West will be able to show the very men who made the Pacific Coast the last glory of America. To sit before their camera is to be assured of an honorable immortality.

Now that the warm autumn weather sets in, without fog or mist, ladies naturally bethink them of parasols and sun-umbrellas, and Mr. P. B. Kennedy's store, 232 Kearny street, is filled with customers. His seamless gloves, of all shades and colors, and with buttons from two to eighteen, are exciting the greatest interest, so immensely superior are they to all others.

Asiatic Cholera, Cholera Morbus, Summer Complaint, Colic, Sour Stomach, Diarrhea, and all Affections of the Bowels, incident to either children or adults, are cured at once by Dr. Jayne's Carminative Balsam. It allays the irritation and calms the action of the stomach, and, being pleasant to the taste, is an acceptable remedy to the youngest in the family. Sold by Crane & Brigham, San Francisco.

All who took part in the festivities of this memorable week speak enthusiastically in praise of Napa Soda, which has kept off headaches and fevers. And those drink now who never drank before, and those who used to drink now drink the more.

MY SWEETHEART.

I have a sweetheart firm and true,
She's never cold, she's never coy,
She courts me in her mother's view,
And is as wild as any boy.
Before the world she kisses me,
She's saucy, romping, willful, bold;
And yet I love my love.—You see
She's five years old.

She has a wealth of golden hair,
Ber bright blue eyes with mischief shine,
Her little feet upon the stair
Make music that is half divine.
Her laughter ripples through the place,
And fills it with a joy untold;
She bears God's sunshine on her face:
Dear five years old!

She greets me with the early day
And lifts her lips for me to press;
She wiles my mid-day cares away
With look, and question, and caress.
At night I peep into her nest,
And stroke the little head of gold,
And watch the pliant limbs at rest—
Sweet five years old!

She simply leads the simple life,
The life of love—the life of trust;
She knows not of the outer strife,
She knows not of its toil and dust.
For her the world has no alloy,
Truth reigns supreme; Love's never cold;
Her little life is one long joy
At five years old.

Ah! dearest, you will older grow,
Ere long your dawning thoughts will roam
Far, far in their resistless flow
Beyond the narrow bounds of home.
And yet, howe'er the world may smile,
You'd often barter wealth untold
To be again, a little while,
Just five years old.

SERIOUS THOUGHTS ON THE CHINESE QUESTION.

The Chinese are fast making their way in the Eastern cities of this continent. The era of cheap production is causing a demand for low-priced labor, which they are very willing to supply. The New York Herald has been at some pains to find out what they are doing in that city, and says that, in an incredibly short time, tbey have made a truly wonderful showing. We are told that in 1875 they only amounted to 157, but that now they have reached the number of 2,500, with an increase going on most rapidly. They have, as is their wont, established themselves in a particular quarter of the city, and already amount to a good-sized colony. This is mainly due to the efforts of some leading spirits, who persuaded the Chiuese residents of San Francisco to establish a branch of one of the famous six companies in Mott street. It induced all arriving Mongolians to rally to this neighborhood, which is known as "New China." In Jersey City there are three factories which employ Chinese labor alone. One of them is a shirt factory, another a shoe factory, and the last an establishment for the manufacture of cheap cutlery. It is said that a beer saloon has been established in Hohoken by two Chinamen. This is a most exceptional employment for them to engage in. Ordinarily they neither buy nor sell the liquors of the Europeans or Americans, their vice heing confined principally, if not wholly, to the use of opium, which, by the way, is an evil that has been thrust upon them by a highly civilized western nation. In Brooklyn there are about fifty laundries, six cigar stores, and one grocery. About ten per cent. come from Havana, and the rest from California. Over 95 per cent. of the resident Chinese are known to be engaged in some useful and bonorable business. This is but a heginning. It shows that the Chinese have got a firm foothold, and we know from our experience of them that, when they have once successfully established themselves, their numbers increase at a marvelously rapid rate. Already we are told that the Chinese companies in this city send East every few days a batch of about one hundred. Of these about fifty go to New York, twenty to Boston, twenty to Philadelphia, and the rest scatter as there may be orders for their services. The Herald is responsible for the furtber statement that tbey are marrying extensively, generally Irish women, and a China-Celtic generation is springing up. From all of which it is apparent that moon-eyed John has made another long stride toward occupying his destined position as the workman of the world. We may kick as we like, we may orate at the Sand-lots, and write editorials by the yard, but the inexorable logic of tbe times is, that the nations will buy their labor in the cheapest market, and that is unquestionably China. This may or may not be a deplorable fact, but it is a fact nevertheless. This is an era of cheap productions. The nation that can produce the cheapest will undeniably supply the markets of the world. Competition is already keen, and will grow keener ever day. Labor is the most expensive element in production. Tbe cheaper that element can be obtained, the cheaper will production necessarily be. In that view the Chinese Question is not merely a Californian one, nor even an American one, but will shortly become of vital importance to all manufacturing and producing nations. The Chinese being the cheapest laborers, no one producing nation can afford to ignore their availability any more than it can afford to ignore tbe usefulness of machinery. Tbe people that do either will soon find themselves unable to compete with the rest of the world. That is the inexorable logic of the Chinese Question. We may for awhile shut our eyes, but sooner or later we, and all other producers, will have to awake to the inevitable. As it comes to this, then, that uo one nation can dispense with the cheapest labor any more tban it can give up the use of machinery, it follows that nothing short of a common agreement among all nations will effect the purpose of excluding the Chinese. Even then the end aimed at would not he gained. The desire of workingmen is to avoid competition with Chinese cheap labor. But capitalists have learned the great availability of the Chinaman, and if they can't bring his labor to their capital, they will take their capital to his labor. In other words, tbey will establish manufactories in China for the supply of the world's wants. That would be the sure result of excluding Chinese from our labor markets. We rather think, from workingmen's point of view, the second condition would be worse than the first. It is true that, if there could be an universal agreement, tariffs could he prepared so as to exclude imports from Chiua; but such an agreement would have to be general, for if any one of the favored nations continued to receive Chinese importations, they could be resold and competition delied. Ultimately we reach the conclusion that there can be no successful resistance against the cheap labor of China, unless there is a binding contract entered into by all the rest of the world to exclude not only Chinese labor, but also the products of it. That is a startling proposition, bnt nevertheless it is the only possible way in which the views entertained by the working classes can, in tbe end, be made effective. It would he an extraordinary sight to see all the world arrayed against poor John. The Chinese wall, in that case, would be more effective for inclusion than it ever was for exclusion. It would, in that event, better keep him in than it ever kept its enemies out. Can any thinking mind, conversant with the march of the world's progress, dream for one moment of the possibility of such a universal alliance against cheap labor? The idea is utterly impossible of realization. The conflictiug interests of the nations would prevent anysuch understanding. But, above and beyond all other reasons, the genius of the age in which we live is irresistibly set against the building up of such a wall of exclusion. The thing is impossible. That it should be seriously proposed in the United States—a nation that has been built up by laborers from all countries—is one of the anomalies of the times. Our traditions, our form of government, our literature, and all that we have done, and all that we are, forbid the idea of Americans leading the van in an universal movement against an honest, hard-working, law-abiding and useful race. The Chinaman is already here by reason of the operation of our laws, which guarantee him protection. He is here by reason of Treaty rights; moreover, he is here by right of that higher and better law common to all civilized humanity—the right of asylum to every law-abiding man. There can be no more walls of exclusion between nation and nation. The steamship, the railroad, the telegraph, and the needs of commerce, have leveled all such flimsy partitions. Chinamen are here, and tbey will continue to come, and go, as tbey please; tbey will come in increased numbers as the demand for them spreads; they will go East, North and Soutb, and they will be the beasts of burden of this continent; they will be our common laborers. Our youths must be educated in technical and skilled knowledge—not merely in mere book lore, but in the higher class of mechanics, so that they may know more than Chinamen know, and so occupy a higher plane of industrial life. In that way, room may be made for both; the right man may be fitted into tbe right place. At first there may be many inconveniences, but in the end, we believe, the genius of civilization will find a way to accommodate itself to the new order of things, not only without injury to any, but with advantage to all. The march of progress is irresistible, and may not he stopped until it has conquered the whole earth. Cheap laborers are not an element inimical to that progress, but, on the contrary, are essential to it. They will fall into line, occupy their destined place, and the grand cavalcade will go marching on, gathering force, and adding as it goes to the sum of human civilization.

THE DAY BOOK
FROM
Saturday to Saturday.

London, September 13th. The Home Government telegraphed the Viceroy of India last night expressing approval and gratification at his military arrangements. The political department of the India office here considers it extremely probable that Herat, Badakshan and Balkh will support the revolt, but has not definite news on the subject.——OLDHAM, September 13th.—A meeting of representatives of limited manufacturing companies was held here to-day, at which about four millions of spindles were represented. It was resolved to adopt short time by working alternate weeks, or three days in each week, for one month. Fifty companies, operating two millions of spindles, have decided to go on short time immediately.——HAVANA, September 14th.—A dispatch from Madrid announces that the Government will propose to the Cortes that all slaves will be given their liberty July 1, 1880, on condition of seven years' obligatory labor, with wages paid.——SALINAS, September 14th.—The purchase of the Monterey and Salinas Valley Railroad by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company will unquestionably have a beneficial effect on the town of Monterey. Already a number of men have been engaged as track-layers, and to-day a gang of carpenters will commence work.——LONDON, September 14th.—A dispatch from Ali Kheyl gives the following account of the massacre of the British Legation at Cabul: Four thousand men attacked the residence in which the British Embassy was quartered. The mutineers brought up artillery against it. Major Cavagnari was stabbed in several places, and all the bodies of the dead were mutilated. The Afghan loss exceeded three hundred. The Ameer had other troops who remained faithful, but made no effort to interfere, owing to intimidation by the pirates.——A great tenants' rights meeting was held in Mallow, Ireland, on Saturday. It was addressed by Sir Joseph McKenna and other members of Parliament. Twenty thousand persons were present. Resolutions were passed calling the attention of the Government to the distressed condition of Ireland, and suggesting the establishment of a system of State relief and a general abatement in rents.——A dispatch from Rangoon says the British gunboat has not gone to Mandalay, because it was feared it would be fired upon. The British Resident Minister and his staff will remain at Mandalay for the present.——LONDON, September 14th.—According to present appearances, the distress among the working classes of thickly populated towns in the northeastern portion of England will be intense during the winter.——BUCHAREST, Sept. 14th.—The District Councils have been convoked in extraordinary session, to decide for relief measures for the rural population, who are suffering from famine, caused by the failure of the maize crop.——PORTLAND, September 16.—The work of the construction of the new lighthouse on Tillamook Rock, at the mouth of the Columbia, will commence in a few days.——An invitation has been forwarded to General Grant and party to visit the capital city and the State Fair grounds during the coming fair.——LONDON, Sept. 15.—The Times' financial article says: "General Sickles, in visiting Paris, is said to have in view the organization of a joint French-American Commission, under the Presidency of General Grant, to make a definite combination between the Panama and Nicaragua canal schemes.——NEW YORK, September 15th.—By way of Panama, we have later advices from Lima. The Huascar attacked Antofagasta on the 28th of August. An engagement of four hours' duration ensued. The Huascar silenced the enemy's fire and dismantled their principal battery. The Atlas was damaged, her commander wounded and several killed.——PANAMA, September 15th.—The Star and Herald says: The Chilean fleet off Pisaquay captured a torpedo launch and some torpedoes. Judge Pettis, United States Minister to Bolivia, has returned to Arica from Chile, and rumors of peace negotiations are current in Lima. These involve the cessation of hostilities, the retirement of the Chileans from the disputed territory, and a reference of the questions between Bolivia and Chile to the arbitrament or neutrals. Several vessels in addition to the Gleneig are expected at Valparaiso with arms. They will he met at the straits and go under convoy to their destination. There is a large amount of war material on the Isthmus for both Peru and Bolivia. England will have to import 16,000,000 quarters of wheat this year, against 14,600,000 last year.——NEW YORK, September 16th.—During the past Summer 16,027 cabin passengers left here and Philadelphia in steamers for Europe. This does not include the steamers of the Guion, Wilson and Bristol lines, which would materially increase it. During 1878 more than 20,000 cabin passengers sailed from this port alone. The excess of last year was probably caused by the Paris Exposition.——BERLIN, Sept. 16th.—The Emperor has returned to the capital, having completed his inspection of the Autumn maneuvres.——The Official Gazette publishes a decree dissolving the Prussian Chamber of Deputies. The Minister of Interior also publishes a notification, fixing the election of direct electors for September 30, and the election of Deputies for October 7th.——CONSTANTINOPLE, Sept. 16th.—Telegrams from Adrianople represent that the Mussulmans in Eastern Roumelia are fleeing to Adrianople for protection, and are utterly destitute.——LONDON, Sept. 17th.—The following dispatch has just been received from South Africa: "CAPE TOWN, via ADEN, Aug. 29th.—Marter captured Cetewayo yesterday. Marter commanded a squadron of dragoons."

A pair of ears that go on a head of civilization—Pioneers and frontiers.

"OUR SHEET MARKET."

Business is not pressing since the election and quotations are nearly nominal. In the absence of competitive bids for their influence most of our sheets now "lie in cold obstruction," awaiting a monetary resurrection. The Bulletin-Call and Chronicle are quietly scenting out opportunities for the profitable exercise of their peculiar talents, of which we shall carefully note the gradual development. It is a most unpromising fact for the future of the Pacific coast press that there is so little of honest work—genuine thinking—done by the so-called editors. This is especially the case with country papers. Three-fourths of their editorial space is, as a rule, given to personalities concerning rival Lilliputian journalists, and good Brother Scissors usually furnishes all the other matter. Now and then an attempt is made to write up local industries and prospects for a consideration, and, of course, the accuracy of such reports is almost scriptural. The patent outside and nothing inside weeklies occupy a similar position towards the regular press that guerrillas do towards an army, or shyster lawyers towards the legal profession. They are tolerated for lack of something better, and very seldom, even by accident, represent the popular sentiment of their vicinities, from inability in the first place and disability in the second; disability in this case being caused by doses of filthy lucre administered for specific purposes. Your astute politician always calculates on running counter to these chickadee sheets, and not unfrequently purchases their opposition, knowing that will be of far greater benefit to him than their advocacy of his ideas. We shall continue these researches hereafter, even though it may be necessary to "give the whole business away."

The Napa Reporter asserts that David McClure, by express consent of Denis Kearney, substituted McKenna (Congressman) and Ragsdale (State Senate), Republicans, on the regular Workingmen's ticket for Napa county in place of the regular party nominees, who would otherwise have been elected. It desires to know how much the agitator was paid for his treachery. If this assertion is true, and it can he easily ascertained, the Board of Ward Presidents should depose the drayman at once. The Sacramento Record-Union says the furious attack of the press on Kearney looks suspiciously like a premeditated Grant "boom,' and considers that the General would regret to think his reception arose from a public dislike to Kearney, rather than appreciation of his own military services. The Examiner lavishly abuses Judge Deady, of Oregon, for his recent pro-Chinese decision, and accuses him of bitter hostility to the Irish Catholics, although originally of that race and creed himself. As the case will he appealed to the Federal Supreme Court, there is no need to pile on the agony at present; just wait a hit. The same paper believes that Grant is autocrat of his party, and that if he is not the next nominee for the Presidency, he will dictate who shall he. The Bulletin also attempts to overrule Judge Deady's decision. It opposes the Market-street Railway franchise, and attacks wooden pavements. Its tender—the Call—likewise opposes the railway franchise, which is proof positive that there's money in it. As Dickens' old Salt would say, "The bearings of this observation lies in the application on it." The Post, in noticing certain misstatements of the Rev. Joseph Cook, of Boston, comes down upon that evangelical braggart with proof that while recently in this city his agent presented bills to the Reverends Stone and Hemphill for fifty dollars apiece, for a sermon delivered in their respective churches. Fifty dollars for thirty minutes' labor in the Lord's vineyard is rather steep—almost as much, in fact, as the devil pays a good actor; but Satan always gets the best of things. The Alta calls upon Congress to legislate for the sale of mineral lands in the Sierras, in tracts of from eighty to one hundred and sixty acres, at nominal prices. Unless our memory is astray, ex-Senator Sargent carried through a hill of this nature during his last year in Congress. It applied principally, or altogether, to gravel-mining lands, such as we presume the Alta now refers to; hut it would he folly to sell quartz lodes in one hundred and sixty acre tracts. That would effectually stamp out competition and progress.

The Sacramento Bee says that the State Fair was not a success because it followed too close upon the election; the racing programme was poor, and there was too much old-fogyism in the Board of Directors. What "hoss" did you lose on, Mr. Bee? The Anaheim Gazette says that cane has been grown in Los Angeles County, and sugar produced in small quantities ever since the first settlement. It will thrive in that region provided irrigation is possible, and is one of the most remunerative of crops. The Los Angeles Herald says that Eastern contracts for wines and brandies are larger this year than ever before. In some districts there is a diminished production. The Herald, which, hy the way, is strongly Democratic, compliments Mr. Perkins in a vigorous manner, and firmly believes he will make a good Governor. The Oakland Tribune thinks that in the Mechanic Arts' department of the University some productive interests should be carried on, so as to help poor students through. This benevolent proposition would not work. It has long been tried in the college at San Quentin, hut the moment students are permitted to draw their savings, they invariably decamp. Mechanic Arts are much more practical at San Quentin thau at Berkeley, hut the society is rather less cultured. Our contemporaries in San Jose, Virginia City and Portland, and others too numerous to mention, are excessively dull of late, and unless they do better we shall consider the propriety of placing Foolscaps upon them. Life is too short to wade through such infinite bosh, to no purpose—hence, our purpose will he to confound Dullness while rewarding Brains.

Those old people whose blood has become thin and steps feehle are praising Hop Bitters for the good they have done them.

Birth.—In East Oakland, September 13th, to the wife of Henry H. Hassard, a son.

HEART AND HEARTH.

We sat and watched the hearth fire
My friend and I together ; [blaze,
The cricket sang of harvest days,
The wood of summer weather.

It told of shade, of storm and sun,
Its native oakland story ;
To him it only spake of one
Who turned all gloom to glory.

The cricket caroled still of noon,
Bright with the sun's caresses ;
To him it called a form like June,
A flush with golden tresses.

Withiu the flame a apirit aeemed
To soar and sway and falter,
While in his heart a presence beamed
More steadfast on its altar.

The embers, in their ashen hed,
Looked out with transient flashes ;
He only saw sweet eyes that shed
Their rays through twilight lashea.

O'er stnhhled fielda the autumn wail- [ed,
In low and mournful cloaes ;
He only heard a song that sailed
O'er charmed realma of roses.

His eyes, once lit with hattle-ire,
Aflame with warrior science,
Forgot their fierce, controlling fire,
Their flashes of defiance.

But with a dreamy love-light hlest,
More luminous grew and tender,
As if the image in his hreast
Had lit them with its splendor.

The voice that once hia ardor proved,
Along the roaring column,
Now to mysterious measures moved
Suhdued, serenely solemn.

He named her—and the soft worda
In musical completeness, [came
As if the breathing of that name
Had touched his lips with sweetness.

He grew like what we contemplate—
And all hia face was laden
With light, as it would emulate
The hrightneas of the maiden.

The moon, full hlown to lily-white,
Looked in, with love-lorn pallor ;
She knew his frame forgot its might,
His will forgot its valor.

She kiased his hrow and smoothed his
Like a consoling mother, [hair
And whispered, " I, too, only wear
The hrightness of another.

"Like Ruth, I walk his hroad domain,
And wait his lordly gesture ;
I glean his light, hut reach in vain
To touch his princely vesture."

With many a sympathetic guest,
The air hung, star-heleagured,
When lo! to her who filled his breast,
Pale Dian stood transfigured.

She smiled on her Endymion,
And charmed his dreamy vision,
And all his soul new glory won
Before the sweet transition.

The vision fled—my friend waa gone,
And left me idly gazing ;
But in the hearth-light I was sbown
A future altar hlazing.

BOOK NOTICES.

The Great Speeches and Orations of Daniel Webster, with an Essay on Daniel Webster as a Master of English Style. By Edwin P. Whipple. Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1879.

This selection from Wehster's writings is made, the puhlishers say in their preface, " to revive puhlic interest in the great hody of his works," presumahly somewhat neglected in these days. Mr. Whipple, in his Easay, takes for granted the ahiding influence of Wehster in literature, no less than in politics. Both assumptions cannot he correct ; and, of the two, we incline to think that of the puhlishera nearer the truth. For it is hardly to he douhted that, while Wehster's speeches are still studied hy a few as a preparation for entering upon a political career, they cannot he considered as serious additions to the literature of the language. It is true that no student of American history can overlook them, hut neither is it possihle to overlook Jefferson's writings, or the works of Samuel Adams, or Calhoun's Treatise on Government ; and no man can think of calling any of these a part of English literature.

Mr. Whipple's easay is not satisfactory. The tone of it is extravagant, and one hears a little too much of Wehster's colossal grandeur and gigantic efforts. That hia mind was really great, every one must feel ; hut Mr. Whipple goes too far when he praises him for manliness, intellectual and moral. The attitnde of Wehster toward the South was, throughout his career, the attitude of a man in a continual state of compromise with his own moral sense. An occasional hurst of rhetoric in vindication of some ohviously popular sentiment he has, indeed, given us ; but the times in which he lived and the dangers of the country called for something more like statesmanship than vague praises of the Union, something more like lofty purpose than a flattering recognition of Massachusetts.

Wehster plainly saw the struggle that was coming, and he lacked the courage to take his stand openly with one side or the other. He did not even make the great refusal, but stood irresolute, letting " I dare not " wait upon " I would." There is a moral leason in his life, but not of the kind Mr. Whipple supposes.

The speeches in this volume are, for the most part, well selected, hut we are astonished at finding among them the Hulsemann Letter. Does Mr. Whipple really approve that vulgar outburst? That it was an answer to a communication only indeeent thau itself, makes it all the more unworthy of a man habitually dignified in speech and in writing, and it were charitable to forget it.

Perhaps the pages of this hook would have gained in appearance hy suppressing the division into columns; hut the paper is good and the typography elear.

STATEMENTS AND AROUMENTS IN BEHALF OF AMERICAN INDUSTRIES AOAINST THE PROPOSED FRANCO-AMERICAN COMMERCIAL TREATY, SUAMITTED TO THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE OF THE SAN FRANCISCO CHAMBER OF COMMERCE. " Alta " Office, 1879.

This volume of 220 pages is practically a protest by the Chamher of Commeree on behalf, chiefly, of the vine-growers of the State against the proposed Treaty of Commerce with France. The information adduced on the subject of wines and spirits here and in France is most exhaustive, being a very valuahle array of facts, iudependently altogether of its immediate purpose. It is fortunate that in this city, where it is difficult to rouse the public to any action on behalf of threatened commereial interests, such decided action should have heen taken as this volume indicates. We feel that San Franeiseo may take some credit to itself for having defeated the plausible plans of M. Leon Chotteau, and those whom he represented, hy such an exhaustive statement of the real bearing of the Frenchman's proposals.

FIRST ANNUAL REPORT OF THE BANK COMMISSIONERS.

The last California Legislature passed an Act creating a Board of Bank Commissioners, and prescribing their duties and powers. The Governor, in terms of the Act, appointed the three Commissioners, namely: Messrs. Evan J. Coleman, Robert Watt and James T. Murphy. We have commented at various times on the valuable services that these gentlemen have rendered, and we have now to welcome the appearance from the office of the State Printer of their First Annual Report, extending to 267 pages, and giving full information regarding every incorporated bank in the State, and its condition as at June 30th and December 31st, 1878. As a direct consequence of the inspection of the Commissioners, four savings banks in San Francisco and one in Sacramento suspended business, and are now in liquidation. There is no douht that the creation of this Board was a wise and salutary step, and that its operation has given great confidence, and deservedly so, to the hanks of the State. It is a very important guarantee, hoth to depositors and to stockholders, to have the business of each hank inspected and the result reported to the authorities at Sacramento, besides having two returns, namely, as at June 30th and December 31st, of the condition of each hauk, made and printed in full in the volume now issued. At December 31, 1878, there were twenty-three savings hanks in operation in the State, with a capltal and reserve of $6,806,435, and due to depositors $57,846,025; fifty-six commercial hanks, with capital and reserve of $30,593,126, and deposits of $21,316,-337; four foreign banks, with $9,284,730 due to head offices in London and $3,775,622 due to depositors. The total of capital and reserve of these eighty-three hanks amounted to $46,684,292, and total deposits $82,937,-984. The creation of this Board of Bank Commissioners has most satisfactorily met the want that it was intended to supply, and the State may well congratulate itself on the success of this experimental step, and on the advantages of the services that it has already reudered. Great credit is due to the three Commissioners for the upright and faithful manner in which they have discharged their duties, and for which the public ought to he thankful.

"DIVIDE AND CONQUER."

The Republican party throughout the Union has always heen fortunate in practicing upon its enemy so as to divide and conquer. It was by the divisions of the Democracy that Mr. Lincoln was elected, and that the Repuhlicans have ever since maintained their power at Washington. During the carpet-bag era down South, the same tactics were pursued of setting class against class, and race against race, and it appears now that this policy will be carried out to the end of the chapter. In California the Republicans have triumphed, while yet in a minority, hy simply dividing their opponents into several camps. In Maine, under Senator Blaine's shrewd management, they have overcome the Democrats and Greenbackers, in the face of the latter's victory last year. In New York they are actively engaged in setting Mr. Tilden and Tammany by the ears, while in several Western States they are raising side issues on currency, revenue and railroad questions, so as to distract the enemy, while their own party is tolerahly well held togēther hy threads torn from the famous bloody shirt. Meantime the Treasury agents in the Soutb are not inactive with the negroes, and even the chivalry element is conciliated with promises and bribes anent the presidential campaign. It is a trifle singular that such crude methods continue to succeed year after year, when they are so transparent to the looker-on. It is unaccountahle, excepting on the presumption that bigotry, intolerance, sectioualisms, class and national antipathies, are, unfortunately, rather more vigorous in the New World than in the Old, notwitbstanding our pretensions to the contrary. Such things hetray a low order of statesmanship, and we can hardly expect better tbings until the best elemeuts in American life control the Federal Government. They have too long been shirking their duty.

A GOOD PLAN.

Anybody can learn to make money rapidly operating in Stocks, by the "Two Unerring Rules for Success," in Messrs. Lawrence & Co.'s new circular. The combination method, which this firm has made so successful, enables people with large or small means to reap all the benefits of largest capital and best skill. Thousands of orders, in various sums, are pooled into one vast amount and co-operated as a mighty whole, thus securing to each shareholder all the advantages of the largest operator. Immense profits are divided monthly. Any amount, from $5 to $5,000, or more, can be used successfully. N. Y. Baptist Weekly, September 20th, 1878, says: "By the combination system $15 would make $75, or 5 per cent.; $50 pays $350, or 7 per cent.; $100 makes $1,000, or 10 per cent. on the stock, during the month, according to the market." Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, June 29th: "The combination method of operating stocks is the most successful ever adopted." New York Independent, Sept. 12th: "The combination system is founded upon correct business principles, and no person need be without an income while it is kept working by Messrs. Lawrence & Co. Brooklyn Journal, April 20th: "Our editor made a net profit of $101 25 from $20 in one of Messrs. Lawrence & Co.'s combinations." New circular (mailed free) explains everything. Stocks and bonds wanted. Government bonds supplied.

SWANTON HOUSE, PESCADERO.

This Popular Hotel, together with the detached Cottages, which are not the least of its attractive features, have been newly furnished throughout, and are now open for the reception of guests. Those desiring to visit the most enjoyable of all our sea-side resorts, can make no mistake in deciding upon Pescadero.

IT IS EASILY REACHED,

and is unsurpassed in the excellence of its climate, the beauty of its scenery, and in the attractiveness of its truly remarkable sea beach. Those extraordinary pebbles, among which are to be found agates, opals, sapphires, etc., were never so numerous as now, the past Winter having thrown up immense numbers of curiously-shaped stones, which for ages have been subjected to the everlasting motions of the tireless Pacific. GOOD TROUT FISHING is obtainable in the Pescadero river.

"BIZ."

We have now the pleasure of reporting to our numerous readers a decided change for the better in the general commercial affairs of the Pacific Slope. The very satisfactory results of the late election seem to have dispelled and quieted the fears of many of our people and capitalists, who have long been holding tight their money bags, but who are now disposed to lighten them up, and are seeking investments for their coin. Real Estate is also more sought after; the increased inquiry for improved city property is indeed notable. The Mining Stock Market exhibits promise of an early awakening. Our Shipping interests seem to be all alive with animation. Our Merchandise marts are exhibiting increased life and animation. There is a decided rise to be noted in the price of Bar Iron, Iron Pipe, Zinc, Nails, etc. The local Refiners have quite unexpectedly put up the price of Sugars ½c. ℔ lb, although in buying the Hawaiian crop of 35,000 tons, they contracted for it all at ½c. ℔ lb less than they paid for the same grades one year ago.

In regard to our domestic products we may remark a very active export demand for Wheat with large purchases during the current month, both here and in the interior, at rising prices—rates that are very remunerative to the farmers. At this writing shippers have been forced to pay $1 72½@1 75 per cental, and, in a few instances, as high as $1 77½ has been paid for strictly choice No. 1 Gilt Edged. Wool of the Fall clip is now being marketed quite freely, and is finding ready sale at prices that return large margin to the growers. Hops are now coming forward, and sell at comparatively high prices—more than double last year's rates.

Our Honey crop is a complete failure this year, which will be a great disappointment to many persons in the southern part of the State.

The Fruit crops of the State at large have this year been very satisfactory to all concerned. Nuts and Almonds are alike promising, and the yield will be much larger than ever before.

Our Vegetable crops, such as Potatoes, Tomatoes, Corn, etc., have been very prolific this season, but prices have generally ruled low.

The Grape crop is now being bought up by the vintners, they paying from $13 to $15 per ton for the Native Mission Grape and $25 to $30 per ton for best foreign varieties. These rates are much higher than those paid last year, yet the increasing value and high estimation now held of our pure California Wines encourages wine-makers to exert themselves in securing the very best Grapes for the purpose. As for our Raisin Grapes much care will be given to them this fall, but the quantity cured will be less than last year.

Salmon—Case Goods.—We are advised of large purchases of 1-lb Salmon on the Columbia River, for export, at $1 ℔ dozen. The nominal price here is $1 05 for standard brands. Chicago is in the market now for more Salmon, but at low prices. Fishermen have commenced their fall campaign upon the Sacramento River, and are now here seeking purchasers for their fall packing of Salmon; they will, however, have to be content with very low prices. Many of the Oregonians have their entire Salmon catch yet on hand, not having many sales the present season. It is generally believed that several of them will make consignments of the same to England.

Bags.—The Combination have again fixed up things, and the Ring said to be in the ascendancy. They have a big load to carry for a twelvemonth. Spot price, 10c., nominal.

Coffee.—The market for Central American Greens is strong, with a rising tendency; strictly No. 1 Green may be quoted at 16@16½c.

Sugar.—The Refiners have issued a new price list, and advanced rates ½c. per lb., now 10¾@10½c. for Cube and Crushed; Yellow, 8¾@9¾c. for Golden.

Rice.—The market is overstocked with China, at 4¾@5¾c.; Hawaiian Table is in light stock at 5¾@10c.

Quicksilver.—The market is dull at 39@40c.

Metals.—There is a decided upward tendency in the market for all kinds of manufactured Iron, Nails, etc., but the stock of Pig Iron being very heavy, prices are unmoved.

Salt.—The market for Liverpool is strong at $18@20 for Stoved, latter rate for Ashtons.

Teas.—The market is strong for Japans, in paper, at 35@37½c.; Formosa Oolongs, 40@42½c.

Freights and Charters.—But few charters for Grain have been written during the week, yet the aggregate engagements thus far in September have been numerous. The disengaged fleet in port at this writing does not aggregate 20 vessels, of 27,000 tons register. Our Wheat fleet now on the berth foots up 39 vessels, of 54,800 tons register. The fleet in sight, to arrive before the close of the year, aggregates 160,000 tons register. Recently quite a number of ships have been fixed to load Wheat for Europe upon owner's account. There is very little business offering for outside business, such as Coal, Lumber, etc. The present quotation for Grain ships to Liverpool or Havre is 43s@45s; to Continent, 50s. There has been one or more ships taken to load Wheat at Astoria to Liverpool at 50s.

On the whole, our farmers and producers generally have great cause for thankfulness, for the abundance with which Nature has crowned their laborious efforts, and it does seem to us as though the people of the Pacific slope have peculiar reasons for thankfulness at the wonderful degree of prosperity which has thus far attended their efforts. The hue and cry of hard times has been here incessant for the last year or two, yet, we take it upon ourselves to say that no people upon God's footstool have been alike favored as we. Health and prosperity have been ours in a wonderful degree. Labor here has always been more remunerative upon the Pacific slope than in any other part of the world, and the hand of the diligent is sure to make all those rich who are saving and industrious. Where else than in California do female servants and help of all kinds receive the wages that are now, and ever have been, paid on the Pacific slope? And, while the labor of man has been reduced somewhat, that of Biddy in the kitchen, and for household affairs generally, are today and always have been, nearly double what they are in New York, or in any other city in the known world, and why is it thus—who can tell?

Hops arrive sparingly enough as yet, with small sales of the New at 25 cents.

Wool.—There is an active demand, with sales of 50,000 lbs. Oregon at 22c.; California Fall, 10@13c. for Southern burry 15c., for free Northern ditto, 16@17c.

Wheat.—Our exports to Europe since July 1st now aggregate 2,075,310 ctls., against 2,955,492 ctls. same time last year; 45 vessels in 1879, against 83 in 1878. The present range of price is $1 65@$1 77½ per ctl.

Barley.—There is a good demand for Chevalier, for export, at $1 70@$1 75 per ctl. Brewing (new crop) is more inquired for at 85@95c. Feed is dull and slow of sale at 65@75c.

Corn and Oats.—There is but little demand—85@90c. for the first, and $1 25@$1 50 per ctl. for the latter.

LETTER FROM FRESNO.

FRESNO, Sept. 2, 1879.

Editor News Letter: The city of Fresno is two hundred and seven miles distant from San Francisco, on the Central Pacific Railroad, situate on a vast flat, treeless, sandy plain, with mountains of great elevation within a distance of thirty or forty miles. The city is a place of small account, with one or two good hotels, as many general stores, a drug store and a blacksmith's shop, and preeminent above all, the County Hall—a solidly-built structure, with the indispensable cupola rising above the flat roof.—With the help of a rill of water, a few evergreen trees are kept alive, and to some extent break the otherwise uniform sameness of the vast plain. A drive of five miles brings us to the Eisen Vineyard; and here the effect of artificial irrigation is seen and felt to perfection. Poplar, cottonwood and blue-gum trees luxuriate in a measure unknown elsewhere, while interspersed among them, oleanders attain a hight of twelve or fifteen feet, and carry blooms proportionately large; and, at this season, those exquisite flowers are met with along the whole net-work of open drains and water-courses. Here, too, the wild sun-flower, though a troublesome weed, lends its bright yellow flowers to adorn the vineyard, and affords food to many hundreds of wild doves. So that on the whole, and apart from the vines and fruit trees, the seemingly sandy desert has been, within five years, converted into a paradise by man's skill and the ever-flowing water of King River.

The vineyard comprises 120 acres in full bearing, and 40 more planted this year and last. I have known a mere rootless cutting produce a small bunch of grapes the autumn of the year in which it was planted, a matter of curiosity; but where heat and water abound it is the rule rather than the exception that cuttings bear a few bunches the first year of planting. Rooted vines are not used in the Eisen Vineyard; only cuttings 30 inches long are put in with a crow-bar, the ground having been merely leveled and plowed, and in no instance trenched.

The varieties cultivated are Frahisagos, Muscatel of Alexandria, the Gordo Blanco variety, Malaga, Riesling, Chasselas, White Syrian, for white wines; and Red Malvasia, Ziufaudel, Tenturier, Hamburg and Rose Peru for red wines. The oldest vines were planted in 1874 and 1875, and the yield per acre will average 550 gallons. The pruning is partly that known as "spur-pruning," and partly "long-rods," according to the natural habit of the vines; and this is all the more necessary as the growth is so rank and vigorous. The plants are set out 8x8 feet and cultivated by horse machinery. According as it seems desirable portions are thoroughly irrigated, the whole compartment being laid under water in a few minutes, and so maintained at will. Two such waterings in the summer have been found sufficient. This large vineyard, which will comprise nearly 600 acres when completed, can defy the Phylloxera, since it can be laid entirely under water during the winter; and this treatment is the only kind yet found to be effective against that insidious pest.

The cellars are situated more than half a mile from the residence and offices; of ample dimensions for present requirements, built of adobes kneaded with straw, and very neatly set, like ashlar work. Certainly no building can be at once both better and cheaper for cellars than adobe, where suitable loam can be procured on the spot. The temperature can easily be kept within a few degrees of variation, Summer and Winter.

In this department, besides Chinese, there are many other appliances for saving labor and expense. Adjoining the cellars is a flour mill, whose water-power machinery is available for many purposes, and, being the only one for many miles, is kept in constant operation.

I have been the more particular in entering into details, meager though they be, because all these extensive flat plains are capable of being brought under irrigation, and, therefore, will eventually be of inestimable value for vineyards, because they can defy the Phylloxera. Moreover, both from the nature of the soils and the intense Summer and Autumn heats, they most nearly, of any I have seen in the State, resemble the sherry country of Spain, especially that about San Lucar, where much of the finest sherry is grown, and already some of the pure, natural wines of the Eisen vineyard resemble those known as Lisbon Sweet and Lisbon Dry, wines removed one degree from sherry, and which never appear on the English market but as sherry.

These remarks, the result of a fortnight's residence at Eisen vineyard, may, I trust, prove of more than passing interest to some of your many wealthy readers.

JOHN J. BLEASDALE, D. D.

Kearny street takes the lead in the style and manner of its decorations on the arrival of Grant. From one end to the other it was a mass of flags, banners, streamers and shields, a wealth and confusion of color and form, which delighted the eye. The Chronicle building contended with the White House for the palm of superiority; and each was favored by its admirable position. The White House, with its long side on Post street and broad front on Kearny, offered fairer opportunities for display of the delicate taste and skill in the arrangement of draperies, for which it has long been noted, and these advantages were turned to account. Genuine hunting, of the best make, hung from the angles and was festooned along the front, with such relief of color and flower forms and evergreens as gave infinite pleasure to the eye. The fair promenaders of this main street always look, and never in vain, for a treat in the artistic grouping and matching of the costly goods exposed in the windows of this first among our great dry-goods houses; and this week the continual addition of new styles, arriving for the Grand Fall Opening, has made their display like the forms in a kaleidoscope. Everything that is most artistic and most delicate in the new Oriental fashions in color, all that the great centers of manufacturing and art industry can furnish to please the critical eye of beauty, are to be found in this splendidly decorated building.

"The Western Lancet" for September, amongst other articles of interest, contains one, by Dr. A. P. Hayne, on the supposed antidote for drunkenness. He has given the tincture of red bark, and finds that in no single instance did it show the slightest power to disgust the patient with liquor, and in any way to diminish his or her appetite or craving for intoxicating drinks. Persons having taken the remedy for several days in succession, staying without doors, have gone out only to be brought home thoroughly intoxicated. Another evidence, if any were wanting, as to the folly of believing paragraphs in newspapers.

New Music.—"Grant Military March," and "He Comes, Lo! Triumphant!" hymn; music of both by D. Speranza. Published by M. Gray.

The "Arcade" is now daily opening novelties in the latest styles, Parisian, Hindoo, Persian and Oriental of every kind, purchased for cash on remarkably low terms by Mr. J. J. O'Brien, during his recent visit to the East and Europe. The singular taste and judgment of Mr. O'Brien, combined with his exceptional advantages as a cash purchaser, have enabled him to gather the finest assortment in every variety of fabric at prices which defy competition. He will arrive by overland train this evening, bringing with him goods more delicate and costly than have yet been seen on this coast, and so vast and varied are the goods now opened and admired by the crowds of purchasers, that he himself would hardly know the windows of the store. Like every first-class house, the "Arcade" has a reputation to keep up, and is now surpassing all its previous efforts.

The State Medical Society have opened a course of instruction in midwifery, to be followed strictly in accordance with the plan laid down by the Prussian Government. At the expiration of the course, candidates for degrees will be examined by a board of medical gentlemen of the Society, and certificates will be issued only on proof of real proficiency. This is a step in the right direction for the suppression of quackery, and public approbation will strengthen the hands of the Medical Society in the good work.

Our portrait of General Grant, in to-day's issue, is from a photograph contributed by Mr. Dent, the General's brother-in-law, and has particular interest for all, as the original is the latest photograph taken, and, therefore, represents the great soldier as he appeared on his return to his native land. No more fitting souvenir of the memorable occasion could be found than this admirable lithograph, from the well-known establishment of Britton & Rey.

St. John's Presbyterian Church, Post street, between Mason and Taylor. Rev. Dr. Scott, Pastor, will preach Sunday morning at 11 o'clock. Also at 7½ P. M. Public cordially invited. At the beginning of the morning service, children may be presented for baptism. Sunday School and Bible Classes at 9½ A. M. Prayer and Praise Service at 6½ P. M.

J. M. Litchfield & Co., the well-known and long established house, 415 Montgomery street, have the best fitter in the city, and turn out the finest custom-made clothing in every department. Their stock of material is of the fullest and most varied; and, with their unexampled facilities, they never fail to give entire satisfaction.

The American Art Journal keeps on its apparently prosperous way, and shows no falling off in the completeness of its art news. The number for September 6th has a portrait of Richard Wagner, which ought to please even his self-conceit.

We saw a young man with two heads on his shoulders the other day, but didn't consider it much of a curiosity—one belonged to his girl.

"MEN WE KNOW."

General Grant.

Ulysses S. Grant was born April 27, 1822, at Point Pleasant, Clermont county, Ohio. His father was of Scotch descent. At the age of 17 Ulysses entered the Military Academy at West Point, and graduated four years later twenty-first in a class of thirty-nine, and was commissioned as hrevet-second-lieutenant. He was assigned to the 4th Infantry, and remained in the service eleven years. During the Mexican war he fought in every hattle but that of Bnena Vista, and was twice brevetted for gallantry.

He married in 1848 Juba, daugbter of Frederick Dent, a prominent merchant of St. Louis; and in 1854, being then a captain, he resigned his commission in the army. In 1860 he joined his father in the leather trade at Galena, Illinois. When the Civil war broke out in 1861 Grant was entirely unknown to public men. Lincoln's first call for troops was made on the 15th of April, and on the 19th Grant was drilling a company of volunteers at Galena. He offered his services to the Adjutant-General of the army, but received no reply. The Governor of Illinois employed him to organize troops, and appointed him Colonel of the 21st Illinois Infantry. He took command in Jnne, and reported to Gen. Pope in Missouri. August 7th he was commissioned Brigadier-General of volunteers, having heen unauimously recommended by the Congressmen from Illinois, none of whom knew him personally. He was employed for a few weeks watching Missouri partisans; and, on Septemher 1st, was given command of the District of Southeast Missouri, with headquarters at Cairo. On the 6th he seized Paducah, which commanded the Tennessee and Ohio rivers. This stroke brought the Kentucky Legislature, affectedly neutral hitherto, to declare in favor of the Government. Early in Novemher, under orders, he destroyed the Confederate camp at Belmont, ahout 18 miles helow Cairo, and commanded by the guns of Columhus on the opposite hank of the Mississippi. On his return to his transports the enemy from Columbus attempted to intercept him, hut he cut his way out and returned to Cairo.

In February, 1862, after repeated applications to Gen. Halleck, he was allowed to move against Fort Henry on the Tennessee. Before he arrived there the naval force coöperating with him had compelled the surrender of the place; and Grant prepared to attack Fort Douelson on the Cumherland. This fort was garrisoned by 21,000 men. On the 15th, after three days' hard fighting, the works were carried by assault; and the uext day the place was surrendered. Grant's force. 15,000 the first day, was but 21,000 on the day of the surrender; and the achievement is memorahle as the first great success of the Union forces during the war, while its strategic results were very great. It hrought Kentucky and Tennessee into the hands of the Government, and opened the navigation of the Mississippi, Tennessee and Cumherland rivers for hundreds of miles. Grant was made Major-General of volunteers, and given command of West Tennessee.

In March be was ordered to Corintb, and his army, 38,000 strong, was encamped at Shiloh, waiting for Gen. Buell, with 40,000 men. While in this position the enemy attacked him, on the 6th April, and, after a desperate fight, drove him hack to the river. Buell's forces arrived in the night, and on the 7th the Confederates were compelled to retreat to Corinth. This place they evacuated on the 30th May, no fighting having occurred since Shiloh. In July Grant was made Commander of the Department of the Tennessee. On the 19th September he fought the indecisive hattle of Iuka. He fortified Corinth, and repulsed the Confederate attack on that place on the 3d and 4th Octoher, and won the hattle of the Hatchie on the 5th.

Novemher 2d he moved into Mississippi against Vicksburg with 30,000 men. Sherman was sent hy the river with 40,000 to attack in front. Grant had reached Oxford, when Holly Springs, his base of supplies, was surrendered by Colonel Murphy; and this caused the failure of the campaign. Grant returned to Corinth, and Sherman's assault on Vicksburg failed. In January, 1863, Grant took command in person of all the Mississippi Valley, and moved hy the river to a point opposite Vicksburg. All his efforts to turn the place failed, and in April he marched through the swamps on the western hank to a place helow Vicksburg. His gunboats and transports passed the hatteries under a terrific fire. April 30th he crossed thirty miles helow the city, abandoned the river and pushed inland. Between the 1st and the 18th May he broke up in detail two Confederate armies, and drove Pemherton into Vicksburg; and on the 23d, after two unsuccessful assaults, besieged the place in form. Vicksburg surrendered on the 4th July, with 31,600 men and 172 cannon. The Mississippi was now open to the sea, and there was no more fighting of importance in the Valley. Grant was made Major-General in the regular army. October 16th he was given command of the Mississippi region: and on the 27th fought the hattle of Lookout Mountain to relieve Chattanooga. Novemher 23d, 24th and 25th he totally defeated Bragg at Chattanooga; and west of the Alleghanies there was no strong hostile force left.

In February, 1864, Congress created for Grant the rank of Lieutenant-General of the Army, and on the 17th March he took command of the United States armies, moving in person against Lee in Northern Virginia, while he sent Sherman into Georgia and Sigel into the valley of Virginia. In a succession of tremendous hattles, he fought his way from the Rapidan to the James river, against the genius of Lee and the valor of the finest army in the Confederacy. The hattles of the Wilderness, Spottsylvania, North Anna and Cold Harhor, were the hardest Grant ever fought, and they cost him tremendous sacrifices in men, hut each one gained some ground for him and forced Lee's army some distance hack. In June he hegau the siege of Richmond. Sherman was advancing on Atlanta; hut Sigel first, and then Hunter, had been defeated in Virginia, and Lee sent Early to threaten Washington. Grant detached Sheridan against this force, and that commander effectually destroyed it.

In Septemher, Sherman had reached Atlanta, and Thomas, in Tennessee, drew off and defeated the only Confederate force that could have opposed tbe march to the sea. All these subsidiary operations enabled Grant to hold Lee's army in Richmoud; and when Sherman had swept the Carolinas, and Sheridan the valley of the Shenandoah, Grant made his final move on Richmond. Petershurg fell on the 2d, and Richmond on the 3d April, 1865, and Lee retreated toward Lynchhurg. On the 9th he was surrounded, and surrendered at Appomattox Court-house all that remained of his heroic army—27,000 men of all arms. Returning to Washington, Grant reaped every honor that a grateful country could bestow. Congress created the grade of General for him, and private citizens constantly took occasion to show their admiration of the man who had saved the nation.

His generous conduct toward his manly enemies was worthy of his renown; and history will never forget his indignant interposition to save Lee from a threatened prosecntion for treason. Elected President in 1868, he was re-elected, in 1872, hy a larger vote and a larger majority than any candidate had received since the United States became a nation.

The whole world has sbared in the admiration with which his country regards this great soldier and patriot; and his unexampled, triumpbant progress from land to land, familiar as it is to all, through the telegrams of the last two years, remains on record as a series of the most spontaneous trihutes ever paid to merit.

THE LANGTRY CALUMNY.

The New York Times professes to have received a telegram from London, asserting that the husband of Mrs. Langtry (one naturally gives him that style and title) has entered a suit for divorce, with the Prince of Wales as co-respondent. Personally, we firmly helieve this to he one of those unmanly lies which the correspondents of American papers are so fond of glutting their letters with. Anything that reflects unfavorably upon the Royal family of England, they are sure, will tickle the carrion tastes of their readers, you know. And, hesides the fact that the assertion of one of these guttersnipe telegrams is prima facie evidence of a lie (as the News Letter has proven over and over again), there are two other cogent reasons why we should be wary in passing judgment. First—no matter how wild the Prince was in his youth, his conduct of late years has heen such as to win him the love and respect of the virtue-loving people, whose future king he is, all the malicious tittle tattle of American "correspondents" to the contrary notwithstanding. Secondly—Mrs. Langtry is not a shop-girl like Mahel Grey, or a syren of the Parisian demirep type, but an English lady, the daughter of an English Dean—whose heauty, unfortunately, has hecome public property, hut whose fair name has never heen impugned until this irresponsihle and anonymous scribhler for a Gotham sensational sheet attempts to bring scandal upon it. Surely no man with a spark of chivalry in him would judge ber, or Victoria's son, on the hare word of a scandal-selling penny-a-liner.

But if we allow it to be true, what are we to think of this "hushand of Mrs. Langtry?" Has he not placed her on exhihition until it is no wouder if ber head is turned with adulation? When we think of him we lack language to express our utter contempt for the thing who will thus surrender the prize he has wou (hy what accident, we wonder?) to temptations which, if yielded to, could ouly result in giving a pair of cuckold's antlers to himself. If she is guilty, he will surely get the henefit of the law, which, in England, is dealt out to all alike; and, of course, the notoriety which is his object he will obtain in any case. But whether he wins his suit or not, pubhc opinion onght to kick him clear of the British Isles.

FRANCO-AMERICAN COMMERCE.

STATEMENTS AND AROUMENTS IN BEHALF OF AMERICAN INDUSTRIES, AGAINST THE PROPOSED FRANCO-AMERICAN COMMERCIAL TREATY. Submitted to the Special Committee of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, in conformity with the Resolutions of the Chamber, passed June 13th, 1879. San Francisco: "Alta California" Book and Job Printing House, 1879.

This work is an appeal to the common sense and mercantile judgment of the business men and capitalists of the United States; hut has especial reference to those of California, hecause she is the largest wine-producing State, and hecause the work is exhaustive of tbe wine and brandy industry of France, and sbows, in the most demonstrative manner, how certainly the vineyard interests of the State may he profitahly enlarged even a hundred fold, if only the present protection be continued to it, and the nasty, unwholesome, cheap French wines excluded. The work opens with a comprehensive and lucid statement, placing the whole question in the most convincing light, hy Arpad Haraszthy, Esq., the talented and energetic President of the State Viticultural Society, a statement not loaded with statistics, hut comprehensihle hy any ordinary understanding. Then comes Appendix No. 1, Extracts from the Reports of Mr. C. A. Wetmore, Delegate of the Society to the Paris Exposition, 1878, which comprises 103 pages, and to which we intend to recur at an early date, for too much attention can hardly be given at the present time to the salvation of the wine industry of the State from the astute machinations of Mr. Chotteau, which are calculated to effect its utter ruin hy destroying the home market for pure wine, and flooding it with the offal of French wine cellars.

We have heard a great deal from Eastern travelers of the wonderful attachment which exists between the horse and his master in Oriental lands, hut we doubt if anything more interesting has ever been told than the following story of "Goldsmith Maid": Recently, Charley Cochrane, who was for many years her faithful groom, arrived from California, and wishing to see the grand old trotting mare and her colt, called on Mr. Smith, her owner, to ohtain his permission to visit Fashion Stud Farm, in New Jersey. Mr. Smith accoinpanied Cochrane to the farm, and on arriving there remarked: "Charley, the 'Maid' is very jealous of her colt, is very cross, and will permit no one to approach it." Cochrane arranged that "Goldsmith Maid" should hear his voice before she saw him, and, although they had not seen each other for two years, a loud whinny presently assured the visitors that the mare had recognized the man's voice. Cochrane next showed himself, when a touching scene occured. The old queen of the turf, wbo for months would not allow any one to approach her, making use of hoth heels and teeth if it was attempted, rushed with a bound to her old friend, forgetting even her colt, and ruhhed her bead upon his shoulder, ber nose in his face, played with his whiskers, and showed by her every action that her heart was full of joy to see hin. Directly the colt came up to them, and the old mare was delighted when Charley placed his hand on the bttle fellow. When Cochrane left the place the mare followed him to the gate, whinnyiug for him even after he had passed out of her sight.

Unreasonable!—Police Sergeant: "A man whom you don't know came behind you in the dark, struck you, and ran away! How do you expect us to find him?" Applicant: "Well, you're a pretty fellow to ask me to teach you your duty! If I knew 'How' I could fiud him myself."—Funny Folks.

THE STOCK MARKET.

There has been little or no change in the general market since our last writing, save a perceptible decrease in the volume of business transacted. The market, however, shows a strong undertone, attesting the readiness of "inside" support when the occasion requires it. The situation at the North End is daily growing more and more important, and operations at these mines are rapidly approaching the time when the solution of the much vexed question will be pretty well determined. The Union shaft is now down to the 2,200-level of Sierra Nevada, and already we expect the mine is being drained of the water. This accomplished, and it will not take long to open up the hidden mysteries of the lower levels. The situation in Ophir is also most interesting. The long-delayed crosscut on the 2,400-level has already been started, and will be run through to the west wall of the ledge, thus thoroughly prospecting this section of the mine, where so much of promise is said to exist. At other points there is little of interest to note. Outside stocks are completely neglected, with the exception of Eureka Con. and Belle Isle, which attract considerable attention on account of recent developments at the mines. At the close, the market showed no perceptible change.

ARIZONA.

The "Miner," of September 19th, has the following: The California mail arrived this morning, bringing New York correspondence of the 8th inst., while the Santa Fe mail brought papers and letters of the 10th, forty-eight hours later. Our Eastern mail should all come via the New Mexico route.——The Lone Star Mine, Mohave county, is turning out very high grade ore, and in large quantities.——Another big sale of mines. Three in the Swisshelm Mountains have been sold to a St. Louis company by Judge Hesson, John Swisshelm, J. W. Flemming and E. Martin Smith. Mr. T. Larimiar represents the company. Ninety thousand dollars was the price paid.——The owners of the Eureka Copper mine, in Black Hills, have run a tunnel in 125 feet, striking the lead 75 feet beneath the surface, with favorable results. A large body of high grade ore presents itself in this tunnel, which goes from forty to sixty per cent.

Business does not improve in the city. At the same time, the northern counties of the State are in a prosperous condition, and no doubt will soon see the effect of the high price they are getting for their Wheat. There is no change in the money market. Strictly prime, 60 day acceptance, would be discounted at 5 to 6 per cent.

London, September 25th.—The Berlin Provincial Correspondenz directs the attention of Catholics to the fact that the Chancellor has been actively negotiating with a distinguished papal envoy at Gastein, while it assures Liberals that the supreme power of the State in State affairs will be in no wise sacrificed. It offers to the military and upper classes a hold and open Austrian alliance, and to all it promises a reduction of direct taxes. The article states that it will be the duty of the next Landtag to complete the purchase of private railways by the State, and to effect their thorough reorganization. The article concludes: "Let the electors take care that the next Landtag consists of an overwhelming body of members who, on the ground of common economical endeavors, have full sympathy with Bismarck and the Government as to the consequences to Prussian taxation, of German economical reform."

On Tuesday last Grace Church was most beautifully decorated with flowers and wreaths of evergreens and elegant hangings, on the occasion of the marriage of Mr. J. Henley Stone to Miss Marian H., daughter of J. V. Plume, Esq. The noble church edifice was filled by crowds of friends of both parties, and the spectacle presented by the exquisitely attired ladies and the unexampled wealth of decoration, was one long to be held in remembrance. After the ceremony the happy pair drove to the Grand Hotel, where they received the greetings and congratulations of their friends and acquaintances, with offerings of countless bouquets and rich souveuirs of the auspicious event.

A CHANCE MEETING.

Some veil did fall, I knew it all of yore.—ROSSETTI.

Strange that I should see you thus,
Whom I dreamed of long ago!
Is it old love calling us,
Or new love that we must know?
Something—hut I cannot tell
Whether it he weak or wise,
Whether it he ill or well—
In your eyes.

Just a glance and nothing more!
Hardly could you fathom it,
Hardly guess what lies in store;
Though the light one moment lit
Those sweet eyes, that did reply
To the careless look I cast—
Eyes that said not 'Who?' or 'Why?'
But 'At last!'

Often iu my dreams at night
I have seen you just as now,
With the broad low brows and white,
And the hair drooped on the brow;
Till we meet at last, and you
Even as if you have sought for me,
As I sought you, all life through,
Look, "Tis he!"

Well, where have we met before?
Is it really but in dreams,
Or heyond some fast-closed door
In another world, that seems
Like a half-forgotten home
Where our feet were wont to stand,
Whither some day we must come
Hand in hand?

Sweet, I know: before this life
You and I were one indeed,
Closelier mine than wedded wife
Recognize my spirit's need.
Once we had one hope, one heart,
And we parted—how, and why?—
Promise now, we will not part,
You and I.

THE RAILROAD COMPANY SPEAKS.

The enemies of the Railroad Company have recently had their say, and made the most of it. Now the Railroad Company speaks. The annual reports of the president and officers of the Central Pacific have just heen presented to the shareholders, and the president's report will be found in the present number of the News Letter. These documents reach the public at a most fitting time. The people have recently heen so surfeited with false figures, lying facts and erroneous deductions, that they may well be supposed to he now ready to listen to a little honest truth. The time for the sober second thought is well nigh at hand. Cohen has delivered his false figures hy the hour, has had them printed hy the yard, and distributed by tens of thousands. Gorham has given effect to his threats to bolt his party's nominations, and to assail the railroad from every availahle stump throughout the State. The Chronicle has printed whole broadsides, and fulminated them wherever it could find readers. The Honorable Bilks, whose professed excuse for existence as a party was the railroad question, have strutted their brief hour on the political stage, have made the most of tbeir sole and only article of faith, and have passed away, after a brief and inglorious career, all unhonored and unsung, to that bourne whence no traveler e'er returns, leaving behind a most unsavory memory. Cohen's fire has heen drawn, Gorham's rage has spent itself in impotency, the Chronicle is on its good behavior for its very life's sake, the Bilks are dead heyond the possibility of resurrection. Thus perish all who seek to hurt the State hy endeavoring to cripple the railroads!

We gladly leave the battle-ground behind, hestrewn, as it is, with the putrid carcasses of the slain, and hasten to that purer aud better atmosphere, in which men love the truth for its own sake, and desire to act justly even toward the Railroad Company. While the battle raged, passion reigned supreme and reason was silenced. Now, however, sober thought begins to reassert itself. It begins to be possihle to reach men's minds by means of fair reasoning. We recommend a careful perusal of President Stanford's able and dispassionate report. It is a clear, forcihle, and, we believe, unassailable answer to all and sundry those who have aided and abetted recent communistic efforts to seize and divide the railroad income.

Never was such autocratic power conferred on mortal man as that with which the new Constitution clothes the newly-elected Railroad Commissioners. They are more absolute than any mouarch ever dared to be. They are at their sovereigu will and pleasure to say what fares and freights shall be charged; and from their decision there is no appeal. Their extraordinary powers extend not only to railroads, but to every kind of transportation company. They are to determine what shall be charged hy steamers, as well as by railroads. Upon what conceivable principle consistent with the rights of property can such powers be conferred upon anyhody? That steamers are private property, must necessarily be admitted hy even those who deny that railroads are. They enjoy no special privileges. As Governor-elect Perkins said, "There is no toll on the Golden Gate, aud the ocean is free to all." To compel a steamship-owner to sell the use of his ship at a rate that is not agreeahle to him, is precisely the same as if the workingman were compelled to sell his labor for less than he esteemed its value to he. Between the two things there is no essential difference. What a terrihle howl would arise from the Sand-lots if a commission of capitalists were authorized to determine that workingmen should not, at their peril, collect more than a certain sum for their labor. The farmers—quiet and law-abiding as they are—would, we are quite sure, break out into open rehellion against any law that would seek to punish them for selling their produce for as much as they could get for it; and they would he entirely justified, for no more righteous cause for rebellion could possibly exist. It is a most moustrous tyranny to declare that a man may not sell his own as he wills. If he may not sell the use of his steamship for what he can get for it, then it follows by inexorable logic—from which there is no escape—that the farmer and the workingman, who impose the restraint upon him, ought to render themselves amenable to the same conditions. In short, it comes to this: that everything that is saleahle should have its selling price dictated by a constitutionally-appointed commission.

Tben, even if it he right or just, or in accordance with the inherent rights of property owners, that commissioners should do this thing, by what rule are they to do it? By the Constitution it is provided, among many other absurd things, that no more shall he charged for a shorter than for a longer distance. That is to say, no more shall be charged to any point hetween San Francisco and Los Angeles than is charged for the whole distance. But it happens that Los Angeles is a competitive point. It has the advantage of water communication, and the railroad has been forced to compete with steamers. This it is not to he allowed to do for the future, nnless, indeed, it is willing to give all the interior towns the advantages which Los Angeles is ahle to command hy reason of her advantageous position. The railroad could not possibly do that and continue in successful operation. All its land carriage could not be reduced to the price of trausit by water. That would simply mean bankruptcy. The only alternative then is to raise the rates to Los Angeles and other like favored points. The result will necessarily he to give the business to the steamers and to deprive those places of the great henefits of railroads, with their speed, comfort, and saving of time. Such is the effect of an ill-considered and practically unworkable enactment. That is the kind of absurd legislation with which great vested interests, involving many millions worth of property, are to be controlled. The thing is unparalleled. Its like is not to be found in any other country. It means a violation of the rights of private property; it means confiscation, and it means Communism in practice in a worse form than has ever hefore heen formulated in theory.

But it seems very far from certain that the Railroad Commissioners will, after all, he permitted to really exercise their truly alarming powers. At any rate, if they proceed to extremities, it is possible that an authority may he invoked that will speedily estop them. The United States' courts have a potential voice in the matter. Congress has provided, in what is known as the Thurman Act, that the transcontinental roads shall set aside a certain portion of their net income, as a sinking fund with which to redeem the bonds loaned by the National Government. It follows that the Government has an interest in the net income of the roads that must not be jeopardized by any local action. The Government holds a mortgage, and has the right, as it has the unquestionable power, to enforce the payment of its just due. It is actually exercising that power. The national administration is charged, hy an Act of Congress, with the performance of that duty, and the United States courts may with certainty he appealed to to restrain State authorities from interfering with the rights of the Government as mortgagee. That appears a plain legal proposition from which there is no escape. Governor Stanford, in his report, pretty plainly intimates that the action of the newly elected Commissioners will be contested in the Federal courts, and we believe that high constitutional autborities agree that there is little douht as to the result of such contest.

The railroad question is evidently very far from being settled. Governor Stanford puts the essential truth in a single sentence: "There can be no settlement which is not wise and just." There is too sacred a principle involved in this attempt to confiscate property to permit wrong to he finally perpetrated. As the matter comes to be more closely discussed, it will become apparent to every sober-minded, thoughtful man, who has anything to lose, that this question of the rights of property is one tbat concerns himself. If injustice can be done to a railroad stockholder, or creditor, or steamship proprietor, then it can be done to any other proprietor of property. It is the rule of the many against the few. It is might against right. All history teaches us that when once that sort of thing has made a beginning, it is hard to tell where it will end. It is the railroad and the steamship that are struck at to-day. It will be the manufactory and the farm to-morrow. The sooner all thoughtful men become apostles of the great truth that the interests of the railroads and of the State are identical, the hetter it will he for all concerned. This subject grows upon us as we discuss it, and dry as the topic may appear at first sight, we are satisfied it will grow in interest to every man who gives a dispassionate consideration to the great principles involved. Governor Stanford's most suggestive report should be carefully considered by every reader.

BABES OF THE BLUE AND THE GRAY.

[GOD'S OWN FLAG OF TRUCE.]

It will be remembered that Captain Hallock, of the United States Army, who is now at the Warren Green Hotel, by his noble generosity to Southern prisoners during the war, made his name sacred in many a Southern household. General Payne was one who received marked kindness at his hands. On Sunday morning, at the same hour of the day, each of them lost a child; and now, side by side, in the cemetery lot of General Payne, sleep the two soldiers' children. People generally pay proper respect to the feelings of all who suffer for the dead. But for the brave, the warm-hearted, and the generous, the tears that flow come from a deeper sympathy and bear the stamp of Heaven.—Warrenton Solid South (recent date).

What matters it now if they met here before,
From the North and the Southland—the Blue and the Gray—
On fields that were awful with carnage and gore,
'Mid the soaring and strife of that terrible fray?
Ah, little they heeded the dying and dead,
For hard was the heart then, and flashing the eye;
But now they are weeping o'er one little bed,
Where two little darlings so peacefully lie—

"Under the sod and the dew,"
Close to each other they lay;
One is the babe of the Blue,
The other, the babe of the Gray.

What matters it now, if they led to the fight
The men who are sleeping beneath the green sod?
Or what does it matter which fought for the right?
For, "Judgment is Mine!" saith our merciful God.
Ah! bravely they fought here, but dying, forgave,
And, clasping each other, lay dead on the plain;
Thus, bowing in sympathy over the grave,
These warrior hearts are united in pain,

"Under the sod and the dew,
Fair as twin lilies they lay—
Beautiful babe of the Blue,
Beautiful babe of the Gray.

What matters it now if this tall, waving grass
Is higher, and ranker, and greener to-day,
Because it is drinking that red flood, alas!
The blood of the Blue and the blood of the Gray?
While yet it was warm from the hearts of the brave,
It met and united in one purple tide.
So, mingle the tears o'er this little twin grave
Of the treasures now buried here, each side by side,

"Under the sod and the dew,"
Sleeping together for aye—
Sweet little babe of the Blue,
Dear little babe of the Gray.

What matters it now?—but question them not;
Enough that they suffer a father's keen woe—
The past is forgiven—perchance is forgot;
And true are the tears that in sympathy flow,
Through which they behold on that "beautiful shore,"
Two twin angels, in garments of white,
Whose wee dimpled fingers now beckon them o'er
The dark-flowing river, they've taken their flight.

Up from the sod and the dew,
Leading and showing the way—
Pure angel babe of the Blue!
Pure angel babe of the Gray!

THE NEWPORT CLUB.

We take great pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the following letters extracted from the Alta of September 24th, and in doing so remind them that scandal, like death, "loves a shining mark." Feeling that Mr. James R. Keene is too widely known and too well beloved in this community to need any indorsement of ours, we refrain from further comment upon the impudent falsehood under consideration, and content ourselves in quoting from the Stock Report of last Wednesday, which very pertinently remarks that "the journalistic blackguard who started such a rumor is a disgrace to his profession:"

James R. Keene and the Newport Club.

SAN FRANCISCO, September 20th, 1879.

Editors Alta:—Some weeks ago, many of the San Francisco papers published an item stating that Mr. James R. Keene had been black-balled by the Newport Club. How it happens that this statement is entirely false, as will be seen by reference to the closed letter published in the New York Commercial Advertiser. It is likely that Mr. Keene has not been in the least disquieted by the erroneous announcement. But his friends here are not so philosophical. To be black-balled by a Club is not necessarily a disgrace, but it is certainly no honor. "Jim Keene" is a man of whom San Francisco is proud, and with good reason. If integrity, intellect, cultivation and extreme kindness of heart, are attributes that count at all, Mr. Keene is one of those before whom all doors should gladly swing open. There is no Club in the land that might not feel honored to him for a member. This being the case, his many friends here were disgusted at the slight which was supposed to have been put upon him. Most of them read the misstatement. Few have had a chance to see the correction. For this reason, will you kindly publish the inclosed, and oblige

AN OLD SUBSCRIBER.

NEWPORT, August 30th, 1879.

Editor New York Commercial Advertiser:—In an article in the Commercial Advertiser, with the heading, "A Bit of Snobbery," it is stated that Mr. James R. Keene had been black-balled by the Newport Club. Mr. Keene's name has never been offered for membership of the Club, and has never been black-balled by the Club. On the 1st of May, Mr. Keene's name was entered as a subscriber for the season, and he paid the usual subscription. Since then the privileges of the Club have been open to him, as they are open to hundreds of other season subscribers. I respectfully ask that you give this a place in the columns of the Commercial Advertiser.

DOOMED CABUL.

The advance on Cabul continues, and we may shortly expect to hear of the capture of Afghanistan's capital. What the British are going to do with the city after they have taken it, is not so easy to anticipate. That they will permanently keep Cabul, we do not believe; that would be equivalent to making all Afghanistan a bona fide British possession, which England would thereafter be bound in honor to defend against all comers. Now, England does not want this. A boundary which can be defended means safety and strength, but every foot of land acquired beyond that line is weakness and risk. The proper boundary of India is that established by the late Afghan treaty, and generally called the "scientific frontier." Territory acquired beyond that must have a frontier equally "scientific," or its acquisition is a loss instead of a gain. As is well known, Afghanistan has no such frontier. The British troops will, therefore, probably only occupy Cabul long enough to insure the punishment of the rebel ringleaders, and exact an indemnity for the massacre. Perhaps, also, she will modify the treaty so as to make its terms harder than before. In spite of Yakoob Khan's protestations of non-complicity in the tragedy, it is not at all likely that he will be left at the head of the nation. If he was not a party to the massacre, he was at least incompetent to prevent it, and in either case is clearly not the man for the place he now occupies. Besides, his excuses were very shallow, and the circumstances very suspicious. While the slaughter was going on at the Embassy, he claimed to be defending himself against the furious populace, with the assistance of only five followers. If some scores of brave and desperate British soldiers were so quickly overpowered, what chance would he have had?

Meanwhile, the Russian Press is making a terrible hullabaloo about the massacre, and weeping like a lot of crocodiles for the dreadful fate that is going to befall the British arms, unless the good will of Russia is at once sought. The good will of that Power is, however, about as valuable as its good faith, and England places no trust in either.

It is to be deeply regretted that the chances of politics have made it necessary for us to lose Mr. Humphreys, who has so long and so ably filled the office of City and County Surveyor; and his recent appointment by the Board of Supervisors to superintend the construction of that difficult and most important public work, the Army-street sewer, is but a fitting recognition of his rare capacity. At the same time, the Board do not seem to have devoted much thought to the subject of a proper compensation for the services of an experienced and most competent officer when they allowed Mr. Humphreys but ten dollars a day. In the County Surveyor's office there are now deputies, who are by no means overpaid, who are receiving twelve dollars a day for the discharge of duties which require no part of the experience, and but little of the professional skill absolutely demanded in the direction of a great public improvement, and secured to the city by Humphreys' acceptance of the position offered.

Last Sunday's Chronicle was an admirably complete paper, the first worked off on the new press, and all remarked the style in which it was cut and folded, and pasted at the back, so that the leaves could be turned. It is not often that the public call for a fourth edition of a Sunday paper, as they were doing for this on Thursday.

The reports of the heads of departments, submitted herewith, are, as usual, so complete, that in them you possess full details of the affairs of the Company.

Upon examination, you will perceive that there has been an increase of business during the past year. Although that increase has not been as great as you might have reasonably expected, yet, when you consider the vastness of our country and its undeveloped resources, you may anticipate, as time advances, a greater and greater increase of traffic. When the arts and sciences of China and Japan shall be supplemented with those of Europe and America, the people of these countries will be, in their productive capacity and in their readiness and ability to exchange, substantially equal to the same number of Europeans or Americans. No man can estimate what the business from that source will be, but it will be vast—probably far beyond what the most sanguine now anticipates. On the whole, the prospects of your Company are now as bright as ever they were, and since the time when your road made its junction with the Union Pacific, its future has been steadily brightening.

Since your last annual meeting, the Supreme Court of the United States has decided the "Thurman Bill" to be constitutional in its provisions. That bill assumes to dispose of the net income of your Company. The new Constitution of the State provides for the control of the gross income by three Commissioners. The two seem to be entirely inconsistent, for the control of the net income would appear necessarily to carry with it the control of the gross, so as to permit the possibility of a net. The Commissioners elected under the new Constitution may so control the gross income as to leave no net.

In this there is a manifest conflict of jurisdiction, and a judicial decision, determining between these two mighty and conflicting powers, is necessary for the protection of the interests of the stockholders and the creditors of the Company.

There is no foundation in good reason for the attempts made by the General Government and by the State to specially control your affairs. It is a question of might, and it is to your interest to have it determined where the power resides. Perhaps it is not strange that the attempt should be made to control the railroads of the State, however unwise it may be, or however arbitrary and absolute the manner, because upon them depends so largely the question of production and the exchange of the products of the labor of the citizens of the State. Through the aid of the telegraph, the printing-press and of steam, the whole civilized world is, in many respects, one great neighborhood; and the only question to be considered in the matter of the free exchange of the products of the most extreme portions, is that of transportation. The products, the wealth of the country, depend upon the cheapness of transportation. It is a problem that interests all, and particularly the managers of the railroads.

In illustration: In this State, hitherto, the law has allowed a maximum charge of fifteen cents per ton per mile for freight. Your Company, in many cases, has been compelled to carry goods below that rate, and, in doing so, its first regard—as with all well-regulated companies and individuals—has been the financial result of its business. Every reduction below the legal maximum of fifteen cents per ton per mile is a discrimination in a measure forced upon the Company by distance, the character and value of the products moved, the community of interests between the producer and the carrier, and by competition. Other factors of minor importance, not necessary to mention, also enter into consideration; but these are the chief causes. Discrimination, in one sense, may be said to be made only upon compulsion, and always against the carrier—as he would not take less than his maximum rate unless forced to do so by some of the causes above stated. Discrimination against an individual or a community is a thing unknown.

The discrimination most prejudicial to the interests of the Company is that which arises from competition by other carriers, which forces the acceptance of a lower rate than could otherwise be wisely obtained; yet, it is better to accept a low rate, even though it pay but one penny over the cost of movement, when that is all that can be obtained, than not to move the particular freight. For this reason, oftentimes where there is vigorous competition, the carrier finds it necessary to carry freights at less rates for longer than for a shorter distance. To illustrate: Freight is carried by rail from San Francisco to Los Angeles at the present time for a less rate than to some intermediate points. This the Railroad Company is compelled to do to meet competition by ocean steamers—Los Angeles being a competing point. The rates to the intermediate points, however, are not affected at all by this competition, being neither raised nor lowered thereby. By this competition the real loser is the carrier, the competing point having all the benefits. The greater the competition between two points, the lower the rates and smaller the profits of the carrier. Points where there is no competition, however, cannot justly claim the concessions which better located places can demand, but must pay the ordinary rates for carriage. In some cases the non-competitive point might be injured, because of the superior business location of the competing point; but that is not the fault of the carrier. A case in point has recently been brought to public attention in New York. Goods are sometimes, through the force of competition, carried from Chicago to New York City at a less rate than from Rochester to New York. Rochester is situated upon the line of the New York Central Railroad, with great natural milling facilities, and with a long-established business of that kind. It has been paying to the Railroad Company a fair compensation from transportation. The Rochester miller buys his wheat in Chicago, transports it to his mill to be ground, and then ships it to New York, to the same market which receives the wheat and flour of the Chicago dealer. Chicago is a great railroad center, and a competing point with several of the great trunk lines leading to the seaboard; and between these lines competition is very strong. The New York Central, in order to get business from Chicago, is compelled, therefore, to its great loss, to bid against the other roads, and sometimes to accept a less rate for carrying grain and flour to New York City than is charged from Rochester, an intermediate, non-competitive point. In this case, while the railroad is the great sufferer—because its road is in operation and must take what it can get, even if there be no profit—the Rochester miller suffers with it. He finds, for the time, his profits destroyed or materially lessened; not because his own rates are too high, but because of the low rates prevailing between Chicago and New York. Somebody living at a competing point enjoys advantages he has not; and no legislation, no expenditure of money can equalize localities having different natural advantages, as between such nature herself has discriminated.

San Francisco, located as it is upon the Bay of San Francisco, has an open highway for her products to almost every market in the world. As a seller, she has the advantage of the competition of purchasers, and as a buyer, she has the same advantages of all markets at which to buy cheapest. She avails herself of competition; she profits by it, as people always do. She discriminates in her markets, and in her routes of transportation. And so it is that San Francisco is a large, prosperous, commercial city—and is located upon this peninsula because of its great natural advantages. She is able, because of her location, to substantially dictate the price she will pay to the railroad companies for the transportation of freight from one ocean to the other. She has a route by the way of Cape Horn, another by the way of the Isthmus of Panama, and the prices she pays the railroad companies are regulated by what she can command from these routes. In fact, the Railroad Company, aside from the one class of freight which pays the maximum, has no power to arbitrarily fix the prices of freights. They are fixed by circumstances, which the Railroad Company cannot control. About seven per cent. only of the freight moved upon your road pays the maximum, and probably the price to the consumer is not increased upon a single pound of this class of freight because of any changes made by your Company. In managing their business, railroad companies are influenced by a consideration of their own interests, the same as all corporations and all individuals. When, from any circumstances, the price of grain in Europe is high, and European purchasers are in the market as competitors with our own purchasers for the commodities of our State, we find the farmer takes advantage of that competition and obtains from the home purchaser a price equal to that which the foreign purchaser offers. In this way the farmer sometimes obtains double the price for the product of his farm that he would have received if it were not for this competition. In like manner, competition is availed of by all classes of people in all kinds of business, and it is a factor that must be considered and cannot be denied to any corporation or person, except at the expense of the business.

Again, referring to our local business here: At Los Angeles, under the new Constitution, the Railroad Company will be deprived of that freight business, absolutely. It is not large in itself, and not, therefore, of very serious importance to the Railroad Company; but it practically deprives the people of Los Angeles of railroad freighting—perhaps of the use of the railroad entirely. When we reflect that the whole question of production, the exchange of products, and commerce itself, is dependent upon transportation, it seems strange, indeed, that investments which tend to facilitate and cheapen it by offering additional accommodations, or by increasing competition, which increase and develop the resources of the country, should be discouraged or hampered, and their profits limited—possibly destroyed. It would seem that wise statesmanship requires that a business of this kind, which harms nobody, but which almost always tends largely to the benefit of the Commonwealth—even though the stockholders should fail to reap the anticipated profits—would be encouraged, and, if regulated at all, that the State should provide a guarantee against loss of profits because of such regulation. It would seem but fair that if the State should regulate any legitimate business so as to endanger its profits, it should make such a guarantee; and such will be the conclusion of a wiser statesmanship than was exhibited in the formation of the new Constitution. Your Company, however, has little to apprehend from the illy-digested and illy-considered article in the new Constitution providing for the election of Commissioners with autocratic powers, because the Act of Congress authorizing the construction of your road has given to you the regulation of your own freights and fares, up to a certain point, as appears in Section 18 of the Act of July 2, 1862. If the Commissioners should be inclined to rule hardly against the railroad companies, the interests of the State (which cannot be developed fairly except through the construction and operation of many more miles of railroad than it now has) will require that they shall practically do no injury to existing railroads; because, if they do, there will surely be no further construction of railroads in this State, for no capitalists can be found so reckless as to make investments where the gross proceeds are to be regulated by somebody aside from those who make the investment, and who may be the owners.

The question of transportation is not settled by the new Constitution. It is so important that it will never be settled except upon a just and wise basis. This the new Constitution does not do; and while it will, in some respects, injure existing railroads, it will probably, in a narrow sense, benefit them by substantially guarding them against competition in the construction of new and competing lines. Your railroad, however, is so located—being a trunk line—that its interests are above any such narrow view, but will be best subserved by the largest development of the industries and resources of the State.

How community of interests becomes a factor in the regulation of freights may be illustrated by assuming a country without railroads and unimproved. It may be rich in agricultural and mineral resources. One body of men may desire to cultivate the land, another to mine, and so on, and another may be willing to furnish means of transportation, the price to be regulated by what the commodities can afford to pay and by what the carrier can afford to move them for. Thus, if the product of the mines is gold, a very high rate can be charged on it; but if it is iron or coal, the rate must be so low as to permit the producer to meet competition in the market. The same rule applies in the case of agricultural products. In such cases, among other factors, not only should the products of the country be taken into consideration, their bulk, their value, but also the volume of business the railroad may have to do, and whether the freight moves principally in one direction or equally both ways. The prosperity of the railroad depends upon the prosperity of the State. The railroad, therefore, is always interested in building up the country, as is the public in maintaining the railroad in order that it may have transportation.

Your company has suffered from the influences of the Communistic sentiment. Labor, machinery, and capital have been unemployed, and of course the business of the company has not improved as much as you might otherwise have reasonably expected. Communism, however, in our country, where every citizen is on an equality with every other citizen, can have no permanent hold. We have much more to fear from Absolutism, without which communism is a mere sentiment. Our Government is peculiar in that it was really founded upon a civilized idea, and has thus far been mostly maintained upon it. Other Governments have been founded in force, and have been maintained by force. Our fathers, declaring the inalienable rights of man and, further, that governments were instituted to secure him in those rights, proceeded to form a Constitution based upon those principles, and for their maintenance, under which the one citizen was to be as safe in his person and his property as all others; but, unfortunately, scarcely was the Constitution adopted when came the declaration that the majority should rule, intensified afterward in its application by the calamitous declaration that to the victors belonged the spoils. The idea of the Constitution was that the majority should administer, but that the Constitution should always rule. As the idea that the majority should rule has grown, the protecting force of the Constitution has been weakened, until, at last, the "Granger Cases," the "Warehouse Cases," the Railroad laws of the Northwest, your own case, under the "Thurman Bill," and the decisions in those cases, have been made possible. The principles laid down in those decisions seem to recognize two things; the Communistic idea of the distribution of property and the Absolutism of control by a majority of the people. Absolutism may be as complete, and has often times been more complete and tyrannical and oppressive, under a Republican than under a monarchical form of government; and statesmen and teachers will be compelled to take consideration of the present tendencies to Absolutism in our government, and instruct the people as to the true interest they should follow. We shall then soon return to the civilized government of our fathers, which gave protection to the individual and made him truly a free and independent citizen. The idea of our Government was adverse to the paternal or patriarchial idea of guardianship of the individual in his person and in the acquisition and disposal of his property, that so long prevailed in the formation of governments. The intention of our system was, that every man should be perfectly free and independent, subject simply to police regulations, restraining him from using his own to the detriment of his neighbor.

The changes in the organic law in relation to railroad corporations were undoubtedly influenced by the consideration that your company has received, in some manner, aid from the County, State and National governments; but, as to what this aid was, there is unquestionably great misapprehension. The fact is, there has never been any donation made to your company, either by the National, the State, or the County governments. The counties of Sacramento and Placer subscribed to the stock of your original company, and gave their bonds in payment. Afterward, they disposed of their stock for as much as, or more than, the bonds were worth at the time they issued them. The city and county of San Francisco, apprehensive of possible liability for the debts of the company when its affairs did not look very bright, compromised with the company, and, in lieu of subscribing for stock, gave four hundred of her bonds. The only aid rendered by the State was, under contract, to pay the interest on 1,500 of the company's bonds of $1,000 each—the Company to pay the principal, and in return it was to render, and has been rendering, very important service. The aid derived from the Government of the United States was its bonds loaned, and alternate sections of land given upon a contract very onerous upon your Company, and of which only its possible want of ability to otherwise construct the road, justified acceptance. Your Company has not been enriched by donations. The County, State and National Governments have, under their contracts, not only realized all, and more than they expected, but have had much the best of the bargain. If, when they made those contracts, they wanted something else than therein provided a freer exercise of power of regulation, for instance they ought to have so nominated in the bond. To claim and to take what is not so nominated, is to take by the exercise of might not of right. Under these contracts, the Company owes the Counties, the State and the United States, nothing but its good will and loyalty.

"PLEASURE'S WAND."

"We Obey no Wand but Pleasure's."—Tom Moore.

Bush Street Theater.—The last week of the minstrels has been as successful from a point of view of attendance as the first, and but for other attractions Manager Locke would be warranted in extending the engagement. The programme this week contained a few novelties. There were some new songs in the first part and one or two new acts. Harry Kennedy's exhibition of his wonderful ventriloquial powers still remained the strongest feature of the whole bill. The concluding burlesque is very ludicrous, and aptly closes the evening's amusement. On Monday Pyramus and Thisbe will be produced. Great preparations have been made for this occasion. The principal parts are in able hands, the chorus has been very carefully drilled under the able guidance of Stephen Leach, and the costumer and scenic artist have received carte blanche. Everything betokens an auspicious opening, and the only question in doubt is as to the merits of the work itself. The composer and author are both well known, and, belonging as they do, to the fraternity of critics, will have opportunity to see "le revers de la medaille."

California Theater.—The "late unpleasantness" has inspired many a writer of books, many a poet and many a composer, but, strange to say, does not seem to have had any effects upon the creating powers of playwrights. At present writing I can recall but two plays founded, or at least turning, upon incidents of the civil war—Struck Oil and Belle Lamar. The former still holds the boards, and serves solely as the framework for the exhibition of Jimmy Williamson's abilities as a character actor, as the martial scenes it contains are of but little import toward the whole. Boucicault's play proved a complete failure, and, I believe, has never been played outside of New York. It would seem that this terrible struggle, so full as it was of romantic incidents, of estranged families, parted lovers, and heroics of all kinds, would have been used with good effect by numberless writers. That this is not so, is nevertheless a matter of satisfaction. In these days of enthusiasm, when the foes of a vicennium ago walk arm-in-arm under the Blue and Gray, the feelings of rancor and hate have no right or ground to exist. The glorious deeds of our noble volunteers can always be remembered; they themselves honored and respected, without appealing to sectional prejudices. Politics is one thing, and the drama another. These remarks are suggested by the production of The Color Guard. In action and plot (!) there is nothing to revive in one's mind the issues that lie buried in the bloody chasm, but the dialogue is brimful of allusions breathing hate and malice, that clashed and jarred on the ears of all present. As a means of introducing the pleasing and very effective spectacle of military evolutions on the stage, together with scenes of warfare, and also beautiful tableaux, this production can be considered a success. There is no actual plot, and the action suffered from the very large number of amateurs in the cast. Miss Stanhope is rapidly becoming a great favorite, perhaps not with the general public, but with the steady habitues. She is natural, pleasing and agreeable in manners and speech; her play of emotions is never exaggerated, but always within the bounds of plausibility and probability; her elocutionary powers are of a high order, and would be more felt but for a comparatively weak organ, which is this lady's most serious blemish. John H. Fay gave a fair sample of the usual stage German, and Felix Morris had a capital Irish character in charge. Keene's lines were full of patriotism and pathos, but he marred their effectiveness by following his predilection for rant. On Monday evening, the house was filled to its utmost capacity, but the opening scenes of the play were listened to with but indifferent attention pending the arrival of our "foremost citizen." When he appeared, the curtain was temporarily lowered, the orchestra played "Hail to the Chief." and the audience cheered, applauded and waved handkerchiefs until the compliment was acknowledged by a bow. Our audiences do not know how to pay honors on an occasion like this. While the guest is proceeding to his box, the audience should rise, the band playing, until he seats himself, and then should break forth the cheer that denotes love of country and of its heroes. The same proceeding should take place upon the distinguished party leaving the theater. In this respect, the audience did miserably at this theater on Monday evening. The reception at Baldwin's on this point was an improvement. Now, to-night at this theater, will be an opportunity to do the thing in style. To satisfy the express desire of General Grant to see Pinafore, it will be played here this evening by the Melville troupe. The enlarged stage and increased orchestral facilities will help to make this performance a capital one.

Baldwin's Theater.—The bill this week has been of the potpouri order. Monday and Tuesday, Won at Last; Wednesday, Miss Varian's benefit (performance honored by the presence of General Grant), and for the rest of the week, The Marriage by Moonlight. The house was naturally crowded Wednesday, and the General and party were received with all the honors and enthusiasm possible. Miss Varian's effort as "Juliet" cannot be called, even by the most partial of her admirers, a successful one. This young lady has been brought up in the quiet, reserved style of the modern comedy, and the more highly-colored methods of the legitimate are difficulties to her. Her "Dora," in Diplomacy, is a very pleasing piece of acting, and has already been commented upon in these columns. Mrs. Judah, who kindly volunteered, appeared as "The Nurse," in Romeo and Juliet, and received the warm reception usually accorded her. The cast of Won at Last and The Marriage by Moonlight was the same as formerly, with the solitary exception of the substitution of Miss Jeffreys-Lewis for Miss Coghlan. The mere instituting of comparisons does not constitute criticism, especially in this case, where the talents and manner of these ladies are so widely dissimilar. The two heroines in the above-mentioned plays require treatment hardly within the range of Miss Lewis' abilities, and preëminently suited to Miss Coghlan's characteristics. On Monday, Sothern's latest London success, Crutch and Toothpick, will be produced. This is said to be a very amusing play. As a rule, Sothern's plays without Sothern have always proven failures; but this production may prove to be the exception.

The Carnival Ball, Thursday night, was in every way a great success, and Colonel Andrews is to be complimented on his able management of the affair. We have not space to go into details of the numerous characters worthy of mention—among which was the splendid make-up of Joe Guisti, representing Dr. Glenn carrying the "Sailor Boy," that proved too much of a load for the Gubernatorial aspirant. The characters were numerous and the audience large.

German Theater.—Magda Irschick made her farewell appearance last Sunday evening. The play was Medea. There is no grander character in the range of the tragic stage. It was portrayed with all the talent this lady is so richly endowed with, and was an admirable piece of dramatic acting. At the same time, this impersonation can not be considered as the most striking evidence of Irschick's great genius. To me she has been most satisfactory as "Griseldis" and "Brunhilde." This may be due to the fact that in all her other tragic characters she must bear comparison, in my recollection, with Ristori and Ziegler. Be it as it may, the high position of Irschick on the stage is her own, through the possession of great talents, guided and directed by nature's gift—genius. Our German-speaking community are strongly indebted to M'me Genée's enterprise in procuring for it the primeur of this lady's acting. A very successful stay in the United States can be safely predicted to Magda Irschick, for merit of such a high order can not go unrecognized. To-morrow evening the company appear in L'Arronge's comedy, Haselmann's Daughters, and will undoubtedly do some good work, as this is in the range of their excellent abilities.

Standard Theater.—Manager Kennedy has re-opened this theater for a few nights with the Emily Melville Pinafore Troupe, to give our country cousins and our distinguished guest an opportunity of seeing Gilbert & Sullivan's satire produced in good style. By especial arrangement with Manager Barton, the troupe will appear Saturday evening at the California Theater, and General Grant will be present. The amateurs are playing this charming absurdity admirably now. The only change in the cast is in the character of "Buttercup." It is now in the hands of Miss Neville Courtney (Julia Lawton), and is acted with good taste and intelligence. A point to be commended is a regard for the sense of the character by a correct and exact make-up. The children have been playing in the afternoons. The audiences have not been large, but this is to be ascribed to the want of proper publicity given this revival. Melville Pinafore matinee to-day.

Tivoli.—Judging from the first performance of Laura Honey's operetta, The Wreck of the Pinafore, it will prove a popular success. The managers did their best in the matter of stage-setting, orchestra, etc., and all the principals who have been singing at the play lately were in the cast. The dialogue is not bright or witty, far from it; the lines are meaningless, and there are too many antiquated puns for patient comfort. The music, although in several numbers entirely too reminiscent of the popular melodies of the day, is, as a whole, very creditable to the composer. There are here and there several hits of harmony that are extremely pretty. The Tivoli is hardly to express a critical opinion of an operetta after a single rendition, there being too much noise and activity, which disturbs the attention. As this little composition is undoubtedly worthy of extended notice, a more detailed review will be given in our next issue.

The grand opening of the Vienna Concert Gardens, at Sutter and Stockton streets, on Saturday last, was attended by an immense throng of cultivated patrons of the arts. This family resort, long known under the name of the "Tivoli," has been enlarged, entirely renovated and beautified throughout—the large hall being frescoed in the very finest style, so that it is now superior to any in the city. The character of the musical entertainments here offered is well known to be of the first class, and visitors, while sipping, in company with their wives and children, the choicest wines, sherbets, beer, etc., have their ears charmed with the matchless strains of the great composers. Equal advantages are not to be found at any place open to the public on this coast.

J. F. Searight, the young tenor, seems to gain more prominence in the musical world each week. We noticed he sang the tenor solo in the grand hymn, "He Comes, Lo, Triumphant!" at Grant's Reception at the Palace, last Saturday.

Chit-Chat.—Aimee sailed for Europe on the 17th of September.—Harrigan is at work on a comic opera, music by Dave Braham.—Sothern will have a new play, by Gilbert, about October 1st.—Col. Sam. Ward, Genevieve Ward's father, a gentleman known in San Francisco in early days, died recently in New York.—Daly, in New York, will produce a new opera by Planquette, author of Les Cloches de Corneville, entitled The Passing Regiment.—Lester Wallack will act in a new comedy from the French, entitled The Nabob.—Capoul and Paola Marie are drawing immensely. All the girls are in love again with the sweet tenor. Marie, although not the artist Aimee is, has a better voice.—Hazelman's Daughter, a very successful German comedy, written by L'Arenge (to be played to-morrow evening at the German Theater) has been adapted for the English stage under the name of Our Daughters. It was produced for the first time at Haverly's, New York, September 15th.—Emma Thursby will appear, for the first time after her return, in New York, December 1st.—Florence'e new play, by B. C. Woolf, is called Millions.—Ada Cavendish will soon play here again.—Clara Louise Kellogg has been seriously ill at Aix-les-Bains.—The school-house song, as sung at Wallack's, in Wolfert's Roost, has become very popular in Gotham.—The criticism of Boston is said to be very rose-waterish. That city ought to give us the best criticism in the country—there's so much culture there—but it doesn't.—Dickie Lingard has been playing in Boston, but they don't take to her.—Boucicault, although receiving praise for his new arrangement of Booth'e Theater, is strongly blamed for painting out all the exquisite medallions, in fresco, painted by Garibholdi; this gentleman is at present in New York, and is receiving all sorts of complimentary attention.—The mania in New York for the Eastlake and English Gothic style of decoration, is subsiding; the style now is Louis XV., Rennaissance, and the Restoration of Napoleon I.—Mapleson opens, in October, with a grand troupe.

SPORTING ITEMS.

Rowing.—The Pacific Amateur Rowing Association have admitted the Golden Gate and Dolphin Clubs.——Mr. Griffin's new four-oared barge is a beauty; she is 34 feet long and weighs only 200 pounds. The Dolphin Club will most likely purchase her.——Ten barges from the different clubs turned out to welcome Grant.——The entries for the St. George and Columbia Rowing Clubs' Regatta closed on Saturday last. The list is as follows: McKinlay Cup Race (four-oared shell—Pioneer R. C.—A. Tobin (bow), 2 M. Sullivan, 3 J. Sullivan, M. T. Murphy (stroke). St. George R. C.—H. N. Wallace (bow), 2 C. R. Browne, 3 D. Brown, R. D. Girvin (stroke); substitutes—J. G. Lucas and C. J. O'Kell. Second-class (four oared shell race)—Pioneer R. C.—J. J. Wheland (bow), 2 B. P. Olliver, 3 F. Noching, J Fosber (stroke). St. George R. C.—C. J. O'Kell (bow), 2 T. C. Friedlander, 3 E. T. Hubback, J. G. Lucas (stroke). Four-oared, Out-rigged Gig—Ariel B. C.—Fred. Smith (bow), 2 W. H. Growney, 3 J. C. Cotsford, W. H. Wall (stroke). California Theater R. C.—S. Watkins (bow), 2 Chas. Schwilk, 3 James Brown, James Aird (stroke). St. George R. C.—H. N. Wallace (bow), 2 J. G. Lucas, 3 C. R. Browne, R. D. Girvin (stroke); D. Brown, substitute. Single-scull shell—Columbia R. C.—S. W. Feun; Pioneer R. C.—J. Sullivan; Ariel B. C.—Leander Stevenson. Junior single-scull shell—Columbia R. C.—W. J. Casey and J. E. George; St. George R. C.—W. A. Wilson. Both crews entered for the McKinlay Cup are rowing constantly. The Pioneer's fastest time over their one mile and return course is reported to be 13 min. 30 sec.; the St. George's, 13 min. 50 sec. As it is impossible to have two courses eimilarly favorable and unfavorable for making good time, these figures cannot form a reliable guide for forming a correct opinion of the comparative merits of the two crews. Still, with our rowing men, an easy victory is expected for the Pioneers. From what little we ourselves have seen of the rowing of the two crews, we think that the St. George will pusb their opponents hard on the to-the-staks mile, and on the return will make a good enough struggle to insure an interesting race. We should be surprised, however, to see them cross the winning line ahead. We have to regret that the other clubs besides the St. George and Pioneer have not entered for the "second-class, four-oared shell." We had hoped that the promise of such an event as this would have awakened sufficieut energy aud enthusiasm with them as to have brought their younger hands to the front. The Pioneer crew, for thie contest, are practicing conscientiously and deserve victory, as their opponents are rarely to be seen on ths water, laziness being the order of the day with them. The out-rigged gig crews of the California Theater and Ariel Clubs are not as constant in their practice as is desirable, still each crew appears to he well together, and they may be expected to make a creditable display. In the single-scull races, exciting races are looked for between Mr. Fenn, of the Columbia, and Mr. Sullivan, of the Pioneer. There only having been one entry for the barge race, the Committee have decided to hold a second-class in its place, entries for which close to-day at 12 M.——The race between Hanlan and Courtenay, for the Hop Bitters Prize, is postponed to October 16tb.

Shooting.—Complaints are frequntly made hy sportsmen that when traveliug over the different railroads in this State they are subjected to unfair and extortionate charges for their guns and dogs. In order that our readers may know exactly what they are entitled to pay we interviewed the baggage agents and superintendents of all the roads and append their charges. All the companies lay down the rule that personally they make no charge at all, but allow their employés to collect a small gratuity in compeusation for the extra trouble they are put to in taking care of dogs and guns, for which they (the employés) are responsible to the owner. The C. P. R. R. rule is that guns taken apart and packed in cases may be carried in the passenger cars free of charge. In all other cases guns must be put in charge of the baggage man, who is allowed a fee of twenty-five cents for any distance on his route. Dogs can he carried in the baggage car only, in care of the haggage man, who is responsible to the owner for their proper treatment, and is allowed a fee of fifty cents for fifty miles or less, and twenty-five cents extra for every additional fifty miles or less; but in no case must the charge exceed the local ticket rate over ths same route. The N. P. C. R. R. allow a fee of twenty-five cents for the care of a dog that must be carried in the baggage car. Guns taken apart and in cases can be carried in the passenger cars. Other guns must go in the haggage car, but in no case does this company allow any fee to its employés for guns. The S. P. C. R. R. rules about guns are the same as ths C. P. R. R. They allow a charge of twenty-five cents for dogs that must go in charge of the baggage man; but no charge can bs collected for dogs or guns belonging to membere of the Sportman's or other recognized clubs. The S. P. R. R. rules respecting dogs are the same as the C. P. R. R., but in case of a special meetiug, euch as a coursing match, they are always willing to carry doge free. Guns are checked and carried free. The superintendents of all these roade request that any overcharge he reported to them, and promise to refund the money and discharge the offender. We hope after this notice that sportsmen will resist any attempt at overcharge. Of course, if a case should occur where the haggage car is too crowded to accommodate dogs, and their owners are forced to care for them themselves, the baggage man is not entitled to any fee.——Nothing is of so much importance to shooters as the quality of their ammunition. Buying cheap powder, shot or cartridges is false economy. We hear many complainte about ths Winchester cartridgs shelle. Our own observation justify us in pronouncing them as a fraud and ths worst shells offered for eale. They are uneven in make, they jam in ths chamber, and are in every way unreliable. Out of one hundred we have found as many as thirty with the hrass heads so split as to make them unsafe. We warn our readers against buying ths Winchester cartridge for the eake of eaving fifty cents a box, and recommend them alwaye to buy the very best ehells they can obtain. The prominent dealers of this city acknowledge that ths complaint against the Wincheeter gun cartridges is general, and in several cases valuable guns have been ruined through their use. Of American cartridges we can recommend ths U. M. C. Cartridge, and of English make, hoth ths Eley and Joyce make are perfectly reliable.——Ths San Francisco and N. P. R. R., whose popular road goes through eome of the best shooting-grounds in ths State, have decided to limit their charges to 25 cents for a dog, and allow all guns to he carried free.

Swimming.—Full details of the fifty-mile swim came to hand last Thursday. The affair was in no sense a success. The start was made at 1:20 P. M., Daily going to the front; he was soon passed by Von Schoening, who kept the lead all through the race, closely followed by Daily, who was some distance ahead of Webb, and not passed by him, as incorrectly reported by telegraph. At 3:13 Wade left the water, complaining that the salt water had blinded him; his score was 3 miles 2¾ laps. Daily injured his knee by striking the keel of the stake-boat on the last lap of his fifth mile, at which time he was close to the leading man, and was taken into the boat just as Webb passed him; the time was 5:34. About an hour later Webb gave out, after making 6 miles 1 lap. At 7:9 P. M. Werhan pulled out, saying he could not see the stake-boat; his score was 5 miles; had he made 7 laps more, he could have claimed second money. This left Von Schoening alone, but he stayed in 6 minutes longer, leaving with a score of 7 miles 1 lap—not much toward a fifty-mile race, but sufficient to entitle him to the coin. The course was not fairly measured, and no record can he claimed. It was reckoned 5 laps to the mile, but fell short. We hear that the prizes offered were not forthcoming, the competitors being swindled.——A Portland printer is talking about making a match with J. P. Flemming. He can be accommodated.——J. Spring and E. Harris swum a half-mile race at the Mermaid Baths, North Beach, last Thursday, for a silver medal. Harris took the lead for about 400 yards, when he was passed by Spring, who won by a length. The time taken was 10 minutes 15 seconds, but we are not sure the course was correctly measured.

Pedestrianism.—As the time for its commencement approaches, the interest in the six-days' walk at the Pavilion is very intense. As there is no proper system of book-making in vogue here, betting on the result is very wild, but it shows in some degree who is thought to stand the best chance. McIntyre's friends have backed him at evens, and in some cases odds have been offered, that he is the winner. The Pacific Stock Board have made a favorite of Berger, but he has no record to justify their zeal. Bowman, who was third in the last race, has many strong supporters; slight odds that he will take a place is a good investment. Callahan does not find much favor, the opinion being that, though he has lots of pluck, he lacks bottom. Among the outsiders, Francois, Fergusson and Thompson are the most prominent, but we don't go much on the latter.——For the ladies' race, Von Berg is the favorite—contingent on her entering; but good records may be expected from several ladies who are as yet unknown as pedestriennes. Sadie Donley has lots of backers for a place; but she has a very poor style of walking, and can only win in default of good competitors.——As we do not yet know the entries in ths race for men against horses, it is impossible to pass an opinion; but we are inclined to believe that a good pedestrian could outgo any horse in six days.——The race now in progress at Gilmore's Gardens looks a sure thing for Rowell, who has maintained a good lead ever since the start.

Baseball.—The Hop Bitters Club, of Rochester, will play ths Mutuals at Oakland, Sunday. Sunday week they will probably play a picked nine at Oakland. They are also trying to arrange a match for next Saturday.——The exhibition game between the Knickerbockers and Californias at the Recreation Grounds, last Sunday, was characterized by a disgusting display of hoodlumism by hoth contestants and spectators. The incapacity of ths umpire, who went by the name of Ford, was the cause of this trouble. The Knicks won; score, 6 to 5.——The game at Oakland, between the Mutuals and Athletics, resulted in a victory for the former; score, 18 to 14.——All the paper talk about the Chicago Club not being able to play here because Nolan is an expelled league member, amounts to nothing. They will play with Nolau whether he is reinstated or not.

Yachting.—The yachts made a splendid display last Saturday; they were the principal feature in the marine parade in honor of Grant.——Mr. Gutte's new schooner yacht was christeued the Chispa last Sunday, Miss Benjamin performing the servics in a very graceful manner.——Mr. Edgar Mills has purchased the Ariel and enrolled her in the San Francisco Yacht Club.——Another model yacht race is talked of.——The Peerless Club will start at 9 o'clock this morning for n trip to the Farallones, in the Fleur de Lis.

Archery.—An archery picnic is on the tapis, to take place at Oakland in about two weeks.——The new range of the Pacific Archery Club, on Post street, near Steiner, is being well attended. Members of the club had their first practice shoot last Saturday.——A club has been lately organized at Los Angeles. The uecessary equipments were ordered from New York, in spite of the fact that they could be purchased hetter and cheaper in San Francisco.

Bicycling.—Keen, Stanton, and several other prominent bicyclists, are coming to America, and will probably reach San Francisco befors Christmas.——There is some talk of a six day bicycle race in this city, for the championship of the Pacific Coast aud a share in the gate moncy. It would he a great attraction, provided a good track could he got.

Coursing.—The Pioneer Club held a business meeting last Tuesday. It was agreed to hold a meeting next Tuesday to fix the time and place of the next course, which has every prospect of being the most eucceeeful and hest attended match ever held on this coast.——The Pacific Coast Club is becoming very popular. Its membership ie rapidly increasing. Arrangements will soon be made for its first fall meeting.

After Separation.

Here are blossoms, love,
That we plucked together.
Blue was all above,
Balmy was the weather,
On that day we, love,
Plucked these flowers together.
Sailors went away
From their home-clad harbors,
Red June followed May
Under leafy arbors.
All who were away
Are within their harbors.

You that sailed from me
On that day of flowers,
Over that sad sea
Under love-lorn bowers,
Have come back to me
With the June of flowers.
All the air is new,
And the balm around us,
Like a magic dew,
Holds us where it found us.
Be thou ever new,
Spell that art around us!

——We had thought that all our papers, morning and evening, were alive to certain objectionable forms of advertising. Under the pressure of public opinion they have almost all done as much as was possible in the way of refusing certain quack advertisements. Then, again, under pressure, they refused hahy-farming advertisements, when they could detect them. We are sorry, however, to say that one of our evening papers which, considering the religious position of its reputed proprietors, should he very much like Cæsar's wife, in heiug above suspicion, has, during the last few days, admitted advertisements that do not look nice: "A young lady (hy hirth) wants £5 to pay a bill which presses, and is willing to reuder servicé, not menial, in return." "A young widow wants a loan of £5, and offers security, or hoard and residence, with good interest." "A young lady engaged in business requires a few pounds to relieve her of pressing difficulties; will any private person kindly lend it?" We have referred to three advertisements. The two last-mentioned appeared in the Echo rccently. The iteration of the word "young" in each advertisement is striking.—Atlas.——We knew a case where some young gipsies were caught in the act of trying to hreak into an old maid's vinery. They had been seized upon hy gardeners and helps when the mistress heard of it, and had them hrought before her. They candidly said that they wanted grapes for a dying girl in their camp. The old maid went to see the invalid herself, found the story to be true, ordered the release of the gipsies, gave them some hunches, and told them to come every day for more so long as the invalid could eat them. Nothing was ever missed from that old maid's premises, neither then nor in after years. In fact, the gipsies never lost a chance of offering her civilities, or of doing some good office for her, so long as she lived; and when she died they sent a gorgeous houquet of hothouse flowers to her grave. The flowers might have heen stolen elsewhere, or might have heen hought honestly, for gipsies are often well enough to do; but the trihute was a touching conclusion to many years of loyal respect and regard hy the trihe to a casual henefactress.—Atlas.——Smart Work.—An enterprising tohacco manufacturer of the north recently did a smart thing. He had the electric light put up in his factory, had it well puffed in the daily papers as likely to supercede gas, invited people to see it—and hought gas shares largely at a low price! The electric light was not a success, but the gas shares were.——A painful scene recently occurred at the Altorf Theater. As "Lucia" was heing performed, a violent thunderstorm burst over the house. The tenor was singing the air in the malediction scene, when Edgardo fell forward, struck down hy lightning. He was immediately raised from the ground, and though then alive, was found to he paralyzed in every limh. The performance, of course, was hrought to an ahrupt termination.——A correspondent who possesses a large collection of old Wedgwood ware, sends the following as bearing out recent remarks ahout Wedgwood: "Many specimens in my collection hear the original selling prices, and these, as compared with the market value of to-day, are almost heyond helief. Two sage-green cups and saucers, with exquisite subjects in relief, and designed hy Flaxman, originally cost six shillings each. I purchased them at Christie's some five years or less ago for seventy guineas. I have also two very fine vases, the original cost of which was ten and twenty guineas each respectively. They are now worth and cost me several hundred pounds each."——The language of religious unction too often strikes the worldly-minded as a mixture of the ludicrous and the profane; and it is difficult to say whether the idea called up by a passage in the Emperor William's letter to Count Moltke, printed recently in the newspapers, is the more shocking or absurd. In presenting to the Field-Marshal the star and portrait of Frederick the Great, the Emperor says: "You will wear the star and likeness of my great ancestor, with the everlasting consciousness of truly and for all time belonging to those who have faithfully guarded the legacy of the great King—the glory of the Prussian army, on which his eye has assuredly looked down from Heaven with satisfaction." The triple incongruity between the person, the place and the occupation of the great Frederick is ridiculous enough. But its ahsurdity yields to the impiety of imagining a glorified spirit hending from the ahodes of bliss to watch "with satisfaction" the performances of a "manslaying machine." The picture would have been complete (and in justice it should have heen so completed) hy imagining the angelic countenance of Drill-Sergeant Frederick William, the real founder of the Prussian army, gazing down from heaven upon it over the shoulder of his son.——The Association of steel rail mills that owns the Bessemer patents in this country is discussing the question of purchasing the Thomas and Gilchrist dephosphorizing patents. The sum named is, we understand, $300,000, It would not he surprising to us if the Association should purchase also the open-hearth patents for this country, and thus prevent any competition in a husiness that is yielding such imperial revenues.——Cruelties continue to he perpetrated hy the King of Burmah.

LETTER FROM ARIZONA.

[illegible] (A. T.) Sept. 18, 1879.

Editor S. F. News Letter—As the contents of your Letter continues to attract considerable attention throughout Arizona, may I beg the insertion of the following items? Arizona, the land of the Aztecs, contains about 113,000 square miles, and, at the present time, a population approximating 30,000. No other country in the world has the mineral resources that can be made to pay so large a profit. Her astonishing capabilities as a mineral producing territory have become so well established, that it is now generally conceded she is soon to stand first as a producer of the precious metals.

Many causes have heretofore prevented her development. Indian hostility, inaccessibility, and consequent great cost of supplies, want of capital, and many other things, have kept her comparatively unknown; and yet so rich are some of her mines that, notwithstanding these difficulties, large fortunes have been made by the most primitive modes of mining.

Every day these drawbacks are gradually disappearing, and, as a consequence, mining property which could not have been worked profitably at a yield of $50 per ton will now pay well at $20.

The first lode in Yavapai County upon which machinery was erected is the Accidental, upon Lynx Creek, about ten miles south and east of Prescott, in a region heavily timbered with pine, spruce and scrubby oak.

This section of the country first attracted the attention of the early pioneers by the wonderfully rich placer diggings. Within a distance of three miles from the Accidental mill over two millions of dollars in placer gold has been taken out (a $50 nugget having been picked up there last week), and now one standing upon an eminence, over nine hundred well-defined lodes can be counted, upon all of which the necessary amount of assessment work has been done.

The unusual quantity of placer gold led to an investigation of the source from which it came, and resulted in the discovery of the Accidental mine in the year 1868. It has been worked more or less since that time, has changed hands several times, and is now owned by the "Lynx Creek Milling and Mining Company." It is a well-defined vein of gold-bearing quartz, from two to four feet wide.

Since the discovery there has never been any systematic working, until it passed under the control of the present owners. The original owners had no capital, and could not incur the expense of buying costly machinery and transporting it to the then wild and almost inaccessible mountain gulch. They selected the richest of its ores, and transported it in sacks on the backs of mules, or, more properly speaking, the "burro," a little animal about three and a half feet high, exceedingly tough, which grows sleek and fat on sticks and old rubbish, and can survive for days on the memory of a good square drink. It will carry with ease anywhere under 300 pounds; they are driven in droves like cows, and are the camel of Arizona.

Subsequent owners purchased a thirty-five horse-power engine, a locomotive boiler, thunderbold crusher, put up arrastras, and erected a large mill building. This rude method of mining was paying very well until the business was brought to a sudden close by the Indians. After years the work was resumed, but as the mine increased in depth the gold became less free; although the ore assayed more, the rude arrastra process gave but a small percentage of the real value, the sulphurets carrying off a large portion of the gold. Two shafts have been put down within the past few months; as they progressed in depth, the ore became richer and the ore body wider, and at the present depth, about 75 feet below the floor of the second tunnel, the average of four assays is over $3,000. Allowing the test was made from picked ore, still it indicates a very rich mine. At this depth, water began to trouble the miners, and the deeper the shaft the more water, till a common hand-windlass failed to lower it. The work was then abandoned on that portion of the mine, and the company resolved to secure a sufficient amount of capital to purchase the necessary machinery and appliances, which are a roaster, a stamp mill and steam pump, and, to that end, put upon the market one thousand of the twenty-five hundred shares, and propose, by this means, to soon have one of the finest milling properties in the United States, or the world, under successful operation.

As for Prescott matters, everything is unusually quiet. September 4th the town was thrown into a fever of excitement by the cry of fire. The fire commenced in a stable and spread to a large warehouse owned by L. Wollenburg & Co., and finally to his own private residence adjoining. Fully half an hour elapsed before buckets were procured, or a line formed, then the wells gave out. Every one was unduly excited, and more water was wasted than utilized. Fortunately the air was very calm. The loss was estimated at about $12,000, $9,000 falling on Wallenburg. None of the property was insured. As this was the second fire within two weeks, the inhabitants were seized with commendable solicitude. A meeting was called for that evening, as it was announced, "To provide ways and means of protection against fire," and, as usual in such cases, every individual present had a method of his own; after spending the whole evening in dispute, the matter was referred to the City Council. The buildings of Prescott are mostly of pine wood, seasoned by years of exposure to the sun's rays, dry and pitchy, splendid material of which to make a fire. The houses stand more or less near each other, in some places crowded together as closely as in a city, and yet, strange to say, no provision has ever been made for protection against fire, unless two old ladders and hooked poles, the uses for which they were intended being beyond the knowledge of the average fire-goer of Prescott. Since then, however, steps have been taken to form a company under the leadership of Dr. Kendall.

The people of Prescott have not lacked amusements lately. Several performances of an amateur minstrel troupe, three walking matches, two for $250 aside and gate money between Newell and Hernieger, won by Hernieger, a soldier, both times; one calico ball; last Sunday a trotting race at Whipple Park; and last evening, September 17th, A D, 1879, Mr. Coles Bashford, son of the Hon. Levi Bashford, and partner in the firm of Bashford & Co., one of the largest wholesale dealers in Prescott, was united in marriage to Miss Ettie Parker, one of the most accomplished and beautiful of the ladies of this place, by the Rev. Dr. Gilmore, at the Methodist Church. A grand reception was held at the residence of the bride's parents, only the very upper crust being invited, among whom were Gen. O. B. Wilcox, Miss Wilcox, Lieut. Wilcox, Mrs., Miss and Mr. Frank P. Fremont, Hon. Thomas Fitch and wife, Hon. J. J. Gosper and Major C. P. Dake. Mr. Bashford and his young wife will occupy the residence of the late District Attorney, Paul Weber, until their $6,000 house is finished.

The Hon. Gideon J. Tucker has just returned from a two months' trip to the East. The Judge is a Democrat of the old school, having held office for many years under the Democratic rule in New York State. His shingle reads "G. J. Tucker, Attorney and Counselor-at-Law," but as the law business is quite light, it is generally supposed that he is here with a view of filling some position in the gift of the Government at some future day. He is well liked, and has made many friends during his short stay.

Secretary J. J. Gosper is in hot water, a paper having been extensively circulated and signed throughout the Territory asking for his removal. Various grounds are assigned, principally neglect of official duty. Mr. Gosper is very largely interested in mines, ranches, newspapers, the propagation of blooded stock, etc., and, in fact, is one of those real live, wide-awake business men that are called rustlers, and, while he puts one dollar in his pocket, he puts two in the future Treasury of Arizona—really a god-send to any new country—and, as he is meeting with considerable success, he has aroused the jealousy of some who now take this means of curtailing his revenue.

Last evening Governor Fremont, Hon. Charles Silent, Dr. Maynard, Prof. Einborn and Mr. Frank Fremont, returned from their trip through the Bradshaw, Peck and Turkey Creek mining districts, where they went for the purpose of examining the various mines in those districts. Messrs. Maynard and Einhorn are here as mining experts, sent in the interest of the Syndicate recently formed in New York, under representations of Governor Fremont to work various mining properties in this Territory. The same party, accompanied by Clark Churchill, left early this morning to examine the Silver Belt, in the [illegible] district, one of those almost pure silver mines. In my next letter I will [illegible] full particulars. If the experts report satisfactorily, capital and machinery will be forthcoming immediately.

Messrs. Bowen and Knowles, grocers of [illegible], recently purchased the old Lake Mill, lying in the Bradshaw [illegible]. This mill has been idle for several years, has been sold for taxes once, and is literally plastered with mechanics' liens. These gentlemen took the mill with the [illegible] thereon, put in an Allen & White Roaster, erected a saw-mill, renovated and fixed up the mill till now it is a first class custom quartz mill, and will be ready for business by the 25th instant. Such a mill has long been needed in the Bradshaw country, hundreds of small lodes have been lying idle waiting for such a mill.

I will have something to say about the Cherry Creek District, and the Prescott Mining Company of New York, under the supervision of C. C. Bean, in my next.

MINER.

THE BAROMETER OF NATIONAL PROSPERITY.

The depression in the marriage-rate, that unerring test of the material condition and prospects of the people, was still more strongly marked during the first quarter of this year than it had been in any of the four quarters of 1878. The annual marriage-rate, in the three months ending March last, did not exceed 11.6 per 1,000, and was 2.1 below the average rate in the corresponding period of the 40 years—1838-77. So low a marriage-rate has not prevailed in the first quarter of any year since 1837, when the Act for civil registration of marriages, births and deaths first rendered these statistics possible. The nearest approach to so low a marriage-rate, in the first quarter of the year, was 12.5 in the first three months of 1841. As a natural result, the birth-rate in England and Wales has fallen below the average. In the three months ending June last the annual rate was equal to only 35.2 against 37.4, 36.5 and 36.9 in the corresponding periods of 1876, 1877, 1878; it was lower than in any June quarter since 1869, and was 1.0 below the average rate in the second quarter of the ten years 1869-79.—Sanitary Record.

A CURIOUS PLEA.

Geo. Gorham is back in Washington. As was, of course, to he expected, his party friends have taken him to task for his tergiversation. They want to know why he, the Secretary of the party's national organizatiou for the management of elections in the different States, should proceed to his own State and thers become a leader in the camp of the enemy? They are surprised, above all, that he should return to his former friends and coolly expect them to welcome him as a comrade, instead of shooting him down as a spy. He excuses himself; but what an excuse! The cool audacity of the fellow is amazing. A traitor, caught in the very act of treason, he turns a curious back-somersault, which he expects will land him once again, safe and sound, in the old camp. He protests that the ways of the people out on the Pacific slops are not like those of the men of Maine or Massachusetts. His conduct must not he judged of hy any Eastern rule. Californians are free and easy in politics as in other things. He bad simply heen out on a sort of political drunken spree—a kind of lark, as it were, during which he had got considerahly mixed up. When he came to himself he found, to his astonishment, that his hed-fellows were Democrats. But that, he claims, is only a convivial way they have in politics "out on the coast." He was not alone in his offending. It actually turned out that old southern, dyed-in-the-wool, Jacksonian Democrats were in the ranks of the Republicans. In fact, the intoxication of the hour had caused the different parties to exchange names, and, as a result, the Democrats were called Repuhlicans and the Repuhlicans were taken for Democrats. Anyhow, it was something like that. He is not quite sure how it was, and is willing to swear that it was anyway that will suit the atmosphere of Washington. This audacious defence is worthy of Gorham, and Gorham is worthy of it, but we don't think it will pull him through this time. He has forfeited all claim to he esteemed a loyal party man, and, instead of heing rewarded as a leader, should he punished as a spy. His comrades are not safe with him in their councils. The cry should arise, "turn him out." To vent his mean, petty malice against the Railroad, he attempted to sell out the interests of his party, and that he did not succeed in delivering them was no fault of his. It is not true that there was such a predominance of local issues in our late election, and such an absence of national ones, as to justify a High Commander going over to the ranks of the enemy. The one local issue that was endeavored to he made much of, was the question as to what reduction, if any, should he made in railroad fares and freights. Gorham, for personal reasons, tried to push that issue to a front position, hut failed. For the rest, the issues were largely national. Congressmen had to be elected. A Legislature, which will name a United States Senator, had to he chosen, and the character of the whole State administration for the next three years had to he determined. If it were an occasion on which a commander might loyally ahandon bis colors, then, indeed, must the word treason have lost its meaning.

THE THIRD TERM DOCTRINE.

A celebrated Frenchman, who was studying the Britisb Constitution, not heing able to find therein any article respecting the liherty of the press, at last applied to an eminent jurist, who replied: "It exists hecause not forbidden." So, if a foreigner were to ask concerning the third term doctrine, an American would have to answer: "It is forhidden hecause it never existed." In both instances the unwritten traditional law has insensihly heen incorporated with the written, and it is now generally held by the hest authorities that all rights not expressly delegated to the government are retained hy the people. This theory is, indeed, expressly stated in the Federal and State constitutions, hut with the corresponding declaration that certain rights are prohihited the people, hut these prohihitions are all expressed in the charter constituting the government, without which it could not exist. Washington's determination to withdraw from public life was expressed very pla'n y long hefore the conclusion of his second Presidential term, although even after his retirement he did not hesitate to resume the office of General when a war with France appeared imminent. A candid examination, therefore, discloses these facts: 1st. There is no written constitutional limit to the number of terms to which a citizen is eligible. 2d. Washington declined a re-election for the third time, in 1796, on the ground of advancing age. He retired to Mt. Vernon at the close of his second term in 1797. 3d. He resumed the Generalship in 1799, and died the same year. 4th. John Adams, second President, 1797-1801; Thomas Jefferson, third President, 1801-1809; James Madison, fourth President, 1809-1817; James Monroe, fifth President, 1817-1825. Monroe was the last of the "Revolutionary" Presidents, and it does not appear that a third term was sought hy or offered to any of Washington's four immediate successors. It would have heen declined out of respect to the memory of the "Father of His Country." It thus appears that the unwritten law of the third term, or, as it may appropriately he called, "the third term superstition," originated after Washington's death, but it does not appear to have heen in accordance with any desire or counsel of his. Since Monroe's time the only Presidents elected for two terms were Jackson, Lincoln and Grant. Of these, Jackson did not seek a third term, and Lincoln's assassination deharred any attempt in that direction, even had he heen so inclined, which is not credihle. Grant a on, of all the Presidents since Wa hingto , has heen put in the attitude o a third term aspirant. To that impeachment he pleaded a denial in his last executive message, and has very recently reiterated his wish to remain in private life. He admits that his opinion may he changed if the people (hy which we presume he means tbe Republican party) demands it. Hence it may he that General Grant is destined to oocupy the Chief Magistracy of the nation a third time. What is there to prevent?

It is all a waste of time to talk ahout the "War of the Roses," the Battle of Bunker Hill, Waterloo, and all those played-out old sham battles—that exist only in the false, prejudiced, unreliahle pages of history—when we have far greater hattles right hefore us. We refer to the terrific combat now going on in the hreasts of the elected W. P. C. candidates, who promised to return part of their salary. Would they had windows in their souls, that we could have their agonizing contortions photographed. But, alas! it is not to he, and the present generation will seek the repose only to he ohtained from a lodging-place in Lone Mountain, without knowing whether the great Denis offered to compromise on the hasis of a square divide. On second thought, we see a dim glimmering of light—a sort of Will o' the Wisp, so to speak—when we reflect that it is barely possihle some one may squeal on the racket.

THE MODERN ODYSSEY.

As wise Ulysses, of the Homeric story,
Was welcomed home by chaste Penelope,
So we our hero, crowned with equal glory,
Welcome right lovingly.

For, like his namesake, he is now returning
Safe from long wanderings to his native land;
This is his Ithaca—with ardor burning
We haste to clasp his hand.

The perils which old Homer makes endanger
The Grecian warrior, our Ulysses knew;
And though the ancient's log-hook may be stranger,
The modern's is more true.

That amorous minx, Calypso, could not harm him,
Because he took Penelope along,
Nor (for that reason) could the sirens charm him
With their sweet fatal song.

But the lotus he has eaten, aye, and emptied
The pleasure-cup in company of kings,
Yet he returns untainted and untempted
By all these glorious things.

The splendor made for him—the pomp run riot—
His heart from home has not a whit estranged;
He comes hack as he left us, simple, quiet,
Impassahle, unchanged.

San Francisco, September 25th, 1879. T. A. H.

THE ZULU PEACE AND THE FUTURE OF AFRICA.

As was expected, the capture of Cetawayo has resulted in a peace, whieh means the permanent subjection of Zululand to the British. A treaty is shortly to be, or perhaps already has been, made, which will divide the vast dominions over which the late King ruled as lord paramount among a number of smaller chiefs. Nominally there will no longer be any suzerain, but the British Government will actually occupy that position. The chiefs are to he entirely independent of each other, and of the British also in the management of their internal affairs, but they cannot make war, alienate their lands, or, indeed, alter their foreign relations in any way without the approval of the supreme Government, which will keep a Resident in each territory. The principle and system are much the same as have heen estahlished by the British in some parts of India, and are perhaps the safest that could he adopted. A single potentate, possessing ahsolute authority over a vast extent of thickly populated territory, has great power for mischief, and is a dangerous neighbor, especially if he he a harharian, governed hy none of the rules which prevail among civilized nations. But let his territory he cut up and distributed among a number of petty rulers and the danger disappears, tbe more so when, as is now the case in Zululand, these rulers are only indspendent so far as their internal affairs are concerned. It is very rarely that their mutual jealousies and rival interests will permit them to act in concert, and some, at least, are always sure to remain loyal. Of course, if they were permitted to make war upon each other at discretion some conqueror would soon arise and absorb his neighbors; or, if they could alienate their possessions, the same result would ensue. So, also, if they could form treaties together they would practically he nearly as dangerous as a single united nation. It will he seen, therefore, that the plan of the British Government, which guards against all tbese perilous contingencies, is a wise and prudent one.

But it is not when regarded merely as an acquisition of territory tbat the conquest of Zululand is seen in its most interesting light. Of all the great continental divisions of the earth, Africa has most stubhornly resisted tbe progress of civilization. In ancient times, Egypt was the one bright spot set in a little corner of the vast Dark Continent, and it was not until after Mohammedan conquests that the narrow strip lying hetween the Sahara and the Mediterranean took a permanent position among civilized States of a lower order, while it is only of comparatively late years that the continent has heen fringed with an incomplete chain of colonies helonging to nearly every nation of Europe. A fringe, and that is all. The interior, though known to he rich and fertile in all parts except where the great desert stretches across the north, has defied all attempts to settle it, though it must he confessed that very few such attempts have heen made.

Now at last, however, Africa's turn seems to he at hand. The wild ebon daughter of the sun is threatened with the yoke of civilization, to which all her sister continents have had to bend their necks. Schemes for flooding the great desert in its eastern part are yearly receiving more scientific attention; while on the eastern side we hear of a railroad being projected to run from Oran to Timhuctoo, and connect the French province of Algeria with the rich region of Soudan. Meanwhile, the center of the continent is to he invaded hy means of Stanley's mighty river, the Livingstone, which, it is asserted, will soon he open to steam navigation nearly from one side of the continent to tbe other. Lastly, in the south we have the British advance into Zululand. This advance may not he great, if measured hy miles, but if measured by its moral and actual effects, it is a great deal. Where British authority is, there British subjects will surely follow; and where British subjects settle, civilization springs. More than this, one such conquest invariably leads to another; not only hy the same victor, who naturally keeps pushing his frontier onward hy the very act of protecting it, hut also hy other colonizing powers who follow his example in order to secure their share of the booty. In short, the colonized fringe of the Dark Continent has hegun to widen inwards, and its people must either, like the Hindoos, yield to the pressure civilization, and accept a subordinate place, or, like the red Indian, resist the pressure, and perish.

The Pope has issued an encyclical on the teaching of philosopby, which fills ten columns of the Osservatore Romano. His Holiness holds that the greater part of the evils which afflict society in the present day are due to the inculcation of false philosophy, and says that philosophy, in order that it may attain its end, must he subject to faith. After a minute survey of the results of the philosophic inquiry of the Fathers, he exhorts the hishops to adopt in their ecclesiastical schools the teachings of St. Thomas Aquinas.

THE TOWN CRIER.

"Hear the Crier?" "What the devil art thou?
"One that will play the devil, sir, with you."

"He'd a sting in his tail as long as a flail,
Which made him grow bolder and bolder."

When trade is lively at any of our prominent gospel shops, the attaches are very liable to get badly mixed up. For instance, Herr Flutenschingel, the organist of Saint Bifgob's, got notice last week that there was to be a musical christening at 1 P.M., with a swallow-tail godfather; a funeral at 2 P.M., with agonized relatives and sobs in G minor; and a way-up jubilant wedding at 3 P.M., at which the bridesmaids were expected to pelt the officiating minister with tuberose bouquets. There would have been no great difficulty in selecting appropriate music, if Herr Flutenschingel had only understood when the different heats were to be run so to speak. He got through the lavatory rites elegantly. He couldn't see the parties from the organ loft, but the chief engineer squawled so lustily that he was sure about the procession being that of the immersion party, and when the tenor sang, "Now I duck my little head," the effect was tremendous. But an hour later, when seventy-two grief stricken relatives, following an aged grandfather in a rosewood casket, were saluted with Mendelssohn's Wedding March, and sent out of the church to the tune of, "When Johnny comes marching home," there was a feeling of disgust among the mourners, which no hopes of prospective legacies could allay, and also a determination on the part of the family and friends of the deceased to at once give up their pews. The rest of the story is soon told. It was probably the first bridal party that ever marched up an aisle to the melodious strains of the "Dead March in Saul." The best man rushed upstairs and choked the soprano before she was half through with "I know that my Redeemer liveth," and Mr. F. was found on the floor, badly used up, two hours afterward, bleeding profusely at the proboscis, and tightly clutching the score of a funeral anthem, words by Hector A. Stuart. There'a nothing like appropriate music, let it cost what it may.

Mr. Casebolt seldom gets credit for anything he does good, and is invariably hounded to death for any fault that can he found with his management of the Sutter St. Railroad. This week he saved a poor woman's life entirely through his excellent mode of running his cars, and not a single newspaper in this city mentioned the circumstance, even as an item in the local column. It appears that Mrs. Fogarty, who lives out near the cemetery, while under the influence of excessive mental depression, had times and worse whisky, concluded to commit suicide the other night, by lying across the track and awaiting the approach of the Sutter street cars. They were only four blocks off as, with a prayer for forgiveness, she placed her neck on one rail, her feet on the other, and awaited her end. But kindly nature came to her relief, and, unconscious of her impending fate, Mrs. F. was sound asleep in less than a minute. The cars were evidently getting nearer and nearer, and within three quarters of an hour were certainly less than fifty yards distant. Ten minutes more elapsed and Mrs. F. was slowly coming to her senses, thanks to the cold iron rails, a relenting Providence, and a heavy, chilling fog. She arose quietly and walked into her happy home, remarking that she "must be a little full to-night," little dreaming that had she lain another half hour on the track the heavy cars would have mangled her poor body beyond recognition. May we not hope after this that the next Legislature will not only reward Mr. Casebolt substantially, but also pass a bill forbidding car horses to go out of a walk, and insisting on the drivers remaining a quarter of an hour on each street corner?

The Workingmen were horribly agitated this week by the spreading of an unfounded report relative to Ulysses and the Chinese. It was asserted that a delegation of pigtailed merchants had formally waited on the General and presented him with a cargo of silk, ivory, fans and expensive Mongolian curios. After the great man had inspected the gifts, he was said to have assured the Chairman of the delegation that the Chinese should NOT go under any circumstances, as long as they communicated with him in a similar manner once every six weeks; and further, that if they had any particularly rare Pagodas, which would look well in his grounds, they might send them along to Galena, to keep him in mind of their interests. The story might have been believed, had it not been supplemented by another fiction about General Grant's accepting a box of Chiness cigars and smoking one of them. This exploded the canard, and Denis Kearney and the twelve Ward Presidents went home to their hovels and slept in peace, satisfied that they were the victims of a hoax gotten up by some lecherous, blotated whisky land-and-water thief, or some other impolite synonym for rascality out of the little drayman's limited dictionary.

Laura D. Fair, the most amiable murderess on record, is at present lecturing in the East, with great success. There is nothing remarkable in this (because everybody lectures in America) except that it suggests to a thoughtful mind that to make a hit as a lecturer, one has to be either an infamously immoral divine, or a tigress dyed in blood. Possessed with the truth of this axiom, we are at present uncertain as to whether it would be best to slaughter the proprietor of this paper in cold blood, or to take simply orders and have a sensational ecclesiastical trial with the family cook as appellant and ourselves as co-respondent. Either course would undoubtedly insure a handsome competency, the only question being as to which is the shortest road to wealth.

Persons of eighteen different nationalities have written to us to protest against an extraordinary statement in the speech of the Galena orator who waited upon General Grant on Wednesday last. The statement is as follows: "You know well, sir, that sentiment common to humanity—which loves the scenes of its former homes and enshrines all subjects and matters pertaining to it with the tenderest affection." The eighteen representative men repudiate the sentiment as common to none but Galenians, and the whole passage as a plagiarism from the last howling lunatic at Napa.

For the 10,000,000th time, the original remark has been made that the initials of General Grant's name seem to be prophetic, when we consider that they stand for United States General. Nobody seems to see that they stand for other things as well: for Undoubted Silk Goods, Unequaled Sweet Ginger, Utah's Serious Gentile, Useful Silver Gong, and Unhappy Supervisors' Gahble. There is a good deal of prophecy in these.

The General lit another cigar, and puffed away in silence. We tried to start some interesting subject of conversation, but with little success, until we happened to speak of Hector A. Stuart's poem. The General was at once excited, and we give his remarks verbatim, as they are of interest to the literary world:

We—What do you think of Hector A. Stuart's poem?

General—I am no judge of poetry.

We—In your travels round the world, of course you have frequently heard the poet's name?

General—I never have.

We—That is strange. He is the great California poet.

General—I don't read much poetry. I have read some of Bret Harte's, Stoddard's, Joaquin Miller's, Gassaway's, O'Connell's, Ina D. Coolbrith's, Emelie Lawson's and a few other California poets.

We—My dear General, these are all long since forgotten. Hector A. Stuart has completely taken the wind out of their sails. Some years ago the writers you speak of occasionally produced poems, some of them very pretty no doubt, but there was no great poet among them. They wrote for the Overland, News Letter, and such-like publications. Things went along very smoothly for years; they divided the laurels among themselves pretty evenly; they might have been going on in the same way up to the present time, had not Hector A. Stuart commenced writing poetry for the Sunday Call. The result was like a thunderbolt out of a clear sky. The Overland immediately suspended publication, Harte and Miller went East, Stoddard went round the world, Kendall and Realf committed suicide, while Emelie Lawson and Ina D. Coolbrith forswore poetry forever.

General—This was a loss to California literature.

We—By no means. Stuart gave us the true idea of poetry; to use his own words, "his voice, deep as thunder, rose over dissension." Allow me to read a few cantos from "Ben Neho."

General—Not just now. I have some letters to write. Some other time.

We—Will you mention any time?

General—I am going East shortly. In some five years from now I may take a trip to California again. I may have time then.

We—All right. I will mark the passage, but, as I said before of Hector A. Stuart, "his voice, deep as thunder, rose over dissension."

General—Excuse me, but let us defer our remarks on Mr. Stuart until you read the poem to me.

The conclusion of this conversation will take place five years from now.

We are glad; the heart of the T. C. overflows with rejoicing, when we hear, as at the present time, that theatrical managers are at their wit's end for plays. They are hoist with their own petard, the boomerang has returned and smitten the suiter with a fearful smite. Often and often has the T. C. sat, long in the weary watches of the night, and ruined his credit with the groceryman by an extravagant use of midnight oil, writing plays, which, if put before the public, would have made him famous and the manager rich. But, alas! for both. The devil hardened the heart and softened the brain of that manager, and he refused to buy, and now that he needs those plays, the T. C. has sworn a bitter oath that he shall never get them. No; rather shall the public he poisoned with Shakspeare and Pinafore and sickened with overdoses of Aimee, than the T. C. assist a stiff-necked generation of mis-managers.

The author, Mr. Alexander Dunbar, has kindly favored us with a "Welcome to General Grant," in seven stanzas, with notes. The poetry is evidently inspired by the study of the great Krause; and Grant will cherish the memory of the man who greets him with these exquisite words:

"Hearts thrilled with love and glee, loud swell the strain,
Safly again at home true harbinger of peace;
Thy wise instructive words with profit we retain,
Endear'd by thy absence while doing the globe's face."

The music, we are told is in progress of composition. It will he something to hear.

A new subscriber to the Alta met General McComb, the other day, and informed him that, after discarding the Chronicle for its bestiality and the Call for its sycophancy, he had at last centered on the California street organ as his daily news supplier. "How d'ye like it?" queried the General. "First rate," answered the new subscriber; "I've bought a step-ladder, and I nail the Alta against the wall every morning. Then I run up and down the ladder till I've read all the news. Besides," he added, "the Alta's useful in other ways. I can wrap up the week's wash in it, or take two issues and cover up all the furniture when we're house-cleaning?" The General is a good swordsman, but he couldn't parry the thrust.

It may satisfy the public mind to learn that the entire expense of General Grant's reception is to he defrayed without cost to taxpayers. The Finance Committee have decided to appropriate all the reductions in salaries which the elected Workingmen's caudidates propose to pay back into the Treasury. This will foot all the hills incurred and leave a large surplus (in our minds).

So far as human vision can penetrate the future, every hour of General Grant's life seems likely to come around in its turn. This magnificent thought is the condensed juice of the many solemn allusions to the meaning of Grant's visit to San Francisco; and it is a comfort to think we have so many philosophers on the daily press.

"Puck" is extremely hard on Grant and the third term. Grant is so taciturn that nohody can say what he feels, but we make a broad guess that he thinks one term of such boring as San Francisco is now giving him is about all he can stagger through. They say he talks in his sleep.

The Captain of the "Ellen Stuart" was badly burned by the explosion of a rocket while saluting the City of Tokio. He was all a-fire with enthusiasm at the time, and something else. This is the exact time for the band to play "Rocket in the Cradle of the Deep."

Laura D. Fair tells the New Yorkers there is not a woman in San Francisco without some scandal sticking to her skirts. Merely for the oddity of the thing, one would like to see Laura's notion of aomething scandalous.

A gentleman in this city has just sent to Lima for three dogs. He has not been in good health lately, but says he has heard so much of the benefits to he derived from Peruvian hark—(Funeral at 2 P. M.)

WILLIAM SHAKSPEARE.

Bradley & Rulofson, 429 Montgomery street, were compelled on Monday to apply to the Chief of Police for a detachment to guard their establishment against a growing mob, determined to have their likenesses of Gen. Grant; and before the officers could reach the ground traffic was completely suspended on Montgomery, Sacramento, Kearny and Sansome streets by the blockade. A telegram to the Palace Hotel brought a call from the Governor for the militia, which arrived at 11 A.M. with fixed bayonets, but it was not till seven of the ringleaders had fallen that order was restored; and the portraits of the General were then distributed under a guard of the N. G. C.

The banquet to the First Soldier of America was a grand affair, and there were as many slain the next day as after Cold Harbor; but Grant himself bore up like a hero, which was wonderful, seeing what a voyage he had just made. But the fact is that his breakfast at Swain's, 213 Sutter street, had given him uncommon strength of mind and bodily vigor, and this is the characteristic effect of that excellent restaurant on all those who frequent it. "Tell me where you eat, and I will tell you what you are," is a word of wisdom.

The business of the Post Office in transporting specimens of natural history is growing more and more onerous with every week. At first confined to butterflies and horned toads, it now embraces, without wincing, crocodiles, snakes, owls, and other chicken fixiugs; and, by special instructions from the Postmaster-General, the officials will begin, next week, forwarding to the Dead Letter Office all the natural-born fools who do not buy their hats at White's, 614 Commercial street.

Day after day, during the past week, the public remained on the tiptoe of expectation for the arrival of Grant. Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, Saturday came; the city was gay with flags and shields and evergreens and flowers; yet was hope deferred, and the heart made sick, for he came not. In this extremity our people bore up nobly, but not without assistance from Landsberger's Gerke Wine, the cheering influence of which alone enabled the city to endure without flinching its sick longing.

Nothing gives greater refinement to the person or more clearly brings out the native dignity and elegance of a manly form than exquisitely clean and faultlessly fitting linen. Not even a faultless physique can pass muster with a rumpled shirt; and every gentleman who feels the proper responsibility he owes to the public, supplies himself with shirts and underwear at Carmany & Crosett's, 25 Kearny street. Their articles in this line have a world-wide fame.

The salute from the Sand-Lot was more than the Denis could hear, and he fled before the guns got into position; which shows that he is not such a fool as men took him for. He does not like the range of the Union guns; but all who appreciate noble deeds and manly courage buy Montanya's Union Range, the best for cooking the dinner of brave men; and on Jackson, below Battery street, Montanya will be found, ready to meet all comers.

Napa Soda, always the best friend of man, has come boldly to the front during the unparalleled excitement of the past week. Not one of all the high-spirited representatives of California's homage to the national hero has suffered from his exertions in the cause; for they have all refreshed themselves with Napa Soda, and so borne the burden of the day.

TRADE FRAUDS.

Explanatory Note.—When we suspended the prosecution of "Trade Frauds" in the columns of the News Letter, it was not because the matter was worked out, by any means, but because other arrangements became necessary, especially with the view of allowing the analysts the time they might consider necessary for getting at the bottom of the plans adopted by dishonest traders, and the materials used, in the adulteration of articles of food in daily consumption. This week we resume the task by informing this patient and long-suffering public how they are systematically imposed upon by the suppliers of one of the most indispensable articles of every day use, viz., milk; and indicating some of the many evils which result from the adulterated article, more especially to babes and young children. As the outcome of these investigations is meant for general information, and more especially for the laboring classes, who are most likely to be the heaviest sufferers, our aim will be to clothe our remarks in language as plain and free from technical and scientific terms as the nature of the subject treated will admit of.—Editor News Letter.

MILK SUPPLIED TO THE CITY.

Our analyst reports as follows: I have collected and examined, in all, sixty-eight samples of milk, which in every instance was obtained by myself, either from milk-carts in the streets, or small groceries and bakeries in various parts of Kearny, Market, Third, Fourth, Mission and Howard streets. All of those samples were submitted to the test of their strength of cream, while about fifty were tested in more considerable detail, leading to the conclusion that in several instances both skim milk and water had been added, and skim milk in nearly all. In one, lime water had been used. Twenty-six had been shamefully tampered with, being diluted with skim milk and water. As there is no use in going into the details of examinations, I have selected one simple and convincing experiment to lay before your readers, and that is—how to determine the quantity of cream in a sample. But, first, as to the amount that should be present: Dr. Hassall, the eminent London analyst, found in twenty-six samples of pure cow's milk an average of 11.933, practically 12 per cent. of cream. I propose to fix the empirical standard for San Francisco at 10 per cent. Now, out of those fifty samples mentioned, I found twenty-two of only 8 per cent. and under, of which six were between 3 and 5 per cent. of cream only. More barefaced adulterations can hardly be imagined. Six more ranged between 8 and 10 per cent.; so that out of fifty samples collected from day to day, twenty-eight were below a standard already fixed at 2 per cent. below that of Dr. Hassall.

It is well known that the portion of cream in whole milk varies under a number of circumstances: for example, with the breed and age of the cows; their health; the food upon which they are fed; the care and attention paid them in severe weather, and such like; but whatever may be said truly of individual instances, there are, in the long run, certain limits of average within which all unadulterated milk will always fall, and they may be safely stated as lying between 11 and 16 per cent. of cream. Any milk containing less than 10 per cent. of cream may safely be said to have been tampered with in some one of many ways: generally, however, either by the addition of water or skim-milk. Now, the means of discovering whether the cream reaches 10 per cent. or not is as follows: Procure a glass tube with a flat bottom, which may be had at Mr. Caire's or Mr. Taylor's, on Washington street, graduated into one hundred marks, the cost of which will be a mere trifle; then fill it with milk to the highest mark and let it stand in as cool a place as may be for twelve hours. At the end of that time the line of demarcation between the cream and the blue-milk will be plainly visible. All that remains is to count the number of lines or marks between the top line and the blue milk, and you know the percentage of cream, and if it be less than ten lines, you are cheated to that extent, either by the additiou of water or milk robbed of its cream. It will be observed and remembered that this is the only reliable test for all ordinary purposes. Lactometers, creamometers and specific gravity apparatus are all a delusion, as not one man in ten thousand can obtain reliable data from them; but the presence or absence of cream, the most necessary ingredient, can always be had to a certainty.

Of the fifty samples of which I am treating, I obtained eighteen (18) from milk-carts in the street, of only 8 per cent and under; and eight (8) from stores and bakeries, which were of similar strength of cream. Of these, again, some ranged from three, four and five per cent. only. Of the remainder (14 in number), one ruled as high as 16 per cent., and the rest from 11 upwards, few of them only exceeding 12 per cent. With two exceptions, all these were obtained in Market and Kearny streets. This shows that the working classes are the chief sufferers from adulterated milk. The price is everywhere the same.

But, though the people may be told how to protect themselves, it by no means follows that this knowledge is sufficient to protect society against fraud. Legislation on the matter of milk supply ought to occupy the Legislature among the earliest subjects they take in hands after next assembling; and in this view we fervently hope we shall not have called attention to the need of it in vain.

There must be an empyrical standard fixed by law, viz.: that any milk offered for human consumption below eleven per cent. of cream should be liable to seizure, and the vendor brought to punishment by the most summary process. Traders are not allowed to sell stinking fish or slink meat, and why allow them to sell swill-milk, or what is nearly as bad, milk robbed of its most valuable nutritive ingredient—the cream?

With reference to grains and refuse of our breweries and distilleries, and whether they are used to any considerable extent as food for cows, further investigation will be made. Too much importance cannot be attached to the purity of milk in any community, but most of all in this city, where so few mothers suckle their own offspring, and where the infant death-rate rules so high.

Dr. R. H. Piper, of Chicago, has been employed during the last two years studying and analyzing the milk supplied to the city of Chicago, and the facts that he and his fellow-students of infantile disease have elicited are at once alarming and convincing. Where the milk used was of the swill or adulterated kind—such as old milk mixed with new—the diseases arising were always dangerous and often destructive of infant life.

Grapes for New York.—We notice preparations making on Davis street for shipment, by rail to New York, of a carload of superior selected Muscat grapes, packed in hf-bbls., covered with a patent liquid that insures their safety for an indefinite period without injury. We hope success will crown the venture.

"OUR SHEET MARKET."

Quotations of standard sheets are less varied than usual this week, owing to the prevailing Grant fever. We have had the General dished up morning, noon and night, until the subject reminds us of a King of France, whose physician had rigorously enjoined a certain diet as the only method of prolonging life. Naturally, the King objected, but to no purpose, until a bright idea struck him of applying a similar treatment to the physician. Knowing the latter to be excessively fond of turkey, his majesty strictly ordered his chef de cuisine to give Esculapius no solid food in any form excepting turkey. He might have it in any shape; but it must be turkey—and nothing else. The physician held out for a week, but succumbed at the end of that time, and agreed that as variety in all things is the spice of life, the King should in the future follow his own sweet will. Now, we have had "Our City's Guest" served up as "The Foremost Man of All the World," "The Greatest Captain of the Age," "The Most Illustrious Citizen of the Republic," "The American Cæsar," "The Eminent Third-Termer," "The Counterpart of the Iron Duke," and so on, ad nauseam. There has been rather too much servility and Jenkinsism in all this, and we imagine General Grant would willingly dispense with it.

The Alta says, "Let us be brothers again, because Grant's come home," etc. That is a very good sentiment until the election requires an extensive system of bull-dozing and a flaunting of the bloody-shirt. The same sheet thinks there is not much chance for developing our manufacturing industries, as factory-owners generally have no plans for extending business and are not now making an adequate profit on capital invested. Writing of North American bullion production, it infers that, owing to our improved mining machinery, one man on the Comstock is equal to twenty-five men at Potosi, in Mexico. That, of course, provided the Mexicans rely solely upon hand labor.

The Bulletin considers most juvenile crimes to be inspired by reading the cheap illustrated story papers. It calls attention to the coming immigration from Europe, and repeats the rather venerable assertion that no place offers such great inducements as California. Other States make like assertions, and send forth agents to back them, thereby securing population. Same sheet says the dangerous and destructive fires all over the State are caused by hunters, boys, campers-out, phosphorus used in squirrel poisoning, carelessness of stock-men, and so forth. It will be more to the purpose to recall these facts when the Legislature meets, so that proper preventive measures may be passed.

The Call objects to the delay of the Election Commissioners in counting the vote, and insinuates that there is a purpose in the delay. For "purpose" read "pay," and it is correct.

The Post says "lynching is becoming disagreeably frequent in this State." We presume it may be considered "agreeably frequent" when one's enemies are being strung up, off hand. Same sheet believes "trade is improving daily, confidence in the future has been restored, and the country feels secure and jubilant."

The Chronicle has been busily engaged advising, berating and checkmating the British Ministry; but apparently without any greater success than its recent attempt to govern this little Pacific Empire. If Lord Beaconsfield does not at once secure the Chronicle's influence, there is no telling how soon it may overthrow him and knock the Indian Empire into a cocked-hat.

The Examiner says "Grant's reception is an apotheosis—a species of man-worship. The fall from man worship to prostration before the object of that worship is as easy as the fabled descent to Avernus; and the American people seem bent on making it." Very true, so they do; and if one only knew with who! Same sheet asserts there is more drunkenness in the land from chloral-hydrate than from alcoholic stimulants, and that its effects are more dangerous. Brother Pickering will, no doubt, consider the assertions uncalled for and almost personal.

The Sacramento Bee says a recently-elected State officer, who visited that city, was besieged by a multitude of office-crazed men, young and old, begging positions of any kind under the next administration. It also says a corps of engineers and surveyors, under Colonel Mendell, will soon visit the Upper Sacramento, remove snags and obstructions, and devise plans to make steamboat navigation easy and practicable.

The Sacramento Record-Union says: "The demagogues who have been prating of imaginary grievances should be called upon now to meet the facts of the Consular reports on labor in Europe, and to say what possible motive there can be for the propagation of such gross fictions as they themselves have postulated regarding the condition of labor in this country." Same sheet, speaking of the dangers connected with returning prosperity, concludes that "what the world needs is a moderate measure of comfort, equally diffused, instead of exaggerated alternatives of wealth and poverty." All of which shall be ours—after the Day of Judgment.

The Watsonville Transcript, referring to the recent robbery of the Santa Cruz Treasury, says: "Let the County Seat be moved at once, before somebody steals and carries off the Court House." Seven years ago the same treasury was robbed in a similar manner. If this sort of thing is to continue, they may as well abolish the treasury, as there will be no use for it.

The Los Angeles Herald has seen that "the business of 'jumping' corporations has been overdone by designing politicians. * * * * The managers of the leading railways on this coast are not fools; on the contrary, they are men of sagacity and energy, taking them for all in all, that have never been excelled on the American Continent." The people at large are also fast realizing that attacks on corporations, whether by political or press demagogues, are almost without exception for selfish purposes. The dear public is used as a catspaw to secure the chestnuts, whereof the demagogue takes the kernel, and the people take the shell; but all the same, the corporation is robbed. Fortunately, the masses begin to acquire more common sense.

"BIZ."

The Fall trade has set in with good earnest, and the plentiful supply of money in all financial centers lends enchantment to the operator, who has a good opportunity to coin money, knowing that the long period of industrial depression has occasioned stock accumulations and a depression of prices far below the costs of production, and seeing the inevitable result of a plethoric supply of the precious metals, some of our shrewdest merchants have shown their hand by entering the markets at low prices and purchased large lines of staple goods that had long been in warehouse, to drug upon the market. This has notably been the case in nearly all descriptions of Metals, especially Bar Iron, Pig Iron, Iron Pipes, Nails, and other merchandise that will be referred to as we proceed in our weekly review of the market. It is true that business has been somewhat interfered with by the Grant Ovation; but this seems to have lent enchantment to the view. The advent of the boat General through the portals of the Golden Gate, a week since, seems to have dispelled the fog and gloom that had long laid like a pall over the city, and for many days past the weather has been delightful and the temper of our whole people cheerful.

Freights Shipping.—An upheaving is to be noted in our freight market. Ships for Wheat have been freely chartered at 50 shillings to Liverpool or Havre direct, and at this writing the talk is 55 shillings, with a fair prospect that 60s. will be reached ere long, as the disengaged list now in port numbers only 16 vessels, and it is probable that the next American ship Three Brothers will load, and perhaps others, upon owners' account. We have 27 vessels now on the bertb for Europe loading Wheat, and thus far during September have cleared 33 ships with grain for Europe.

Wheat.—The market has been excited all the week, hy reason of telegrams received on Monday from Liverpool that the cargo price of Wheat on passage, etc., had risen to 50s., and since then 52s. 6d. is the reported price for all cargoes of California White Wheat en route. This intelligence caused an immediate rise here from $1 80@$1 85 to $1 90 ₱ cental. A week before the price was $1 70@$1 75. At tbis range of prices large purchases of Wheat were made in the country to arrive and hy going on hoard ship.

Flour has partaken somewhat of this advance, owing to the rise in Wheat. The export demand for Flour other than to China is comparatively small. We note a shipment hence to London of 2,000 hbls. in bulk per O. & O. steamship Oceanic, via Hongkong and the Suez Canal. A shipment of 100 hbls. was made to Genoa, Italy, per Gilroy, via Liverpool. We quote common superfine at $5 25@$5 50; extra do., $5 75@$6; family and bakers' extra, $5 50@$6, per 196 lbs., all in cloth.

Barley.—There is a light demand and a heavy stock. We quote Chevalier, $1 35@$1 75 ₱ ctl. The Gilroy, for Liverpool, carried 27,000 ctls. Feed may he quoted at 70c. for Coast, 80c. for Bay; Brewing, 85@90c. ₱ cental.

Oats.—The Alaska, from Puget Sound, brought us 5,200 sks.; price, $2 25@$1 35 ₱ cental; good to choice, $1 40@$1 50.

Hops.—The new crop arrives sparingly as yet. Southern may be quoted at 22½c; Northern, 22@30c.

Wool.—The Fall clip arrives slowly, hut the demand is active at 11@12 for short; hurry, clean, 13@15c; heat Southern Fleece, clean, 14@15; Northern, 12@15c; Oregon Spring, 20@22½c.

Honey.—The crop is very short, and we will have very little for export this season. Strained, 9@10c; Comh, 12½@15c.

The Sugar Market.—Last week we noted a rise of ½c per pound on all Refined; since then there has been another like advance—making tbe rise one cent per pound higher than it was a fortnight since. This has also been brought ahout since the California Refinery concluded their contract purchases for the entire Hawaiian Sugar crop of 35,000 tons, now being harvested. The price paid therefor is regulated by the Manila standard and the degrees of polarization made here after arrival. The present price of Cuhe and Crushed is 10¾; Granulated, 9¾c; Yellow and Golden, 8¾c@9¼c.

Large Sugar Stock Purchase.—Claus Spreckles has purchased during the past ten days 1,296 shares of the California Sugar Refinery stock, paying therefor $250 per share. This stock was held hy George H. Eggers & Co. and Peter Spreckles. This now places the stock of this refinery in the hands of Claus Spreckles & Sons. It has been a very profitable venture from its first organization, having paid large annual dividends to its stockholders.

General Merchandise Markets.—The Bag Market is inanimate, owing to the large stock under control hy the Combination; hut the demand is light, and the Grangers very generally supplied. The price is nominally 10@11c.

Borax is without movement; prices the same as for months past.

Coal.—The arrivals have been free during the month, but nearly all cargoes to hand under previous purchase. Low prices generally rule, owing to the large Coast supply.

Case Goods.—There is a good Chicago demand for Columbia River Salmon at $1.05. Sacramento River fish can he purchased freely at $1 ₱ dozen. California fruits, etc., are in full supply, good assortments, and selling at low prices.

Coffee.—The market is on the rising grade; good to choice Guatemala is now held strong at 17@17½c.; other Central American grades 14@16½c.; Rio, fair, low, may be quoted at 14@15c. An invoice of 400 bags O. G. Java, ex City of Tokio, sold at 25½c.

Metals.—The market is active for nearly all kinds. Sydney Tin, 17@18c.; Bar Iron, Iron Pipe, etc., are all upward inclined. Speculative purchases of 2,500 tons Scotch Pig Iron may be noted at $25.50@$26, and now held at $30 per ton.

Quicksilver.—Owing to the unexpected hreak at Hongkong, the market here has declined to 37@37½c. Our exports by sea since January 1st aggregate 44,900 flasks, against 22,773 flasks same time last year, showing a large increase this year over last. We have, hesides, shipped East largely by rail.

Rice.—The market is dull. The City of Tokio, from Hongkong, brought us 14,386 pkgs. We quote China, 4¾@5¾c; Hawaiian, 6c.

Spirits.—The Pacific Distilling Company, on the Presidio Road, will soon resume operations, having been idle two years and a half.

Salt.—The market for Liverpool is strong, at $18@20 ₱ ton.

Teas.—The City of Tokio brought us 10,087 pkgs; and for Eastern cities, to go forward by Central Pacific Railroad, 25,826 pkgs.

and is unsurpassed in the excellence of its climate, the beauty of its scenery, and in the attractiveness of its truly remarkable sea beach. Those extraordinary pebbles, among which are to be found agates, opals, sapphires, etc., were never so numerous as now, the past Winter having thrown up immense numbers of curiously-shaped stones, which for ages have been subjected to the everlasting motions of the tireless Pacific. WOULD YOU BE YOUNG AGAIN?

[BY THE BARONESS NAIRNE.]

Would you be young again?
So would not I.
One tear to mem'ry given,
Onward I'd hie;
Life's dark flood forded o'er,
All but at rest on shore.
Say—would you plunge once more,
With bome so nigb?

If you might, would you now
Retrace your way?
Wander througb thorny patbs,
Faint and astray?
Night's gloomy watcbes fled—
Morning all beaming red—
Hope's smiles around us sbed—
Heavenward—away.

Wbere are they gone, of yore
My best delight?
Dear and more dear, tbough now
Hidden from sight—
Where they rejoice to be,
There is tbe land for me;
Fly, time—fly speedily;
Come—life and light!

THE PENNY POST.--INTERESTING FACTS ABOUT THE LATE SIR ROWLAND HILL.

"Atlas," in the World, says: I see announced a long expected event—the deatb of my old chief, Sir Rowland Hill, at a great age. For the last few years, althougb he retained mucb of bis mental vigor to tbe end, be existed rather than lived—never quitting bis own suite of rooms, and the balcony wbere he enjoyed the fresh air blowing over Hampstead Heatb and the Highgate fields. Tbe great reform wbich he inaugurated and successfully carried out is not, nor ever will be, sufficiently appreciated, as it is almost impossible for us to understand the state of affairs prior to the days of cheap postage. Prudence, foresight, imperturbable self-reliance and dogged resolution were his principal characteristics. His tenacity was remarkable: once the idea was engendered and bad received tbe indorsement of the family council—for tbe Hills are eminently clannish, and to no other family can one better point for an illustration of tbe wisdom of the fable of the bundle of sticks—it must be carried through in spite of all opposition. Bating a tendency to nepotism—tbe besetting sin of all in authority with anything to bestow—be was a just man, and bis life was singularly plain, frugal and unpretending. "Tbe world knows nothing of its greatest men," says Sir Henry Taylor; and tbe trutb of tbe dictum was proved when, on a sketcb of Sir Rowland Hill as a "Celebrity" appearing in these columns a few years ago, a number of correspondents wrote to say they had imagined be bad long been dead. It is barely forty years since the penny post came into operation, and now we bave over eigbt bundred millions of letters delivered annually in London. In tbe City district alone a million letters are delivered every morning during the six working days of the week. The letters delivered in the London district form more than one-fourth of all tbe letters delivered in tbe United Kingdom. Scotland has not balf so many letters as London, nor Irelaud one-tbird. A siugle firm in London is known to receive 3,000 letters daily. The statistics of the Post Office illustrate a feature of the present age wbich is somewhat painful, namely, tbe almost utter impossibility of rest. Men are pursued from morning to night by letters and telegrams, and the work of the day may be upset by a message received in tbe evening. The strain is never taken off, the arrangements never seem to be final. Formerly there was a clear interval between post and post, a period of calm whicb could not be interrupted. Now it is only during a few hours in the night that tbere is immunity from some startling telegram, and, wben tbe day dawns on the City man, tbe flood of letters sets in with but sligbt intermission until evening. The letters without any address last year amounted to more than twenty thousand. There were more tban five millions of undelivered letters last year, while the undelivered post-cards, book packets and newspapers exceeded four millions. Half a million letters could neither be delivered nor returned to tbe senders. More tban eighteen thousand articles of different kinds reacbed the Returned Letter Office without covers or addresses. Inclosed among tbe unaddressed letters was £250 in coin and Bank notes, and nearly £8,000 in cbeques and bills of exchange. A present of more than seventy tbousand postage stamps was made to the Postmaster-General, if we may tbus interpret the fact tbat so many stamps were found unattached in the various letter-hoxes of the country. One letter, intended to be registered, tbe contents of whicb were said to be worth £125,000, was found among tbe ordinary correspondence. The registration of letters is largely on the increase, tbough some people seem still to dislike paying tbe fee, and run serious risks to evade it, such as pinning a £20 Bank of England note to the leaf of a book, and sending a bundle of £5 notes in a halfpenny wrapper. All departments of the Post Office exbibit growth except tbe Money Order business. Here we find decline both in the number and amount of the orders issued. Tbe falling off is attributed to dullness of trade, tbe increase in tbe rate of commission, and the reduction of tbe registration fee. Tbe money order transactions with the colonies show an increase, but the orders issued in the United Kingdom on the colonies bave decreased in tbeir aggregate value, though tbey have slightly increased in number. The business with foreign countries in this department is progressing. Looking to tbe general balance-sheet of the Post Office, we find tbat the total revenue under tbe bead of postage and money orders for tbe year 1878–79 was £6,274,000, while the expenditure was £3,840,000, the former heing an increase of £227,000, and the latter a decrease of £150,000. Thus the net revenue was £2,434,000, or an increase of £370,000 upon tbe year before. In the United Kingdom the Post Office has developed into a vast institution, employing 46,000 persons, of whom one-fourth are engaged exclusively on telegrapb work. In the United Kingdom there are nearly 26,000 receptacles for letters, London alone having nearly 2,000. With reviving trade and extending commerce, we shall see still greater demands made on tbe postal service, and we may confidently expect that these demands will be met. The British postal system is one of whicb the kingdom may be proud, and tbough it may be open to some little criticism, it is nevertheless a marvelous machine, working with a constancy and regularity which is invaluable for business purposes, while conducive also to many forms of social enjoyment. A single penny—or even a half-penny—sets tbe machine in motion, and the postman is the servant of everyhody.

A GOOD PLAN.

Anybody can learn to make money rapidly operating in Stocks, by the "Two Unerring Rules for Success," in Messrs. Lawrence & Co.'s new circular. The combination method, which this firm has made so successful, enables people with large or small means to reap all the benefits of largest capital and best skill. Thousands of orders, in various sums, are pooled into one vast amount and co-operated as a mighty whole, thus securing to each shareholder all the advantages of the largest operator. Immense profits are divided monthly. Any amount, from $5 to $5,000, or more, can be used successfully. N. Y. Baptist Weekly, September 26th, 1878, says: "By the combination system $5 would make $75, or 5 per cent.; $50 pays $350, or 7 per cent.; $100 makes $1,000, or 10 per cent. on the stock, during tbe month, according to the market." Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, June 29th: "The combination method of operating stocks is the most successful ever adopted." New York Independent, Sept. 12th: "The combination system is founded upon correct business principles, and no person need be without an income while it is kept working by Messrs. Lawrence & Co. Brooklyn Journal, April 29th: "Our editor made a net profit of $101.25 from $20 in one of Messrs. Lawrence & Co.'s combinations." New circular (mailed free) explains everything. LEAVING THE OLD HOUSE.

There's a shine on the meadows,
And sunshine on the road,
And through the brightness toils the horse
Beneath a weary load;
And as I stand beside the door, with hand before my eyes,
I hear the children laugh to see the household gods I prize.

There was a time when this old home
Was full of mirth and glee,
But one by one the household went
And left it all to me—
A quiet house of vacant rooms, each made a sacred place
By echo of missing voice, or dream of vanished face.

My new room is a pleasant place,
But yet it grieves me now;
Its small completeness seems to say
My world is narrow now;
'Tis far too small for any one with festivals to keep,
But for my funeral large enough, since few will come to weep.

Good-bye, old house—a long good-bye!
My hand is on your gate;
Though tears are gathering in my eyes,
I must not linger wait.
Good-bye, old house! and, after all, the love which makea you dear
Awaits me in the heavenly homs to which I'm drawing near.

THE WEDDING OF TROPHONIUS.

The Ceremony and Breakfast.—BRIGHTON, Monday, August 4th. Restless night. Afraid of oversleeping myself. Wake with a start—sun streaming strongly in at window. Look anxiously at watch. Half-past five! All right—go to sleep again. Wake again at half-past six—again at a quarter-past seven. Plenty of time for another snooze—ceremony not till eleven. Go to sleep once more. Wake refreshed and comfortable. Don't remember anything, and don't try to. Cosy. Get up and have quiet breakfast presently. * * * Remember wedding suddenly. I say—here—hope I haven't missed it! By George! quarter-past ten! Perform rapid act of dressing, and make for church. Don t think my cravat is tied properly; fancy my hoots are not a pair; quite certain I've "snicked" my face all over with razor. Feel fluffy and uncomfortable. Out of breath with hurry. All waiting at Church. General grinning of populace and guests at my late arrival. Ceremony proceeds. Am beginning to regain my wonted calm when, in a flash, am conscious of having left ring on my dressing-table! Agony—trembling knees, etc., etc. What shall I do? The thing will be wanted directly. Look wildly into body of church. Shall I make a dash at soms married woman, and demand her ring or her life? The dreaded time when it will be required approaches—nearer—nearer! Can imagine the feelings of the party in "The Pit and Pendulum." Only a few more words between me and my doom—the words are said. (Why do the six bridesmaids and six groomsmen feel in their pockets?) I burst into a cold perspiration and gasp tremulously, "I've forgotten it!" In an instant a dozen rings are thrust into my hand, and a dozen voices whisper, "I knew you would." Saved! Saved! (By the bridesmaids and groomsmen.) I recover rapidly, pocket eleven of the rings and use the other. Ceremony over. March out with Anna on my arm. Crowd at Porch. Some one says, "Hullo, here's ths father and mother comin' out fust!" Proceed to carriage with dignity. As we drive off, "best man" and principal bridesmaid emerge from porch. Received with cheers, showers of rice, and old slippers. Mistaken for the "happy pair." Glad of it—don't like rice and old slippers. Sumptuous breakfast. Glad of that, too; had nothing this morning—ravenous. Make a good meal. Toasts begin; don't object to that. Somebody proposes somebody else's health. I drink it. Somebody proposes my health (and Anna's). Don't care for that so much; can't drink your own health. Can take a drink to get courage for reply, though; also drink to refresh talk-parched throat when you sit down again. Propoae bridesmaids' health—and drink it. Somebody proposes Anna's father's health—talks about "losing loving daughter." Cries. Anna's father cries. Anna cries. Everybody else cries. Why, I wonder? Didn't Anna want to marry? Had this been forced upon her? Poor thing! Wish I'd ascertained the facts before. Well, we muat make the best of a bad job. I pity her; I will make a sacrifice. I rise to my feet (after drinking Anna's father's health, and knocking over my chair and some plates) and make the following speech: "Ladies and gentlemen—I am sorry to see you grieved, and I am still more sorry to he the cause of that grief. I cannot disguise from myself that if I hadn't married Anna none of you could have had cause to weep. I pity you much, and to prove my sincerity I will do my best to remedy the evil I have done. Take her, old man. Anna, go to your father. Take her; from this moment I relinquish all claim upon her. (Anna, why don't you go to your father?) All ahall he as though I had never existed, and I will go forth on my aad, broken-hearted way alone—al——." Here I how my aged head amid the lobster-salad, and weep the salt tears of Ouida's heroes. There is silence. Then Auna whispers, "You've taken quite enough," and the servant announces the carriage. Anna leads me away, dazed and confused with my emotions. Find myself at railway station. Write Tip for Brighton Stakea. Subsequently find it is a failure. No wonder. Start for Slnshby-super-Mare. Honeymoon hegins to-morrow. TROPHONIUS.

A SPECIMEN OF WOMANS' SCORN.

"I've seen your stormy seas and stormy women
And pity bushands rather more tban seamen." —Byron.

My next correspondent is by no means one of tbe complimentary sort, and in presence of her wrath all the satisfaction I got out of "John's" letter has melted away. Of course you bave seen an angry woman in the flesh. Tbey are to be found at every street corner, and married men meet them nigbtly wben they go home and gain admittance to the domestic hearth hy means of a mucb-fumhled latcb-key. But perhaps you have never read an angry woman's letter. Well, now is your opportunity. After a lapse of two months from a certain foolisb production, I bave received an irate epistle from Mrs. John Carter, who, I believe dwells, or used to dwell, somewhere in the Old Kent Road. Barmondsey and Billingsgate have a closer connection than Macedon and Monmouth, and they both begiu with a hig, big B, suggestive of bad language. Mrs. Carter's letter is couched in such elegant terms tbat I thought she would like to see it in print, and I cannot resist the temptation to present it to my readers as an example of the art of polite correspondence. Here it is:

SIR:—It has only just been brought under my notice by a friend that your disgusting and unmanly remarks on me and my appearance in the so-called comedy, "Lord Mayor's Day," produced at the Folly Theater June 30tb, gave to your paper of that date a distinction, questionable enough I grant, which on its ordinary merits neither it nor you ever before could claim. Scurrility and blackguardism do not, as a rule, attract the respectable classes; hut when they attack exceptional merit and true artistic well known ahility, then audacity like yours fills the vacancy so long observed in wit and judgment—"criticism" is out of the question where such a "son of a b——" [this is spelt in full] as you is concerned, and your "old fish-wife" journalism gets a chance to throw mud at a better woman than ever owned a cur of your breed. So, as you could not or dare not vilify personally, you hide your paltry "frog slime" under your frog's croak, and try to make a jibe of "the mother of a pretty large family." The "pretty large family" is at least honestly begotten, and belong to a pure mother, not like the offspring of many of your prime "pets," some of them gross as stalled oxen, and you know it, several of the herd giving one the idea, from their oily browness and coarse grain, that they bad been dieted on Thorley's oil-cake, so very exhuberent in flesh or nasal snuffling are they. I never read the vile excrescences of the printing press, no matter what form or title they presume to adopt. So, at this late date, I receive the information of your very critical notice of my poor little self in a very poor little part. Between it and me there might be a natural fitness, I don't venture to dispute, but I have done good service in my profession, and am capahle of still better, I hope. As for my "fat shoulders and arms," they were at least in perfect good form; that is more than your cowardly remarks were. And when you presume to say I looked "slightly ashamed of myself," you lied, as I am told you can lie. I never felt ashamed to do my duty to my author or the management that has a rigbt to my services. In contempt, and defiance of your poor harking, I am,

MRS. CARTER,
Late Folly Theater.

P. S.—Don't deceive yourself by imagining that your "fish-fagging" or Billingsgate classics can terrify one who is not accustomed to be haited by mongrels. I can, and will, if necessary, give you as good and as keen satire for your low ruffianism as Appemanthus gave the "sluts." My would-be-shaver, you are a descendant of one of them, and assert your maternal escutcheon—the bar sinister without a bend.

* * * * * * * * *

How is tbat for high? Tbe cream of a lady's letter is generally in tbe postscript. I don't think it is tbis time. I like that little bit about "exceptional merit and true artistic well known ability." Mrs. C. says sbe has done good work in her time. So sbe has. She made a capital croaker among the mourner's at Conn's wake in "The Shaughraun," at Drury Laue. Her croaking was so realistic that even Boucicault "laid out" couldn't keep still, and actually fancied that his last hour had come, and that they were going to put him undergronud.—"Carados," in London Referee.

The impending wedding of the Count Guy de Polignac to Miss Louise Pommery is the social topic in Parisian fashionable circles. Miss Pommery is the daughter of Mme. Vve. Pommery, whose brand of Champagne has lately made such a wonderful mark in Europe and the United States, probably owing to the fact that no other wine is placed at tbe table of tbe Prince of Wales.

TRADE OF THE UNITED STATES.

The following is the official report of the foreign trade of tbe United States for tbe fiscal year ended June 30th, as compared with the previous fiscal year:

	1877–78.	1878–79.
Exports	$680,709,268	$698,334,951
Foreign re-exports	14,156,498	12,093,792
Imports	437,051,532	445,792,141
Surplus exports	257,814,234	264,636,602

Tbe total foreign trade for 1878–79, excluding specie and hullion, was $24,313,654 more than for the previous year, heing made up of $15,500,000 increased exports and $8,750,000 increased imports. Since 1874–75, when exports and imports nearly balanced, the excess of exports has been gradually growing greater. In 1870–71–72–73 aggregated, the imports were $423,000,000 more tban tbe exports. In 1876–77–78–79 aggregated, the exports bave been $753,000,000 more tban tbe imports. For the later years, on account of decreasing values, the movement represents a much greater amount of tonnage, and the trade of the country is to-day heavier than was ever before known.

Tbe total value of the exports of merchandise from tbe United States during the fiscal year just ended exceeded the value of the imports of merchandise by the sum of $264,636,602, as against an excess of exports over imports of merchandise during the preceding year amounting to $257,814,234. These figures relate to merchandise alone. Tbe statistics of the merchandise exchanges with other nations for a series of years show tbe following differences:

Year endino June 30.	Total Exports	Total Imports.	Excess of Exports.	Excess of Imports.
1865	$166,029,303	$238,745,550		$72,716,277
1870	292,771,768	435,958,408		143,186,640
1875	513,442,711	533,005,436		19,562,725
1878	694,865,766	437,051,532	$257,814,234
1879	810,428,743	445,792,141	264,636,602

Since 1865, inclusive, there has been an excess of exports over imports of merchandise amounnting to $126,000,000. That is the balance of trads for the whole period of fifteen years.

The foreign imports into New York during July amounted to $27,128,509, heing an increase of $2,302,357 over tbe importations of July, 1878. For tbe seven months of 1879 the increase over 1878 is $13,000,000. The trade with Great Britain sbows the cbief increase.—British Trade Journal.

BOOK NOTICES.

A Summer Jaunt Through the Old World: A Record of an Excursion Made to and through Europe by the Tourjee Educational Party of 1878 By Luther L. Holden. Boston, Lee & Shepard; San Francisco, A. L. Bancroft & Co.

This volume, of more than six hundred pages, is probably the emptiest and silliest of all books of travel. The statement is a sweeping one; but there is the book, and any brave man can look into it for himself. Much there is taken from guide-books, in the line of statistics, a good deal of dread-fare quotation from familiar poets, travestied for the most part like this insufferable stuff, supposed to be Milton's:

"A world made so various that the mind
Of desultory man—"

and spasmodic fun, of the whole Tourjée party, breaking out from time to time in this fashion:

Benefit of the Floating Hospital!
Unified Appearance of the Lachrymosical Instigators, Etc.

Why Divine Providence should have permitted the birth and development of such fools as these tourists, is one of those mysteries before which the mind stands helpless and hopeless.

OUR AUTUMN HOLIDAY ON FRENCH RIVERS. By J. L. Molloy. Roberts Brothers, Boston, 1879.

This truly charming little 12mo. volume, of 320 pages, divided into 31 chapters, full of anecdote, details the narrative of the adventures which befel four young gentlemen and a dog during an autumn vacation, on a voyage of 300 miles in a racing "out-rigger" boat, forty feet long by two feet beam, on the rivers Seine and Loire. France, since the establishment of railways, has been so completely run over and described that it is difficult to travel for a few miles by land, in almost any direction, without falling into one or other of the tourists' highways. And it was only by the river—and making excursions from it into Normandy and Brittany—that they succeeded in finding the French people living in their unsophisticated simplicity. French modistes could not earn their salt in Normandy. The Norman girls are so pretty! . . . "It is impossible not to be struck with the great difference in dress between the lower classes in England and France. With the first it is a faded and weak imitation of their betters, and aping to appear something they are not; result, grotesque and shabby. In France they preserve the costume that has been transmitted from generation to generation. They are not ashamed—they are proud of it. The stuff is coarse to a degree, but it is strong and serviceable; scrupulously clean, and somehow has a new look. It costs little beyond the labor of washing, and that is why, with the poorest fishgirls, you see without exception such neat shoes—and, by the way, all French women have pretty feet. They can afford it, as well as the gold ornaments, which are either the investment of part of their earnings, or, as mostly happens, beirloems from time immemorial. And here, again, there is a total absence of seeking to imitate others. The pattern of the ear-rings and crosses is inexorably their own."—Page 63. Mr. Molloy is evidently a Roman Catholic, and all the better for describing churches and historical memorials of the faith and devotion of that ancient people, of which there is many a life-size picture faithfully drawn. With one feature of the book only have we reason to find fault: there are far too many sentences left without a verb or nexus for our liking.

THE AMERICAN EXPORTER, for September. Root & Tinker, 86 Duane street, New York.

This is one of the most handsomely got-up publications in the United States, and contains a great variety of most useful information on all subjects relating to the export trade of the country. It is carefully edited, and the facts and figures are all brought down to the latest dates. To persons engaged in the export trade, this publication must be invaluable, as it deals with the wants of all foreign countries.

The Great Clearance Sale at the Arcade has attracted multitudes the past two weeks, in spite of the excitement over the hero of the hour, and will be continued for one week more. In the line of Silks, Velvets, Camels' Hair stuffs, and Dress Goods of every description, the advantages offered are extraordinary; and the new styles, arriving every day from the East and Europe, are absolutely unrivaled for beauty and variety. Mr. J. J. O'Brien's purchases during his recent visit were made on terms so easy, owing to the standing of his house and his unlimited credit, that they are laid down here at a cost 20 per cent. below the average, and none can afford to neglect this opportunity to buy the finest products of European and Oriental looms, at prices which defy competition.

The Victoria Regia.—Edward Bosqui & Co. will shortly issue, to subscribers only, a splendid work on the lily now blooming in the Park Conservatory. The work will contain four or five beautifully-colored plates, showing the glorious plant, together with a full scientific description, and the notes of the explorers who found it in its native home. R. C. Bridges, the son of the naturalist (who, by the way, was one of the earliest contributors to the News Letter), who first sent the seeds to England, has charge of the publication, and may be found at No. 422 Montgomery street. Subscription lists are open at the Golden Gate Park, the Bohemian Club and the Mercantile Library.

The new firm of Eyre & Jones, which will begin business at the corner of Pine and Leidesdorff streets on the 1st October, should command immediate and universal confidence. Both partners are members of the San Francisco Stock Board, and have for the last fifteen years maintained high reputations for intelligence, energy and integrity. Col. Eyre has just returned from an extended tour in Europe and the East, and his association with Mr. Jones, who is one of the most popular brokers in the city, offers double guarantees of financial solidity, and establishes the new house at once in the front rank.

It is supposed every waiter in the Baldwin Hotel is on the pay-roll of the Justice Mining Company. The ore from the mine, that is worth $25 per ton, is worked in Baldwin's mills, and in such a manner that it produces but $6 per ton and costs $12 to reduce, bringing the company $6 a ton in debt. A meeting will be held at 3 P. M. to-day at 411½ California street, to investigate this matter and to appoint a committee. Stockholders should be present in a body.

The Music Trade Journal, published in New York by Root & Tinker, and edited by Charles Avery Wells, is on our table. It is evidently started in opposition to Freund's Music Trade Review, and, from present appearances, intends to make matters lively in the not distant world of harmony. In appearance, it is neat, and though evidently in its infancy, having only reached its third number, the Journal promises to be a lusty addition to the other squealers in the nursery of Saint Cecilia. We regard the color of the cover as a special compliment to the News Letter.

To make a good appearance is the duty of every man, for it is in the power of each one to show his best points; and if dressed by J. M. Litchfield & Co., 415 Montgomery street, a gentleman is always at his best, for they have the most accurate fitter in the city, and turn out none but first-class work.

Archery.—We desire to thank a Sacramento correspondent for an exhaustive and carefully compiled account of the late tournament. Unfortunately, our space this week would not admit of its publication. Will make correction next issue. Further correspondence, which should be as brief as possible, solicited.

REGRET.

Regret, Regret! A potent spell
To chain the memory to the past;
To bid the tear of sorrow well,
And suffocate the heart at last.

What hopes, with fairest color lined,
Besiege the weary, burdened breast,
And seek for entrance but to find
The casket filled by black unrest!

Yet, with this canker deeply fraught,
Life's bitter trials must be met,
And solaced but by one fond thought—
To die will be my last regret.

"THE FUTURE OF CHINA."

In the "Contemporary" for September, W. H. Medhurst, a man who possesses a singularly accurate knowledge of China and her people, publishes, under the title above given, some interesting speculations on the probable course of events iu Asia. Mr. Medhurst recognizes China, Russia and Great Britain as the three grsat rivals for Asiatic dominion, and accords to the first-named powsr remarkable tenacity of purpose and dstermination not to suffer permanent diminution of her territory or loss of prestage. Whenever China has been forcsd to yield control of a province to successful rebels, he declares, it bas always been with the firm dstermination to reënter upon its traditional rights at ths earliest opportunity. At ths same time, the determination has not hitherto availed against her European competitors, but only against native Asiatics. Whether the reconquest of revolted provinces is to bs desired in the interest of their inhabitants, seems to Mr. Medhurst very douhtful, though he inclines to think that ths Chinese authority is, on the whole, milder and more beneficent toward its subjects than any native rule which could be substituted for it; but he is decidedly of opinion that a transfer, whether to England or to Russia, is far preferahle.

What seems to him hetter for one or two of the provinces of Cbina, he does not hesitats to say must be better for the whole country.

"Many things conspire to show," he writes, "that the days of the ruling dynasty ars numbered; and who can say, when the catastrophe does come, whether the huge but crumbling fabric will ever he reconstructed? or, if so, whose will be the head and band that will accomplish the task? The probability is that the Empire will, in spite of the marvelous homogeniety which characterizes its people, at oncs lose its cobesion and break up into a number of petty chiefdoms."

This centrifugal tendency exists in China, as in all unwieldy Empires, and Mr. Medhurst might, if he had thought it necessary, have proved his assumption by citing many instances from Chinese history, ths course of which Western readers are but too apt to look at as one of unbroken and stable prosperity. Any catastrophe to the ruling dynasty would be complicated with the relations of the Empire to the Great Western Powers; a condition which did not exist in the convulsions of the past, and ons sure to make the internal crisis of the nation far more difficult to deal with.

Mr. Medhurst considers that any territorial acquisitions by England at the expense of China are out of the question. But the case is materially different with Russia; for, in acquiring almost any part of China propsr, this power would gain precisely what she most needs—territory alrsady thickly peopled and possessed of resources of every kind. Moreover, her advance on China would be unchallenged by any rival; and, if Russia is not the very nation providentially called in this direction, she has certain special fitnesses for taking the place of the central government at Pekin.

The theory of the Russian government, like that of ths Chinese, is autocratic and despotic, and so far suited to the ideas of the people it might conquer; and the material improvement of the subjugated country would be very great. Railways would be introduced, telegraphs laid down, river channels cleared and deepened, cauals restored and maintained, and tbe obstacles which now stand in the way of iuternal communicatiou removed.

To look for tbese changes, or any of them, at the hands of the present ruling dynasty seems to Mr. Medhurst utterly vain. It is not, he declares, in the nature of the Chinese to initiate reform or to carry it honestly and steadily out. What have been called the stupendous efforts of the Pekin government toward a reörganization of its naval and military resources have been wholly due, he says, in conception and execution to foreign energy, enterprise and ability; and wherever the influence of these is removed, disorganization and relapse are the result. He cites the instance of the foreign-drilled levies, raised after tbe treaty of Tientsin. Men and money were forthcoming, and the drill was easily learned; but the foreign instructors had always to superintend the paying of wages in order to prevent peculatiou by the native officers, aud the moment their vigilant eyes were removed, drill and discipline were voted a nuisance by officers and men, arms and accoutrements were neglected, and the force rapidly put on its purely Chinese character.

Thers seems to Mr. Medhurst but one way to save China from eventual collapse, or from falling into the hands of Russia; and this is by a universal development in every branch of her administration of the system of extraneous aid, already applied to her foreign customs revenue. This, however, is practically impossible; for it supposes a personnel of the requisite talent and probity adequate to assume charge of the details of government in the eighteen provinces of an Empire counting more than 300,000,000 of souls. Supposing the officials could be found, political balauce at Pekin demands that ths Chinese servics should be distributed equally among ths nations which have treaties with the Empire, and this would introduces another element of strife and discord. The conclusive argument against this universal administration by foreignere, supposing it possible, is that it would be practically equivalent to a conquest by a coalition of the powers represented.

As to any modification of the Chinese feeling toward Europeans, Mr. Medhurst maintains that there is no ground for hope. The people are for the moet part good natured, hut unsympathetic, and the government has seized every opportunity to evade its obligations; and be thinks the cass has not heen heard of in which the initiative has been voluntarily taken by a Chinese official in righting a wrong suffered by a foreigner at ths hands of a native.

His conclusion is, tbat if it be a danger to England in a political point of view that Russia ehould obtain a coutrolling position iu China, it is a danger that must be looked in the face, for everything ssems to point to the possibility of such a consummation.

THE DARIEN CANAL.

If we are to believe the reports of the American engineers upon the proceedings of the Paris Congress in relation to the proposed Darien Canal, the projectors have not formed a correct estimate either of the natural difficulties to be overcome or the cost that must necessarily be incurred in order to carry the undertaking to a successful issue. Admiral Ammon declarss in his report upon the Paris Inter-Oceanic Canal Congress, that the Congress had within it from its first sitting two parties of speculators, one advocating the Nicaragua and the other the Panama route, and that the selection of the Panama route was due to this cause; and that the proposed canal a niveau hy the Isthmus of Panama, either with or without a tunnel, was proved hy able engineers to bs hopelessly impracticable if considsred as a commercial question. Ths view taken of the enterpriss by ths American public does not seem to bs by any means a favorable one, and it is anticipated that tbe contributions from this source will he comparatively small. M. De Lesseps, in delivering a lecturs at Nantes, denied that England or America opposed his project. But most of ths leading journals in America are strongly opposed to the undertaking, and from a political point of visw the project of building up a foreign proprietary power astrids the vital line of connection between ths Atlantic and Pacific domains of tbe Republic is regarded with jealousy and distrust. Ths United States Government will probably appoint a special commission to inquire further into the proposed routes, hut the enterprise is looked upon as practically a foreign interference in American affairs; and it is naturally demanded that an enterprise of such vast importancs to the country should he undertaken under American auspices, and should hear tbe stamp of American nationality. There was no difficulty of this kind to bs overcome in ths case of the Suez Canal; rival foreign influence could not be permitted to exist in relation to any portion of the soil of the American Contiuent. It is not enough to guarantes the neutrality of the canal; public opinion demands that the construction should be made by an American route, and under American control. M. De Lesseps would do well to defer to ths sentiment so generally expressed witb regard to the scheme to which he has lent the prestige of bis name. It is indeed questionable, whether in tbe face of sucb a strong public opinion, the United States Government can lend any countenance whatever to the undertaking. The scheme does now, in fact, meet with active opposition at Washington, and it is scarcely probable that under such conditions tbe project could be successfully carried out.—European Mail.

THE FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The Board of Fire Commissioners have made their Annual Report, which contains the following statistics: The Department possesses 11 steam fire-engines, 8 horse hose-reels, 4 hook-and-ladder carriages and 1 fire-hoat, all in active service, besides 5 steam fire-engines and 6 hoss-reels in reserve. The force consists, all told, of 294 men. Two hose companies, Nos. 7 and 8, have been added the past year. The number of hydrants is now 1,278, and all the property of the Department, with the exception of ths boilers of Engine No. 4 and relief Engine No. 4, is in excellent condition. The losses by fire during tbe year were: On huildings—July, $21,539.62; August, $6,909; September, $9,375; October, $14,819.49; November, $6,154.76; December, $15,097.23; January, $15,758.90; February, $3,832.15; March, $2,413.50; April, $5,754.50; May, $14,872; Juns; $4,893; making a total of $122,419.37. Insurance, $906,324.29; insurances paid, $75,448.96. Losses on contents—July, $21,198; August, $42,323.50; September, $4,709.80; October, $21,197.35; Novsmber, $12,311.46; December, $16,378.25; January, $45,341.45; Fsbruary, $13,827.53; March, $1,437.50; April, $12,738.22; May, $32,575.19; June, $7,061.25; making a total of $232,099.50. Insurance, $1,355,991.02; insurance paid, $133,019.84. Tbe only fre of auy magnitude that occurred during the year was on the evening of August 24th, in a four-story brick and iron building on the corner of Bush and Sausome streets, owned and occupied by Murphy, Grant & Co. The stock of goods was valued at $2,000,000, but so efficient were the measures of the firemen and fire patrol that the total loss, ou building and contents, was but $44,300. The appropriatiou for running expenses for the past year was $80,000. Of this amount there remained on hand, June 30th, 1879, $10,623.62. Officers and men are complimeuted in the Report for their promptness and energy, but not more than tbey deserve, as every resident of the city knows.

RECEPTION AT BLACK POINT.

Of the many cordial attentions shown to General Grant, since his arrival, none can have gratified him more than tbe afternoon reception given him at Black Point, on the 24th, by his distinguished comrade, General McDowell, commanding the Military Department of the Paci6c. All the beauty and wealth and fashion of our city gatbered to do honor to the hero of tbe day, the guests as they arrived being received by the courteous host and bostess and presented to General and Mrs. Grant. Ths noble grounds wers tbrown open for the enjoyment of all, and in the exquisite softness of the afternoon air the company wandered to and fro among the flowers, with the panorama of the beautiful bay hefore them. Among the ladies present were Mrs. Louis T. Haggin, Mrs. Barroilhet, Mrs. William Babcock, Mrs. Gordon Blanding, Mrs. Ben. Holladay, Mrs. D. O. Mills, Miss Jenny Flood, Mrs. Judge Platt (sister-in-law of General Mansfield, our Lieutenant-Governor elect), Mrs. Theodors Shillaber, Mrs. M. Castle, Mrs. Governor Irwin, Mrs. J. C. Flood, Mrs. Field, and others.

Concerning future rewards and punishments, Colorado furnishes the following illuetrations, which occurred recently in a Court in La Vega, whers the testimony of a Chinese was objected to, on the ground tbat he did not underetand or regard the obligation of an oath. To test bim, he was interrogated tbus:

"John, do you know anything about God?"

"No; me no belly well acquaiut with Him."

"Have you no Joss in Cbina?" "Oh, yes, gottee heapee Joss."

"Where do you go when you die?" "Me go to San Flancisco."

"No; you don't understand me. When Cbinaman quit washee alles time, and no live any mors, where does he go?"

"Oh yes, me sabe now. If he belly goodee man, he go uppen sky. If he belly badee man, he go luppen down hellee, allee eamee Melicau man."

The Court was eatisfied with this orthodox statement, and admitted his testimony.—Editor's Drawer, in Harper's Magazine.

REDUCING CAPITAL.

We note that the Bank of California has reduced its capital stock from $5,000,000 to $3,000,000, reserving the difference (which consists mainly of real estate taken for indebtedness, and is a legacy of its old business) as a surplus until the property can be realized advantageously. We understand that the proceeds will then be placed in Government bonds, or divided among stockholders. The bank has been led to this course by a desire to place their business on a cash basis, at the same time to protect itself from the provisions of the new Constitution, which invites impending legislation in regard to all corporations. By the terms of the new Constitution, the Legislature may adopt such laws as will impose taxes not only on its assets, in the shape of money and property, but on its franchise, capital stock, and any other property capable of transfer. This, of course, would be tantamount to double or triple taxation. With the reduction of the capital stock and placing its active capital on a cash basis, the bank will soon be in a position to resume dividends. The Board of Directors of the Bank of California are among our most conservative business men, and we cannot withhold from them our commendation for this wise and conservative course, believing that their action meets with not only the hearty approval of its stockholders, but of the business community who are the active patrons of the bank. We understand that other institutions have it in contemplation to adopt a similar policy.

THE STOCK MARKET.

The market opened suspiciously strong at the commencement of the week, under news of a reported "strike" in the Union shaft, but the subsequent announcement that the ore was only of medium grade, together with the fact that the pumping facilities were inadequate to handle the water in Sierra Nevada, had a demoralizing effect upon the long-suffering holders of these stocks, who are by this time nearly worn out with disappointments and delays, of one kind and another, and determined to realize upon the first indications of a decline. The market, to say the least, is very unstable, and nothing short of a development of ore can restore confidence. Official advices from Sierra Nevada state that there will be no trouble experienced in handling the water, which will be entirely removed before the end of the present week, when the work of prospecting the 2300-foot level will be started, and vigorously pushed, with the view of opening up the lower levels as soon as possible. In the west cross-cut in Ophir nothing new is to be learned, as the drift has not yet reached a point where anything of value is expected. Bullion is strong and in good demand. The diamond drill was started to-day to prospect the ledge on the 2,600 level, where good results are expected. Outside stocks are dull, and offer but little inducement for speculators. At the close the market was heavy and inactive.

On the 30th ult. the Bank of California formally announced the reduction of her capital from $5,000,000 to $3,000,000, so we will continue to quote the price of the old stock until after the public are familiar with the change. There is more activity in business circles, and in a few weeks we hope to see its effect on investment securities.

Pacific Mail "Boom."—It was recently predicted that Pacific Mail stock would go to 30, and Thursday the quotation came through at 32½. A later quotation gives 32⅝. On October 2, 1878, the price of the stock was 18⅜, and in January last it went down as low as 10⅝! Such a difference as existing between 10⅝ and 32⅝ is indicative of something like a revolution in the affairs of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. That the present upward tendency is speculative may be true to a certain extent, but, judging from late telegraphic reports, the advance is mainly based on the more conservative policy now being pursued by the company, and a commendable disposition to put their affairs on such a basis as, in the language of the New York Graphic, "to justify the confident expectation of leading shareholders that the company will at an early day take a place among dividend-paying corporations."

Arizona Items—September 27th.—The Tombstone M. & M. Co.'s hullion coach brought in ten more bars from the little mill at Charleston. The gross weight was 1,391 pounds, and the total value $20,838 91, of which $1,089 43 was gold and $19,749 48 in silver. This shipment, added to the six previous shipments, makes a grand total of $150,335 30. The bars went forward to Philadelphia by coach to-day.——The report of the city Tax Collector of Tucson shows that of nearly $5,000 taxes only $20 50 are delinquent. The debts of the city are all paid, and over $1,000 in the treasury. This speaks well for its financial administration.

Among the items omitted in our last issue was the following. At the levée given by ex-President Grant in the New City Hall, our esteemed friend, Augustus Laver, one of the aides-de-camp to the Grand Marshal on his arrival in San Francisco, had the distinguished honor of an especial presentation, through Mayor Bryant, as the architect of the magnificent Hall in which he was then holding his reception.

Mr. Thomas M. Cash, Special Freight Agent of the Central and Southern Pacific Railroads, returned last Monday from an extended tour through Arizona, New Mexico and Colorado. He has had rough experience, but it appears to agree with him.

A remarkable translation from the Portuguese by Emilie Lawson is unavoidably omitted.

THE EXCURSIONIST.

He was wandering wide on the bleak sea wall,
By the mud where the waves ought to be;
And the wind played a game with the coat and the shawl,
And the gingham umbrella and the gay parasol,
And the hasket and bag he was laded withal,
And the wife and the children three.
Clearly he
Was enjoying what he'd call a "spree."

But his eye rolled wild, as the rude east wind
Whisked his Sunday hat far out to sea;
And he swore a sad oath, as he chattered and grinned,
While his wife round his head her best handkerchief pinned,
And the children howled loud, with their faces all skinned,
And their trousers all burst at the knee.
For you see
The east wind was uncommonly free.

Then the merciless rain on the sea-wall smote,
And the gingham was blown inside out;
And the gay parasol, and the shawl, and the coat,
And the bag, and the basket were fairly afloat,
And the wife of his bosom blown over a boat,
And the babies all flying about—
Such a rout!
'Twas a pitiful sight, without doubt.

Still that singular man kept his strange, wild course
By the marge of that mud-covered bay;
And he laughed a grim laugh that was strident and hoarse,
As he saw how the wind had pronounced a divorce—
For his wife and his babes were borne on by its force
Till they vanished in mist far away.
I may say,
I was shocked at his seeming so gay.

I was grieved as I marked how, through pitiless rain,
He went wandering on all that day;
And I thought, if I happened to meet him again,
I would ask for what sin he endured all this pain,
And the reason he roved on the briuk of the main
While his wife and his babes were astray.
For this trait
Seemed a strange sort of thing to display.

So I asked the weird man if he'd give me the tip
Why he wandered on thus through the pour;
And he eyed me with scorn, while a grin curled his lip,
As he answered, "This here is a cheap Pleasure Trip;
Seven hours by the sea, and a blow and a dip,
And a walk by the bootiful shore!"—
Then he swore!
For he'd got all he'd paid for—and more.

THE PRESIDENCY.

We suppose it is hopeless to expect much of a respite from the discussion of politics. We could have wished that, with the ending of the late election, they might bave been allowed to rest for a while, hut the great contest of next year is too near at hand, involves considerations too important, and is being participated in hy too many candidates and their friends, to permit us to forget that we shall soou be called upon to choose the Chief Magistrate of the nation. When we remember how little was known of Mr. Hayes prior to his election, and when it is admitted, as it must he, that be has discharged his onerous duties exceedingly well, we may take heart of grace, and rest satisfied that, whoever it may please the politicians and Providence to give us for our next President, he will certainly do no great harm, but may do some good. The only danger worthy of serious calculation is the possihility that we may have another election as close as was the last. If that should unfortunately occur, it can hardly be expected that it will be determined as was the great contest of 1876. No more eight-to-seven decisions will be submitted to. To prevent trouble, a candidate strong before the people is the present great desideratum. Who is he to be? Tilden would seem to be necessarily the Democratic choice; he was, without doubt, duly elected President, and that he was, through no fault of his own, deprived of the fruits of his victory, is a reason in favor of, rather tban against, his being nominated again. He has shown that he can carry the country, for he received a popular majority of nearly half a million, and that is more than any other living Democrat can boast of. Tilden's strength is evidently feared hy the Republican press, for that is the explanation of the vicious attacks that are made upon him. If he were not deemed the most likely man to carry New York, he would be either let alone or praised. Moreover, if he were an available candidate at the last election, he ought to be no less so now; he has gone through a most trying time with great dignity and patriotic forbearance. All things considered, he would seem to be tbe probable Democratic caudidate. Who is to be pitted against him by the Republicans? Sherman and Blaine are the candidates who enjoy the most prominence at present. Whether either of them could beat Tilden may well be doubted. Sherman is not fully trusted, and Blaine is feared. We have a strong impression that affairs will be made to fall out in such a way that Grant will, after all, be renominated. If he is, will he he re-elected? Many Republicans, who are prejudiced against a third term, would undoubtedly vote against him, but they would be nowhere as against the hosts who desire a strong Government, and who would rally to Grant's support in order to obtain one. If Grant is not the next President, the chances, in that case, would seem to favor Tilden.

There is a remarkable turn of speculation going on at Paris. Companies are heing hrought out at enormous premiums. The well-known M. Philippart has lately issued the shares of a new bank of 500 francs each, at a premium of 200 francs. The public have not only bought up the shares at this price, but have added a premium of 150 to 200 francs at which the original inventor offered them. M. Philippart's bank, in conjunction with the Société Fouciere de Paris, has bought the Grand Hotel for more than £1,000,000.

FALSE ECONOMY.

The news comes by wire from New York that tbe Pacific Mail Company intends to reduce the salaries of its employés on this coast by 33⅓ per cent. This is false economy that had better be reconsidered forthwith. There is nothing whatever to justify it. The present salaries are not by any means too high, nor is the business of the company in such a condition as to offer an excuse for a resort to desperate economies. The contrary is the fact. The company's ships are all fully and profitably employed. Its trade on all its lines is rapidly increasing; and this is mainly due to the exertions of its highly efficient employés. Never, probably, during its whole existence has the Pacific Mail Company been better served at all points than it is now. Everything on this side is running with exceptional smoothness and regularity. It is long since we heard of any accident to the company's fleet. The steamers arrive and depart with remarkable punctuality. Most excellent engineers are preserving the machinery in good order. Experienced commanders are navigating the ships to perfection, and winning the good will of passengers, and capable agents are extending freight traffic. This is a condition of things that should be let alone. Certainly it is not the way to reward capable servants for the past, or to encourage them for the future, to so largely reduce their by no means too great salaries. It is an anomaly tbat with the announcement of the reduction comes the statement that the company's income has been most satisfactorily increasing of late. We hope the New York Board of Directors will reconsider their action and let well alone.

The masterpiece among Raphael's best productions was bought by Augustus III., Elector of Saxony, for 60,000 florins. It was received at Dresden with great enthusiasm, the Elector's throne being moved to mske room for it in the best-lighted place in the gallery, and a little later it was cleaned and varnished by Palmaroli—a terrible result ensuing, which agitatcd the whole art-world with a fear that the masterpiece was ruined. The picture appeared covered with stains, and it was stated that the colors had become very dry—an evil which was only quite receutly remedied by bathing the back of the canvas with volatile oil, restoring the masterpiece in a very few hours to its pristine beauty.—From "Raphael," by N. D'Auvers.

Lord Lytton, the Governor-General of India, has sent a telegram to Lady Cavagnari, informing her of the lamentahle murder of her husband, couched in tho following terms: "It is with unspeakable sorrow that I convey to you tbe intelligence of the death of your noble husband, who has perished heroically in defending the British Embassy at Cabul against fearful numbers. Words cannot express the depth of my grief for the loss of my beloved friend, or my sense of the irreparable calamity sustained by his country. Every English heart in India feels for you."

The "Commercial Herald" says "the main feature of the financial situatiou continues to be the heavy importation of foreign gold." It is now rather harder to obtain silver than gold, and money continues to accumulate in the banks, with but little demand. The general business outlook is dull, though it is hoped that the revival of Eastern trade and industry will have a beneficial effect on this coast before long.

The total traffic receipts on the railways of the United Kingdom amouuted for the week euded August 24th, on 15,795½ miles, to £1,198,326, and for the corresponding week in 1878, on 15,618¼ miles, to £1,267,905, showing an increase of 177¼ miles and a decrease of £69,588.

THE CHURLS OF THE PRESS.

The few men of mark connected with the press of this city must often feel humiliated at the churlishness and littleness that is born of the intense rivalries and jealousies of our dailies. It is bad enough that the proprietors should be filled with such mortal hatred towards each other, but it is worse that their employees should be called upon to be active partisans in quarrels in which they have no interest, and with which, as educated gentlemen, they cannot possibly be expected to have any sympathy. Yet it is essential that they should become just such partisans if they would retain their places. Any man who would remain in the service of Pickering & Fitch must hate the De Youngs and must excel his employers in the art of making his hatred conspicuous, which, it must be confessed, is a pretty difficult thing to do. This setting of employees at loggerheads is disastrous to that harmony and good feeling which should characterize gentlemen of the press. It degrades them to the level of their employers, which is saying not a little. The other day this bad feeling cropped out in a most inopportune way. There was in our city a most distinguished representative of the New York press, Mr. Russell Young has held the highest position on the press of the metropolis. His talents have at one time or another been recognized by Greeley, Raymond, Dana and the elder Bennett; no mean authorities. He had accompanied General Grant on his voyage around the world as special correspondent of the New York Herald, and was in our city temporarily as a visitor. His confreres of the press desired to show him a very proper courtesy by inviting him to dine with them. That was a very fitting act. Yet it excited the ire of Pickering & Fitch, and their establishments were entirely unrepresented on the occasion. Mr. Russell Young, during the Chronicle's struggles to get press dispatches, had assisted that journal, and hence no employee of the Call or Bulletin must dine with him. Moreover, Denis Kearney, who did not know Mr. Young, and had never been injured by him, was inspired to make a most savage attack upon him by his tutors of the Call. Thus it comes that the courtesies and proprieties of life are impossible to the gentlemen of the press of San Francisco.

THE JURY SYSTEM.

The jury system has long been esteemed a palladium of liberty; but we seem to have come upon days of evil, when the system is falling into disrepute. Under the new Constitution, juries are shorn of many of their ancient powers. Grand Juries are practically abolished, and a one man power is to suffice to put any other man on his trial for crime. In civil cases, three-fourths of a jury may find a verdict, a unanimous vote being no longer necessary. In older lands, where the people are jealous of encroachments upon their liberty, these would be regarded as steps in the wrong direction, and would be most stoutly resisted. But, then, the jury system does not work as unsatisfactorily in any other place with which we are acquainted as it does in California. Grand Juries here fail to indict some of the most notorious of criminals. Trial juries find verdicts that are beyond comprehension. In short, jurors are fast rendering civil and criminal trials a farce. No mortal man may foretell the outcome of a jury trial. The evidence may be all one way, and the verdict all the other. Verdicts nowadays are the results of personal feeling, and and of compromise, and testimony is too often of but little account. During the last week or two several striking instances of this have occurred in our city courts. There was the case of the man Terrill, who stabbed a laborer employed on one of our streets, until he was so injured that his life was long despaired of. In the Police Court Terrill was allowed to plead guilty of an assault, and was fined $500. But when his victim came to sue for damages for the bodily injuries he had sustained, and for the loss of time and expenses incurred, a jury was found stupid and heartless enough to set aside Terrill's own plea in the Police Court, and to declare by their verdict that the stabbed man was not assaulted worth a cent. They gave a verdict for the defendant! In the face of such results, it is no wonder that the jury system is falling into disrepute. The difficulty is to tell what to replace it with.

A HINT TO THE JUDGES.

There is likely to be not a little confusion at the going out of all our existing judges, and at the coming in of an entire batch of new ones. This confusion it is in the power of the present judges to reduce to a minimum. They ought to see to it that not a single case submitted to them is left undetermined. If they fail in this particular, the trouble, expense and annoyance to litigants will be incalculable. Such failure on the part of District Judges will render new trials necessary, and on the part of Supreme Judges it will involve the re-hearing of cases. The confusion would be great, and ought not to be allowed to occur. It will be an everlasting reflection upon the present judges if it is not prevented. They should work with a will until the last hour of their term of office expires, for they will assuredly not fail to draw their full salaries. They will continue until then in the public service, drawing public pay, and entitled to do their very best for their employers—the people. If they fail in this respect, they will thereby afford the very best evidence of the wisdom of their dismissal from office, and will destroy any claims they might otherwise have to consideration on some future occasion. As honest men, worthy of their high callings, they are bound in all honor to leave their judicial duties fully performed up to the last hour of their employment. They know, even better than we can tell them, the great confusion that will ensue upon their leaving a mass of unfinished business behind them. All old business should be cleaned up, and no more new cases should be heard than can be determined. The new judges are, many of them, but green hands, and will at first have quite enough to do to overtake the duties of their office without having a quantity of unfinished business to take up.

New Alloy.—M. Phillips has made some experiments for the determination of the coefficient of elasticity and of the limit of elasticity of different bodies. He refers especially to a new alloy which was melted and cast by Matthey, of London. Its density at the freezing point is 21.6139. Its composition is: Platinum, 80.660; iridium, 19.079; rhodium, .122; iron, .093; ruthenium, .046. This alloy is so malleable and ductile that M. Sainte-Claire Deville possesses a thread of it, which is only a few hundredths of a millimeter in diameter and is scarcely visible. A hundredth of a millimeter is only 1-2500 inch.

A jail is a sort of a bird cage—it's a knave-iary, you know.

DIVISION OF THE ELECTRIC LIGHT.

Messrs. Molero and Cebrian are the patentees of a process for dividing the electric light in such a manner that one service to a house may, by means of keeping the illuminating rays parallel to each other until they are received on a mirror, be so subdivided on the face of this reflecting mirror, as by means of prisms placed in suitable apertures in the floors the light can be distributed through the rooms above and below. From experiments, conducted in some large rooms in the city, and witnessed by quite a number of scientists and experts, the results were satisfactory. Last Wednesday night an exhibition was hurriedly got up at the Mechanics' Pavilion, and just like so many others that we remember to have witnessed, proved, as far as the practically-minded public were concerned, a failure. Messrs. Molero and Cebrian are foreigners, but foreigners or not, they ought to have known that hardly one man in ten thousand can form any other idea of a discovery emanating from recondite principles, than as it there and then satisfies their mind that it accomplishes the purpose to which it is to be applied.

This is no unfriendly criticism. The News Letter knows already enough from reliable sources to regard this application as more likely to distribute the electric light through dwellings than any of the hitherto mentioned or suspected subdivision of the light at the point of issue. When we remember the use which is now made of sunlight reflected from mirrors as a means of telegraphing to the distance of many miles, such as took place recently in the wars in South Africa, by means of which news of the safety of a beleaguered general was received and assurances of relief returned, the task remaining in order to be prepared for public exposition by Messrs. Molero & Cebrian, appears trifling indeed. But whenever the next public exhibition shall take place, let those gentlemen bear in mind that, to be of any good effect, it must be a demonstration to the satisfaction of the average practical American mind, and nothing less. We wish them all success.

Evolution seems to have now become the scientific mania of the present age, and to deny its operation, within fixed limits, would be absurd. Evolution, meaning thereby the tendency and capacity to improve from genera through species by cultivation, nourishment, altered social habits, acclimatization, etc., under new conditions of life, but always within limits, is doctrine which is acceptable to educated Christian men. But when evolution is pushed to the extremity to which it is by the modern school of materialist and atheist philosophers, the Christain takes his leave, and says he will wait for further evidence to connect together Huxley's doctrine of "protoplasm" and "the primordial utricle" with his own self-consciousness and wonderfully perfect and complex organization. The thoughtful man will not be carried away by vague generalities. He will stop to ask how the oval corpuscle of the blood of all those creatures which the "Holy Book" informs us were created from the water could ever circulate through the capillaries formed to fit the round corpuscles of the mammalians? In fact, the whole of the present tangle of evolution—into which it has been thrown by Darwin, Huxley, Tyndall and others of inferior name, both in England and on the continent—will never be satisfactorily disposed of till it shall have been taken in hand by honest hystologists and physiologists, who, in material things, will take nothing on faith; men like Sir James Paget, Owen, and their fellows and successors. Such men as these would never mix up metaphysics with physical speculations of the origin of life. However, as there are plenty of talkers about evolution among your readers, I will help them as far as I can by a translation, first into English and then into plain English, of a famous definition. It was translated into English by Dr. Kirkman, the eminent mathematician, and into plain English by Sir Edmund Beckett:

1. Evolution is a change from an indefinite, incoherent homogeneity to a definite, coherent heterogeneity, through continuous differentiations and integrations.

2. Into PLAIN English, thus: Evolution is a change from a nohowish, untalkaboutable all-alikeness to a sowhowish and in-general talkaboutable not-all-alikeness, by continuous somethingelsifications and sticktogetherations. J. J. B.

Cavagnari (writes a correspondent), although he never loses his temper, can, on occasion, hit wonderfully straight from the shoulder. I remember once riding with him to an appointment he had with some Afridis to settle some vexed land question. I remained on the road while he, alone, in the center of about a dozen stalwart ruffians armed to the eyebrows, walked round the field. Presently the loud angry accents of a dispute reached my ears. The Afridis were surrounding Cavagnari, gesticulating with passionate vehemence, some with hands on their daggers. Cavagnari stood quiet, perfectly fearless, utterly impassive. Suddenly I saw the biggest of the Afridis go down like a bullock, and Cavagnari, with unruffled composure, returning his hand into his pocket. He had knocked the ruffian down, and the swift thoroughness of the act cowed the fierce hillmen. About half way on the return journey Cavagnari remarked, apologetically, "It was absolutely necessary. Please don't think I lost my temper; I was perfectly cool; but I was forced to maintain my ascendancy;" and then he added, meditatively, "and I wanted also to save my life."

A professor of legerdemain who was recently exhibiting in a provincial theater, got a country boy on the stage, and told the audience that he would pass a coin into the boy's coat pocket from a box. "You don't think I can do it, do you?" "No, sir—I don't," answered the lad, with decided emphasis. "Well, do you stand up here and we shall see." "But, sir," persisted the boy, "ther' ain't no use 'r yer tryin', 'cause I know yer can't do it." "You know I can't. Don't be too sure. Walt and see. Just you stand right here—there! Now hold up your head and look steadily at me, to see that I do not cheat you." "Oh, well," muttered the persistent urchin, with a comical grimace, "I'll stand anywhere ye want; only, 'f 'u git any money into my pocket, I reckon ye'll hey to find the pocket, for I had 'em sewn up by master, 'cos of the apples."

The marriage of Mdlle. Carlotta Patti, the elder sister of the renowned prima donna, with M. Ernest de Munck, has been celebrated at the Eglise de la Triuité, Paris. The families only were present.

It is rumored in Pera society that a marriage has been arranged between a very pretty and charming relative of Lady Layard's and Sir Alfred Sandison.

ON A BUTTERFLY IN BROADWAY.

With a shimmer of sun on its wonderful pinions,
Twin heds of the softest and silkiest down,
It fluttersd away from the summer's dominions
And lost itself here in the dust of the town;
No rivulet flowing, no soft zephyr blowing
Could ever have led it so widely astray—
Whencs came it, what seeks it, and where is it going?
This butterfly lost upon husy Broadway.

It hovers, it lights upon Beauty's soft bosom—
Do butterflies know that Eve's daughters are fair?—
Ah no: the attraction for it is the blossom,
Ths bunch of late violets half hidden there.
Alas, a delusion! it finds with confusion
That waxen and cold are those flowers so gay;
Poor waif; all in vaiu was thy daring intrusion,
For all is not real we meet on Broadway.

The stages roll past, and ths murmur of traffic
Goes up through the tramp of the hurrying feet,
As, poising aloft like a presence seraphic,
The butterfly, wondering, watches the street.
Will it stoop to the shadows or soar to the meadows,
Will it rest on the pavement or perch on the spray?
It flies—no, it stoops; ah, these false El Dorados
Attract our poor hutterfly back to Broadway.

'Tis lost in the throng of the comers and goers,
Its corpse may be found in tbe mud of ths streets,
But never again will the innocent flowers
Yield up to its kisses their heart's hidden sweets.
Ths cold, cruel city, with no touch of pity
Engulfs the light form as it flutters away;
'Twas graceful and innocent, lightsome and pretty,
But not the first butterfly lost on Broadway.

As bright wings as these in the dust have been trailing,
As innocent creatures have fluttered along—
Howe's faintly heard summons has been unavailing—
They soared, stooped and vanished, engulfed in ths throng.
Alas for their lightness, their beauty and brightness,
All vanished and fled ere the closs of the day—
What dust will have soiled its soft wings snowy whiteness
Ere our typical butterfly dies in Broadway. G. H. J.

ERNEST RENAN ON THE FUTURE OF MANKIND.

In his remarkable volume on "Intellectual and Moral Reform in France," Renan traces in a few lines what he considers to he the part assigned hy nature to the three great families of man in the social reconstitution of ths world. He says:

"Colonization on a grand scale is a political necessity altogether of the first order. The nation which does not colonizs is irrevocably given over to socialism, to ths war hetween rich and poor. There is nothing which shocks us in the conquest of a country helonging to a lower race hy a superior race, which takes possession in order to govern. England practices this kind of colonization in India, to the great benefit of India and of humanity in general, and to her own advantage. The Germanic conquest of the fifth and sixth centuries in Europe formed the hasis of all conservative and legitimate principles. Wars of conqnest hetween equal races ars dsserving of reprohation, hut just in ths same degree doss the regeneration of lower or hastardized races hy thoss which ars higher enter into the providential order of humanity.

Ths man of ths peopls is nearly always, among us Europeans, a nohle who has lost rank; and his heavy hand is much hstter suited to wield tbe sword than an implement of toil. Rather than work, he chooses to fight; that is, he returns to his primary condition. Ths vocation of the European is, in the words of Virgil, to rule the nations. Turn this absorbing activity toward the countries which, like China, call for subjugation hy the foreigner. Make of the adventurers who disturh society in Europe a spscial offering, so to speak, a swarm sent forth to settle, like those of the Franks, the Lomhards and the Normans; each race will then be fulfilling its proper destiny. Nature has created, in the Chinese, a race of artisans who possess wonderful manual dexterity, and are almost destitute of tbe sense of honor. Govern them with justice, exacting from them at the same time an ample recompense for the profit of the ruling race, and they will he satisfied. The negroes are especially fitted for the coarser forms of labor; hs gentle and humane toward them, and everything will fall into order, under the European, which is a race of masters and soldiers. When tbis highly endowed family is reduced to toil under the taskmaster, like the Chinese and the negro, it revolts. Every rehel against the social order among us is, more or less, a soldier who bas missed his vocation, a heing made for a heroic life, and forced to take up a work that his instinct recoils from. He is a had workman, because hs is too good a soldier. But the way of life against whicb our workmen chafe would make the happiness of a Chiness or an Egyptian fellah, heings wholly unmilitary. Let each one take the part for which he was made, and all will go well.

Political economists are mistaken when they look upou lahor as the origin of property. The origin of property was in conquest and the guarantee given hy the conqueror to the fruits of toil. In Europe the Normans were the creators of property; for the day after these strong-handed men entered upon the possession of lands, they established for themselves and for their followers a social order and a security which had not heen seen until that time."

We understand that Colonel Lucy is bringing out a second edition of his excellent manual, "The Clubs of the World." Since the publication of the first edition, scarcely a year ago, the author has received an immense quantity of additional matter from all parts of ths world, but chiefly, oddly enough, from America and the colouies. The new edition will contain about 100 additional clubs, and will, in other ways, he more exhaustive than its predecessor. As ths hook gives an epitome of all clubs where English is spoken, it is likely to bscome a permanent work of reference, provided that Colonel Lucy takes the trouhle to hring it up to date every year, as "Whitaker" does.—Whitehall Review.

VALUE OF BRITISH TRADE TO THE UNITED STATES.

By reference to statistics puhlished in another column, it will hs seen that American exports for the year 1878 to Great Britain, British North America, British West Indies and Honduras, British Guiana, Hongkong, British Possessions in Africa and adjacent islands, Australasia and British East Indies, amounted to the large total of $437,798,409, while our imports from the same places for the sams year amounted to $149,282,039, leaving a balancs of trade in our favor for 1878 of $288,516,372! In fact, the trade of Britain and her colonies is worth more to the United States than that of all the rest of the world put together, and instead of rejoicing in any misfortunes of the Mother Country it would hetter be come us to rejoice in her victories and conquests, hecause they will inurs to our profit as they inure to her glory. It may be safely said that the British Empire is now doing more to pay off our National and State dehts than we are doing ourselves. If our exports continue in the same, or nearly ths same, ratio for the next ten years, we shall he $3,000,000,000 richer from that source alone, and provided we avoid foreign and civil wars, the burdens of government will he light indeed.

The N. Y. "Evening Post" publishes some facts about oysters. It seems that the prejudice against eating oysters in months without an R in them is dying out. Mr. Boyle, of Broome street, on the East river, says that the bivalves are fatter and firmer and more fit for eating in May than at any other time of the year, because of the fresh water brought to the beds by the breaking up of the ice. Oysters brought from the Chesapeake beds are now planted near New York between the 1st of March and the 15th of May, and used during the Summer as required. These oysters will not live during the northern Winter. Mr. Boyle estimates the amount invested in the trade in New York at from eight to ten millions of dollars. The beds which supply the market are spread over the coast from Norwalk, Conn., to Norfolk, Va., the best shell-fish being those known as "Blue Points," from Great South Bay, on the south shore of Long Island. An oyster is at its prime when three years old, and dealers tell the age by the shell, a ridge being formed each year. On muddy beds the oysters grow long and narrow, and on hard or sandy bottoms they are flat and broad. More than 1,000 vessels are engaged in the trade every Winter; and within three years a great business has sprung up with Liverpool, which took 35,000 barrels last season, worth £10 a barrel. Oysters reach England in better condition than those sent to Chicago, the jolting of the cars on this latter journey killing the mollusk.

If slang, as some newspapers assert, is to be encouraged as being the best direct and exact way of expressing thought, it is evident that there will not be much left of the old English language in a few years. Never was the slang vocabulary as rich as now, and never did it thrust itself so much into everyday use. The "flash language" of the olden time hautetti was not more complete than the slang language of the present day. The man who is accustomed to thinking and expressing himself in the good old English of his fathers may not see the force of such expressions as "tumble to the racket," "what are ye givin' us?" "that's the cheese," "peel your rags," "that's ole biz," "pull down your vest," "you bet," "I'm your oyster," "dead give-away," "fire him out," "cheese your clatter," "lay fur him," "gittin' it down purty fine," "strike him for the stads," "goin' to croak," "no monkeyin'," and a thousand similar phrases; but if the tendency of the modern language is to adopt slang because of its greater "expressiveness," a new Webster will be needed before many years, and in a few centuries the student who reads English books of the present time will have to be well versed in the dead languages.—*Peoria (Ill.) The "Holyoke Manufacturer," of Holyoke (Mass.), comes to the front as a journal devoted to the 'manfacturing interests of the United States. This a handsome quarto of twenty-four pages, full of statistics about commercial and other matters, but with room to throw in that old timely collection of falsehoods about the many greatest wonders of the world to be found in America. Everybody, even in America, knows that the Mississippi is a drop in the bucket compared with the Amazon, and that the area of all our territory is but 3,500,000 square miles; yet the Holyoke Manufacturer comes up smiling with the delightful news that the Mississippi is the largest river in the world, and that its valley contains 1,000,000 square miles. Why not 10,000,000? It costs nothing to invent, and the figures look rounder.

"PLEASURE'S WAND."

"We Obey no Wand but Pleasure's."—Tom Moore.

Bush-Street Theater.—Pyramus and Thisbe, Oscar Weill's comic opera, libretto by Peter Robertson, was produced on Monday evening, and met with a favorable reception. The composer is a local musician of undoubted ability, more prominently associated with the position of a critic than with that of a composer. As the latter, his contributions have been limited to a few songs, some of which are exceedingly harmonious; as the former, he has succeeded, through the unnecessary harshness and, at times, the downright impudent brutality of his criticisms, in creating an army of enemies among the local musical fraternity. Criticism, even when it is, as in this case, of great ability, becomes valueless if it degenerates into personal abuse; and to this accusation Mr. Weil must plead guilty. This unpopularity of the composer's will explain the amount of unfavorable remarks that are being passed around as to the musical merits of Pyramus and Thisbe. For the unprejudiced mind there can be but one opinion, and that is, that Mr. Weil has proven himself by this work a talented composer of rich and sweet harmonies. Although this opera is not a production that will in any way associate its composer's name with the galaxy of opera writers, it will, without doubt, wherever produced, impress upon the auditors the fact that it is the work of a good musician. The style of the music is of a wide range, and this I consider a point of attractiveness. The melodies are at times measured and grand, and again light and frivolous. The arrangement and orchestration are elaborate, indicating a thorough knowledge of the effect and capabilities of the different instruments. It is asserted that there is nothing original in the themes, that they are all purloined from popular operas; and the foundation for these accusations are strains here and there that are reminiscent of Aida, Lucia and Barbe Bleue. The composition of music, as regards melody, is not the result of mechanical labor, but is a purely mental effort, independent of rules of any kind, these coming into force, with the accompanist, or elaboration. It is nigh unto impossible for a composer's mind to be barren of any influence, and such being the case, small similarities at times will naturally be evolved. As regards originality, I consider some of the numbers in Pyramus and Thisbe to be striking in that respect, and refer more particularly to the opening chorus, "Here comes the Caliph," the "Caliph's" song, and the soprano solo, "Love Once O'er my Heart." Perhaps the best numbers are all the quartets, particularly the one closing the second act. "This-he's" waltz is destined to become very popular. The libretto is in itself a rather clever burlesque, is full of neat points, but it requires snap and vim in the acting, and perhaps it would do to revise here and there the lines. The great defect of this opera, and one which will undoubtedly militate against success, is the total lack of adaptability existing between music and libretto. The music is of a high order, unsuited to the requirements of fun and burlesque, and the juxtaposition causes the libretto to appear tedious and flat. This unpleasant effect is enhanced by the well-known fact that in opera the words sung are never heard or listened to, and the relapse from a grand and elaborate chorus to burlesque puns is disagreeable in the extreme. If the composer desires his work to remain on the stage he should adapt his score to some stupid, worn-out story of love and treachery, with no dialogue. The cast chosen was hardly a good one, especially from a dramatic point of view, and what points in the libretto which were not squelched by the score were so by the very poor acting displayed. Miss Galton received a warm welcome and sang with all her old-time freshness and clearness. One or two of her numbers, notably the waltz, called forth a display of her faultless execution and high range of voice. Ben. Clark sang his share of the score admirably, but marred everything by his lack of knowledge of the rudiments of acting. Possessed, as this gentlemen is, with the desire of adorning the operatic stage, and gifted as he is with voice and vocal ability, he should study hard to overcome this difficulty. Miss Hammond was very acceptable, both musically and dramatically. Of Messrs. Makin and Casselli little that is favorable can be said. Their efforts did not in any way help along the favorable reception of the opera. The chorus was an excellent one, composed of good, fresh material and well drilled. The orchestra was large and tolerably efficient, although the reeds were slightly flat and out of tune. The scenic display was very fine, the several scenes being beautiful in design and excellent in work. The same can be said of the costumes. The houses during the week have been fair.

Baldwin's Theater.—It is said that Crutch and Toothpick enjoyed a huge run in London. This must have been due to superior acting, or, perhaps, to the esprit de corps of the class of habitues designated by the above title. Although it is in some respects a clever little comedy, it possesses but little intrinsic merit. It is evidently a short French farce, worked up and slightly elaborated to take advantage of the popular nick-name England's jeunesse doree has been dubbed with. The first and second acts are clever and witty; the third degenerates into the broadest kind of farce, and mars the whole. The tendency of Anglo-Saxon playwrights is to exaggerate everything, even those characters or phases of life that in themselves fringe the borders of ridicule. They can, and do, write plays that for a time remain within the bounds of probability; but before the curtain falls they are sure to have thrown possibility and plausibility to the dogs. This is strongly evidenced in Crutch and Toothpick. In the first two acts the action is a rather neat satire on the result of alliances between poor patricians and wealthy plebians, between the dainty hand of the blue-blooded aristocrat and the large paws of the shopkeeper. The last act is nothing but idiotic buffoonery. The hero, "Guy Deveraux," as acted by Mr. Sothern, must be a very amusing character. It is easy to imagine the manner in which he acts it. Mr. O'Neill's conception of the part is evidently of a different nature. He plays it as a languid swell, beneath whose indolent, effeminate ways and manners lie the traits of manliness—traits which come to the surface when the emergency occurs. To do justice to Mr. O'Neill, it must be said that he carries this idea out satisfactorily, and, as a whole, makes a very amusing impersonation. Mr. O'Neill's voice has, unfortunately, a tone suggestive of melancholy or humility, which is most apparent in persiflage or light comedy, for there it clashes with the nature of the lines and is unpleasant to the ear. But this is a defect of nature, and a matter of regret, not of blame. Miss Jeffreys Lewis plays the suspicious wife very neatly and cunningly, particularly the little scene of honeymoon abandon in the first act. As "Alderman Jones," Mr. Bradley is one of the central figures. It suffices to say that he acts it in his usual conscientious style. This gentleman can be considered a model stock actor, in so far, that however cast, he is always eminently satisfactory. Mr. H. Thompson, it is to be feared, is being advanced a little too rapidly. He is growing too self-conscious, and plays too much to the audience. Next Monday Armadale will be produced, and Byron's The Girls, the companion piece to Our Boys, is announced as being in preparation. Miss Carey has been engaged and will shortly appear, sharing with Miss Lewis the leading roles. Other changes are announced at this theater, the principal one being the departure of the great "cribbing" literary firm of Herne & Belasco. It is in order to congratulate Manager Maguire for the good riddance of this incubus.

California Theater.—The management must feel disheartened at the ill success attending its efforts to attract and please the public. That theater-goers should stay away from inferior and uninteresting performances is natural and to be expected, but that they should fail to attend first nights, and find out for themselves what is going on, is inexplicable. These remarks are suggested by the dreary appearance of the auditorium at the California on Tuesday evening. Here was a grand spectacle advertised, founded on an interesting and universally read book of fiction—something that was bound to be replete with handsome scenery and amusing acting, and not a corporal's guard of our theater-goers could be mustered for review. The verdict of the few present was such a favorable one that the size of the audiences has been rapidly increasing, though not in a degree commensurate with the merits of the performance. As regards scenery and mounting, every possible attention has been paid to the requirements of the spectacle. "The Children of Captain Grant" is one of Jules Verne's most amusing stories. In no other one of his many books is there more evidence of that peculiar talent of his, the skillful mingling of fact and fiction. The story is so well known that any reference to its plot is unnecessary. The play does not follow closely the book. A great many liberties have been taken with the author's tale, but as these changes are motived by a desire to heighten the dramatic and scenic display, they are natural and excusable. Messrs. Porter and Seahury have painted some fine scenery, of which the two tableaux representing, respectively, the Pass in the Andes and the Australian forest, are the most attractive. The play is remarkably well acted by Messrs. Hill, Welles and Cooke, and M'mes McClellan, Harold and Paullin. The latter sings a song very neatly, and, arrayed in her sailor habiliments, looks to great advantage. A surprise to all is the hit made in the eccentric character of "Paganel," the French savant, by Mr. Keene. It is an admirable piece of acting, worthy of extended notice and strong commendation. This gentleman has never, in his comparatively long connection with our stage, done anything that so proved the possession on his part of high dramatic abilities. Outside of heroic parts, in which he is effectively at home, his other work has most always called for unfavorable criticism. In this case there can be but praise extented to his efforts, for it is an excellent exhibition of character acting. The Allan sisters, four pretty children, are introduced, and dance neatly and gracefully. This production, not having met with the patronage the management was justified in expecting, it will be withdrawn after this evening. On Monday, Miss Cavendish will commence her second engagement in San Francisco, opening in "Miss Gwilt," a part in which, both in London and New York, she has met with success.

German Theater.—The performance of Hasemann's Daughters, a delightful comedy, was in the best style of the excellent company of Mrs. Fritsch. It is rare pleasure to witness acting of this nature in a play cast so that every part is done full justice to. In a case like this, any individual mention is unnecessary. The part of the daughter "Rosa," which at a former representation fell to Miss Lindemann, was played rather indifferently by Miss Walden, and this was the only weak spot in an otherwise capital performance. Miss Walden, though seemingly intelligent and conscientious, hardly possesses the necessary dramatic ability for the requirements of the parts that will be hers during the season. The most promising little actress I can ever remember seeing is undoubtedly Miss Lindemann, and the recollections of her rendition of "Rosa," last season, involuntarily came to the fore last Sunday evening. Mr. Diehl evidently excels in characters of hashful, nervous young men. For next Sunday the programme announced is Moser's new comedy, Harun Al Raschid, and the following Sunday will present to us the new soubrette, Miss Fiebach, of whom report speaks highly.

Standard Theater.—Manager Kennedy has engaged John E. Owens, who is in town, for a limited period. This well known comedian, one of the very best of the old school, one whose name will ever be associated with the American stage, will open on Monday evening, appearing as "Major Wellington De Boots," in Everybod's Friend, and as "Solon Shingle." He will be supported by a well selected company. Miss Stanhope, the pleasing and talented leading lady of the company, will be in the cast, as also Manager Kennedy himself. This will be his first appearance in two years. As a manager and actor, this gentleman has always sought to do his best to amuse the public, and it is to be hoped that he will reap public patronage this time.

Tivoli.—As predicted, the Wreck of the Pinafore has proven a popular success. Though Miss Honey can lay no claims to having composed music original or thorough to any extent, she has written the score in the range of popular appreciation. Some of the numbers are very tuneful and catchy, and please the large audiences immensely. The composer herself appears to advantage. Although not a singer of great ability, she sings correctly and with taste. Her voice is a rather pure soprano, of good range and flexibility. The piece is well cast and mounted, and, with the help of a bottle of good beer and a fragrant Havana, enables one to pass a very pleasant evening.

Vienna Gardens.—This popular place of resort has been re-opened by Messrs. Rieck & Co., who have re-fitted and renovated it with due elegance and taste. The entertainment is furnished by the Vienna Ladies' Orchestra, whose efforts to please the public are well known to all. Since the opening night the place has been crowded. The proprietors should see to it that a system of ventilation be introduced—something that is very necessary.

Chit-Chat.—Enchantment is in its fourth week at Nihlo's. Voegtlin's beautiful scenery is the town talk.——Aimée, after all her farewell appearances, will come back. She is going to raise a company of renown and play in opposition to Grau. For Paola-Marie and Capoul he has raised the prices, and Aimée will play at regular prices.——Judré will also be here next year.——Edwin Booth has no present intention of crossing the wise, as rumor would have it.—Steve Massett is still in London.—Frank Mayo is considered by the ladies in London a very handsome man.—Mme. Anna Bishop is about starting on a farewell tour around the world for the last time.—Miss Emma Thursby is shortly to be married to a gentleman in London.—Ida Vernon is accused of imitating Katherine Rogers.—Charley Thorne never looked better in his life, and his wives are marvels of art.—Haverly goes on the principle that it is as easy to manage twenty theaters as one.—New York demands cheaper prices for seats at the theaters, but it won't get them.

ART JOTTINGS.

Another farce, in the way of an art exhibition, has been brought to a close at the State Fair at Sacramento. Here the artists have their own galleries, elegantly arranged for exhibition purposes, entirely neglected, crowded of everything attractive—empty; and yet they trot off to any country Fair which promises a little in the way of premiums and still less of honor.

This latter commodity, as distributed by the committee in awards at the State Fair, is a curiosity if nothing more. The lowest award in the list is No. 1, and the highest 16; Nahl, we believe, to be among the number who figure in the first, and Thos. Hill is the only one who reaches the latter, and carries off the Society's gold medal besides.

The next highest award is No. 8 (just half Mr. Hill's, omitting the medal). Keith, Hahn, Virgil Williams, Perry, Bush, Brookes, and the portrait firm of Pebbles & Baldwin, are the recipients of this, while Kuchath and Rix figure in the fours, with Bradford, Denny and Coulter sandwiched between in the sixes.

Deakin stands No. 2. Wonder what the Paris Jury would say if they knew an artist, whose works they had admitted to the salon, stood on so low a wrung of the ladder at home.

When the official list of awards is published, it will be interesting to consider from what standpoint they were made. During the absence of the writer a large number of pictures have been placed on view—none notably good, but many very bad. Among the latter must be classed the portraits of two children in one large picture at Morris & Kennedy's, by Tojetti. It is certainly one of the most conspicuous of the many failures Tojetti has made. It is false in drawing and crude of color. The perspective, too, of the landscape accessory is very funny. The surface of the water, besides being metalic, is perpendicular, and seems fastened about the little boy's figure in a most novel manner. Another portrait, by the same artist, is that of General Grant; being a bust picture, less opportunity is afforded for a vulgar display of vicious drawing, but the coloring is as bad as it can be, and the expression one of dogged idiocy.

So far, we hear of very little preparation among the artists for a fall exhibition, except, perhaps, Hill, who is busily engaged painting from the various sketches made during his recent visit to Yosemite. So little encouragement has been given artists the past year that it is not much wonder they have lapsed into a condition of inactivity; but with the dawn of better times they should be prepared to take advantage of it by having good works to place before the public.

We always considered the employment of large canvases to paint landscapes on a mistake, and a view of Keith's "Mt. Shasta" but confirms the belief. It is an attempt to portray grand scenery better by spreading color over a few additional feet of picture. At best, a painting is but a miniature of the panorama, and any attempt to enlarge upon distant objects by this means, is necessarily a failure. It is the correct handling of the perspectives, both linear and aerial, which serves to aid the beholder in a correct estimate of nature's grandness, and not an undue spread of canvas. Of course there are subjects which necessitate the employment of huge surfaces to paint on, such as the portrayal of figures in life size; but the more it is attempted to give the grandeur of a scene like Shasta by increasing the dimensions of the painting, the greater will be the failure. A mountain, clear cut against the sky, is a most difficult subject to handle, and in attempting to render it on so large a scale, a baldness is given it not pleasant to look upon; we do but see it in nature at a distance and in miniature, and so it should be presented to our vision in a painting.

Brookes exhibits at Snow & Co.'s a bunch of apples, creditable so far as the fruit goes, but why in the world has the artist employed such a background, a sort of sour, skim-milk oil-cloth color, bad as bad can be for such a subject. Brookes, suppose you had given us some old, time-worn, orchard fence, or wall, for a background, with a limb of the tree stretching out over it and this bunch of fruit as a pendant? Do you not see your picture would have been much more artistic, and such a background would not have spoiled the rotundity of your apples, as does the one you have given us? They would not look as if they were cut in two and the half of each glued to the canvas.

Jules Tavernier is busy preparing the decorations for the Authors' Carnival. This will afford Tavernier an opportunity seldom afforded to display his great powers as an artist. It will put his inventive genius to a strict test, but those who know him best are confident that he will be found fully equal to the task imposed upon him.

Attention should be given to the very superior display of novelties in the way of frames, lately received by Snow & Co. (late Snow & May), of No. 20 Post street. In no branch of manufacture has more attention been given of late than in the production of artistic and beautiful picture frames, and the early Fall importations surpass anything heretofore seen here.

Officer Coleman found $10 on Kearny street on Saturday last, and on Thursday returned it, as he says, to the owner, a young lady. Not if the court know herself. We are not a young lady, and those $10 have made an aching void in our heart and trowsers ever since we dropped them. Officer Coleman will please come to time at this office, and no questions answered.

A gentleman called at this office, three weeks ago, in search of a poet. We told him there was only one man in the city who could not write poetry, and he was the South Sea Bard. He thanked us with tears in his eyes, and withdrew.

The Augusta Chronicle praises Grant for having parted with all his bitter feeling toward the South. Well-meant, no doubt; but when did Grant ever show any bitterness toward the South? Will the Chronicle name the date?

ON LOW LEVELS.

When deeds of heroes were the theme,
My heart in youth leaped high;
When poets sang of Love's young dream,
What dreams of love had I!

'Tis over now, the feaver-heat,
'Tis past the passion's hour;
My feet have followed all the feet,
Far 'neath the peaks that tower.

O snowy peaks, that flame with day,
Contentedly I see
Specks on you, that are men, and say—
Not those the paths for me!

This only striving—to confess
The peaks are just as bright,
Nor those who climb are heroes less,
Though I must walk in night.

BOOK NOTICES.

The "North American," for October, has its usual variety, the leader being a temperate article by Francis Parkman on the Woman Question, which the writer regards as practically the claim for Female Suffrage; and he prays that we may be delivered from this. Frederic Harrison urges the recognition of the Positive Philosophy as the scientific combination of helief, worship and discipline. O. F. Aldis lays bare some of the intrigues carried on by Napoleon III. against this country during the great war. The most interesting article is by Robert Garrett, on the "Railway Problem." The evils of the present system he declares to be summed up in the connections of the great trunk lines, the irresponsibility of a large number of them, and the lack of good faith in making agreements and in sustaining them. All of these culminate in the cut-throat policy and unprincipled dealings assuming the respectable title of competition. This involves extravagances and lack of honesty, which permeate all companies and injure the respectable corporations. The pernicious effects are seen in the large number of bankrupt roads through the country, and endless loss and disorder. The only expedient and practicable remedy lies, he concludes, in the organization of a competent and reliable pool, under a commission with final authority and with no other interest than the faithful performance of duty; and he points to the success of the west-bound trunk line pool as an indication that a general pooling of all the roads in the country is feasible. The "Diary of a Public Man" is continued, with more than a tolerable number of dashes, where names should be; an admirable precaution, since it relieves one of any desire to read what is not dashed. Prof. Youmans has an enthusiastic paper on Spencer's Philosophy, and the reviews of works on History and Biography are very well done.

THE FORTNIGHTLY, for September, opens with an article on the matter which concerns England more than Zulu or Afghan wars, the "Coming Land Question," by Mr. J. Boyd Kinnear, who puts the case pithily in these words: "Those who have an interest in improving the land have not the power, those who have the power have not the interest. The evil can he removed only by returning to the simplicity of our forefathers, by making the full property in land accompany its possession, and by prohibiting the creation of rights whose existence annuls the first right of all—the right of the people to be fed."

The other articles are: The New Psychology, German Politics, Maxims of Wisdom, The Present State of China, Two Men of Letters, The Wages-Fund Theory, Macedonia, and the Editor's Summary of Home and Foreign Affairs.

Whether Chira is to fall into the hands of Russia or to enter on a new career, it is quite certain that some of her sons take an intelligent view of her relation to the modern world, if the verses quoted in the paper on the "Present State," etc., are indeed by a Chinese. They are addressed to the missionaries:

We want no priests to help us in our need;
Priests we have, shaven and unshaven both;
We want no mumblings of an outworn creed,
But science we want and knowledge for our growth,
And rulers, brave, unselfish, wise and just,
To sweep you from the land as whirlwind sweepeth dust.

Mr. Kinnaird Rose's experiences in Macedonia revcal, if further revelation were needed, the utter rottenness of what some are pleased to call Turkish civilization; and the sooner these fair lands are handed over to Austria, or to any other real government, the better.

Though it seems to be like talking to the east wind, one cannot help protesting against the latest and, it should seem, the final possible outrage in the line what Congressmen have called the moral elevation of the people by the cheapening of good literature. Mr. George Munro, a New York publisher, regularly issues reprints, in 4to form, of the Fortnightly and the Contemporary (and, it may be, of other magazines), and puts them on the market at twenty cents a number. Thus far there is nothing new, for the Harpers and their disciples did and daily do as much; but Mr. Munro is an original thinker, and follows whither logic leads him. Each copy of his plundered magazines bears on its face this sublimely impudent notice: "Copyrighted 1879, by George Munro."

THE AMERICAN BOOK EXCHANGE, 55 Beekman street, New York, has begun the issue of a series of choice biographies, each in a compact pocket volume of two or three hundred pages, neatly printed, at the low price of thirty-five cents. As an effort in the diffusion of good literature, this enterprise should meet with hearty encouragement. Why should any one read poor books when, for a trifle, he can have Carlyle's "Burns," Lamartine's "Mary Stuart," Arnold's "Hannibal," and other such imperishable works? Supplementary to this is the publication, in similar shape, of "Foreign Gleanings," composed of recent able articles from European reviews, and offered at thirty cents the volume, of seventy pages. Number 1 contains Gladstone's and Lecky's papers on the Evangelical Movement, and Von Schulte's study of the Religious Condition of Germany.

LITERARY ITEM.—Messrs. Lee & Shepard will immediately publish Jules Verne's new book, "The Tribulations of a Chinaman in China," which has just appeared in Paris. The book is intensely interesting and amusing, and many of the popular features of the day, such as the Phonograph, Captain Boyton in his Rubber Suit, Life Insurance Companies, Banking Speculations, Advertising Schemes, and various other eccentricities of the times, are woven into the narrative.

REST.

My feet are weari-l an l my hands are tired—
My soul oppressed
And with desire have I long desired
Rest—only rest.
'Tis hard to toil—when toil is almost vain—
In barren ways;
'Tis hard to sow and never garner grain
In harvest days.
The burden of my days is hard to bear—
But God knows best;
And I have prayed, but vain has been my prayer,
For rest—sweet rest.
'Tis hard to plant in spring and never reap
The autumn yield;
'Tis hard to till—and when 'tis tilled to weep
O'er fruitless field.
And so I cry a weak and human cry,
My heart oppressed;
And so I sigh a weak and human sigh
For rest—for rest.

A MANUAL OF SHOPPING.

Years ago a large New York retail house resolved to put in print such a description of tbeir establishment as should enable every one reading it to select goods as satisfactorily as though personally present in the metropolis. With this lending idea for its guide, Ehrich's Fashion Quarterly was inaugurated, and the steady increase of the circulatiou of tbe magazine shows how perfect is the public appreciation of its usefulness. The number for fall, 1879, is a complete epitome of fashion for tbe coming season. Combining the essential features of n catalogue, a price current and an ordiuary fashion magazine, the Fashion Quarterly enables its readers to see at a glance what styles and fabrics are most in vogue, and at what prices they can be obtained. Its illustrations are faithful reuderings of actual costumes, executed by artists and engravers of acknowledged merit; its descriptions are clear and copious, and its quotations of prices are full, precise and admirably classified. For ladies who may desire to order their goods from New York, this magazine is of the highest utility, and those who prefer to do their shopping at home will find it no less useful as a guide to styles and prices. It is, in brief, a complete manual of shopping, and, as such, deservedly occupies a high rauk in periodical literature.

Published by Ebrich & Co., 287 to 295 Eighth avenue, New York, at fifty cents a year, or fifteen cents a single number.—N. Y. People.

NEW RULES OF THE ROAD AT SEA.

These rules, which come into operation on September 1, 1880, apply not only to British ships, hut also to the royal and commercial navies of Austria-Hungary, Belgium, Chili, Denmark, France, Germany, Greece, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Russia, Spain, Sweden, and tbe United States, whether within British jurisdiction or not. The rules contain an entirely new article, viz., Art. 5, designed to meet the case of ships not under command, such as vessels laying telegraph cables, vessels to which accidents have happened. The following is the new rule: "Art. 5—A ship, whether a steamship or a sailing ship, when employed either in laying or in picking up a telegraph cable, or which from any accident is not under command, shall at night carry in the same position as the white light which steamships are required to carry, and, if a steamship, in place of that light, three red lights in globular lanterns, each not less than 10in. in diameter, in a vertical liue one over the other, not less than 3ft. apart, in front of hut not lower tban her foremast head, three hlack balls or shapes, each 2ft. in diameter. These shapes and lights are to he taken hy approaching ships as signals that the ship using them is not under command, and cannot, therefore, get out of the way. The above ships, when not making any way through the water, shall not carry the side lights, hut when making way shall carry them."

A PROJECTED ARTIFICIAL SEA IN AMERICA.

A project, similar to the schemes for admitting the waters of the Atlantic and of the Mediterranean into the north-western part of Africa, has been set on foot in the United States by Gen. Fremont, the Governor of the State of Arizona, who suggests the formation of a short canal to let the waters of the Pacific Ocean into a large low-lying area between that State and Southern California. This district, which is extremely arid, and practically desert, is believed to have heen an ancient sea-hed; it is estimated to be as much as 300 feet helow the level of the Pacific, and measures 200 miles in length by 50 miles in breadth. Its western side is only 45 miles distant from the Gulf of California, nnd it is proposed to cut a canal through this harrier and admit the waters of the ocean into the hasin. Half-way there exists a lake, about 20 miles long, the presence of which would reduce the length of the artificial cut to 25 miles. The cost of the work is estimated at £200,000. It is believed that the scheme could be completed in six months. Such a work would undoubtedly be of great importance to the South-Western States of the Union, and would prohably not be without beneficial results on the climate of the region.—London Court Journal.

Sir Louis Cavaguari was one of those few men created by Nature to make their mark in the world's history. Utterly un-English in his aspect, his mauner, his style of thought, and his character of action, he recalled the continental diplomatists of the moyen age. It has hecn generally assumed at Peshawur for years hack that it was only a question of time wben Cavaguari should he assassinated, as had been Mackeson, Macdonald, and so many others who had been his predecessors in the perilous fascinating career of frontier management. A slight man, of rather feehle physique, but with an eye like a two-edged sword, he never carried arms, differing in this from John Nicolson, who nlways had a pistol on his writing-table; and when, at an interview, a hillman or an Afghan waxed truculent, took care to secure the first trick in the game.

QUININE.

A question of interest to all is how to secure an ample supply of quinine for the fever patients of the future, among whom we, and all of us, may be brought to class ourselves. Recent explorers in South America speak discouragingly of the prospects. It seems, according to Mr. Henry S. Welcome, that the cinchona tree is being exterminated. Mr. Welcome, who has long been connected with the great drug and chemical house of McKesson & Robbins, New York, has lately visited, for business purposes, the forests of this tree in Ecuador, Sacramento and Guaranda. These furnish tbe high-grade bark knewn as the Loxa. The tree grows to the hight of sixty or seventy feet, and the present aspect of the forests is described as follows:

"The old and famous Peruvian-bark forests are entirely extinct. To get the bark a tree is cut down to within a foot of the ground, and even the root is dug up. This entirely extirpates the tree. To supply this loss, new forests have appeared, but they are of limited extent. The cultivation of the bark might be made to pay if anybody would put money into it, and went into the trade with North American energy."

When trees are found they are felled in tho proper season, between the 1st of August and the beginning of November, and stripped of the bark, which is then piled up to dry. Once dried it is packed in hales and carried sometimes 700 miles to a seaport. Here it is assorted into the bark of the root, tbat of the trunk, limbs, branches and twigs. The highest grade is the quill bark from young trees. Mr. Welcome says that no effort is made to supply tho place of the trees destroyed. The cutters number about 20,000, who earn from five to tweney-five cents a day each; the bark ranging in value from ten cents to $1 50 a pound. An old tree will furnish from 50 to 125 pounds of bark, a troo ten years old will yield only four or five pounds, a six-year old trec only two or three pouuds. These young trees are uot cut for bark. Looking at the success of the English plantations in India, it would seem as if something might be done in South America, as Mr. Welcome has suggested.

THE EUROPEAN LABORER.

Judging by the recent American Consular reports, the condition of the European laboring classes appears to be steadily deteriorating year by year, and the struggle for subsistence becomes more onerous, corresponding with the increase and density of population and the comparative natural wealth and development of the country. It is to be regretted that a broader scope was not given to these investigations and facts elicited as to the effect of machinery in elevating or degrading the operatives. It is now held by the most advanced thinkers in this country and Europe that in the course of another decade or two the progress of invention will necessitate the limitation by the governments of the number of machines and the hours of labor. But such a radical remedy will never be applied without a searching investigation under the auspices of an international commission.

It will not do, however, to place too much reliance upon these Consular reports, because, however scrupulous our Agents were in making them, one most important factor is omitted, to wit: the average number of days during the year in which the operatives were employed. We have noticed that, in the reports of the Bureau of Statistics for the United States, there is a similar omission. In those reports California is credited with paying the highest rate of wages of any of the States, but, to one who knows the depressed state of the labor market here for several years back, some natural inferences arise. For instance, the mechanic who earns $3 per day, and is only employed 200 days in the year—a generous estimate, both in time and money—earns but $600 per annum instead of $900, which we permit outsiders to assume, in order to attract immigration.

So it may be with the European laborer, to a certain extent, but, considering the low average of wages given, especially for Germany, we are of opinion that employment in the old countries is much more steady than here, although, even at the highest rate, it affords no margin for luxuries or waste. Bismarck's recent protective enactments will further add to the miseries of the industrial classes, by the heavy tariffs laid on breadstuffs, provisions, petroleum, etc. The effect will be to cause the emigration of large numbers of the industrial classes, especially young, vigorous men, and such men of family as are able to defray the expenses. In England and France better times may be looked for, if the world's commercial depression abates, as now appears probable in the near future. With America's capacity to feed and clothe her people, and with the immense virgin territories and resources yet remaining to be developed, it will be the fault of our laboring classes if their future does not excel reasonable anticipations. By exercising restraint, and refraining from attempts to strangle the "good times" in their incipiency by strikes, they will ultimately reap untold benefits.

A SHAMEFUL BUSINESS.

When Gen. Grant was expected home from China, all the little great men began to plume their feathers and practice swelling and the martial strut, to be ready for parading themselves as admirers of the great soldier, and adorers of their own beautiful persons. There's no great harm in such people, for the most part. They fret and fume and look big and astonish the waiters with their assumption of dignity, but they hurt nobody, for the simple reason that out of nothing nothing comes. The breeze passes, and the dancing straws settle down again in the dust. In some instances, however, these nobodies are able to annoy their betters; and the ridiculous uproar of last Monday was at once an annoyance, a humiliation, and an outrage on common sense and decency. Some members of the Board of Education, itching to display themselves in the public eye, abused their accidental authority to interrupt the exercises of the public schools, and compel teachers and pupils to march in procession through the streets for distances varying from a half-mile to five miles, under the pretense of gratifying the children with a sight of the hero. The performance was equally silly and heartless. At least half of these children were between six and ten years old; the weather was hot, as always at this season; the hour named for the reception at Woodward's Garden was 11 A.M., but Gen. Grant did not arrive till near mid-day, and the footsore multitude was kept on the ground until half-past one without food and almost without drink. President Hiester, of the Board of Education, and Superintendent Mann were, however, in their glory, for Grant was crucified between them. The statistics of the schools are compiled with great care, if we are to believe the published yearly reports; but there will be no report next year of the number of children made sick by this spontaneous tribute under positive orders. If Gen. Grant had wished to see the schools, and the children were to be gratified by the sight of him, the natural, easy, dignified way of bringing the parties face to face was to furnish Gen. Grant with a carriage, drive him from school to school, and let him pass through each as briefly as he himself wished; and we should not then have had to look back on Grant's visit to our city as the occasion of the most humiliating, because the most uncalled-for, abuse of authority on the part of the incompetent men, whose day in the School Department is fortunately nearly over.

WHEAT AND FREIGHTS.

With the advance in Liverpool quotations for wheat, freights to the United Kingdom have also jumped to £2 15@£3, and we doubt whether any charters at lower rates than 55 shillings will be effected during the remainder of the season, unless prices for grain very materially recede. It is only fair that ship-owners should participate in the profits, as the freights ruling for a long time past have been unremunerative. This question of freights is one of John Bull's many advantages from a free trade policy. What he loses in one direction is made up in another. If it were not for our insane shipping laws, Californians would soon own their own grain fleet. Some apprehension is felt by millers lest an unusual European demand will so deplete our stocks of wheat as to leave them comparatively bare of supplies next spring and raise the prices of flour proportionately. From a long acquaintance with British commercial policy in such emergencies, we are of opinion that our friends in Liverpool desire to hasten forward supplies before winter, and so place themselves beyond contingencies. At the same time, there is an enormous continental deficiency, and the present outlook favors remunerative prices to our farmers. They should realize without delay, so as to cancel heavy interest-bearing obligations; and from the way grain is now coming forward, we believe they will.

About now look for rain; and, while you are about it, look for the umbrella you loaned somebody or other.

DOLCINO TO MARGARET.

The world goes up and the world goes down,
And the sunshine follows the rain;
And yesterday's sneer, and yesterday's frown,
Can never come over again,
Sweet wife,
Can never come over again.

For woman is warm, though man may be cold,
And night will hallow the day;
Till the heart which at even was weary and old
Can rise in the morning gay,
Sweet wife,
To its work in the morning gay.

NAPOLEON III. AND THE SOUTH.

The diplomatic correspondence of the Confederacy with its Commissioners in Europe reveals the fact that the Emperor of the French would have recognized the Confederate States but for the refusal of England to go along with him. Mr. O. F. Aldis, in the October North American, analyzes this correspondence. He shows that in May, 1861, the Duc de Morny told Mr. Rost that the South would soon be recognized; and when Mr. Slidell arrived in Paris he found that the Emperor wholly favored the South, and even after the fall of New Orleans M. Billault declared that if the Confederates obtained successes in Virginia and Tennessee, or could hold their enemy at bay for a month or two, their government would be acknowledged. The Emperor received Mr. Slidell several times, asked why the South had not created a navy, and thought that ships might be built for them in France, as if for the Italian Government. His Majesty went further by assuring M. Arman, a French shipbuilder, that there should be no difficulty in arming war-steamers for the Confederacy. Appealed to personally by Mr. Slidell, the Emperor said the ships might be built, but their destination would have to be concealed. After this came Napoleon's reported interview with Messrs. Roebuck and Lindsay at Fontainebleau, which stirred up such an angry debate in Parliament. Mr. Slidell's dispatches confirm the statements made by Mr. Roebuck as to Napoleon's positive declaration that he was ready to join with England in recognizing the Southern Confederacy.

This was in June, 1863. In January, 1864, the corvettes under construction at Bordeaux and Nantes were seized by the French authorities on the application of the American Minister, who had been supplied with the proofs of their destination. Mr. Slidell wrote to Mr. Benjamin that the "contract for the corvettes was concluded only after the official consent to their armament and sailing was given by the Minister of Marine," and that this consent was reluctantly given by him in obedience to superior authority. The English-built privateer Rappahannock, detained in France, was to be set free, Mr. Slidell writes, under the following line of the Emperor's own writing, shown him by M. Persigny:

"My Dear Persigny: I have given orders that the Rappahannock may leave the ports of France; but the American Minister must know nothing of it.

"Napoleon."

Mr. Aldis closes his analysis by doing full justice to the ability, discretion and fairness of the much-abused Palmerston-Russell cabinet.

ELECTRIC LIGHT.

The Cost of Lighting an Eight-room House by Electricity.—The proprietor of this paper has for many years taken a live interest in the experiments which have from time to time been made public, attempting to solve the all-important question of lighting, not alone cities (a solution now happily rendered almost perfect, as any one may see for himself any night at the Palace Hotel, in this city, and which in its present quasi-perfect condition only needs to be employed in lighting the streets to supersede gas and confer an everlasting boon on the citizens), but to the most important of all applications—the lighting of shops, stores and private dwellings. Recalled to these latter considerations by considering the notice of the invention by Messrs. Molero & Cebrain, which appears in another column. We think the time has now arrived when the public should be informed at what price per week or month, say, a grocery store or a house of eight rooms on two floors could be satisfactorily lighted, and the lighting guaranteed. Those who are interested in this important question, now occupying so much of the public mind all over the world, and who feel competent to grapple with the details, will confer a favor on us by sending to the office of the News Letter, Merchant street, city, any correspondence upon it. The columns are open, and will be kept so, for the fullest discussion.

SILVER AT PAR.

For the first time in several years silver coin has touched par with gold, and the brokers are now selling at par, and buying at one-quarter per cent. discount. The judgment of Hon. J. P. Jones and his able confreres in Congress has thus at length been vindicated; and while yet much remains to be done to fortify the position achieved, we believe the majority of our Senators and Representatives will not hesitate to do their duty, by ensuring the requisite legislation at the ensuing session in December. It is a matter of great satisfaction to the News Letter that it was the first journal on the Pacific coast to begin the fight for remonetization, and for five years and more we have consistently "kept up our lick," until victory has resulted. To jobbers, retailers, mechanics, and the community in general, the restoration of this metal to its rightful place as a circulating medium is of immense benefit. Heretofore they have been compelled to submit to a shave of from two to ten per cent., which profited nobody but the money brokers. It is, indeed, something also to our miners to save five or more per cent. upon the bullion production of from twenty to forty million dollars annually put out by our mines. We shall hereafter refer to the legislation necessary to place silver on an exact equality with gold.

A Mare's Nest.—Those wonderful six millions of U. S. bonds, just found in Washington to the credit of the Hopkins estate, have a most ancient and fish-like smell. The News Letter published the reported facts at least sixty days ago. The story has travelled East, as News Letter stories will, and now comes back as startling news. On the arrival of the English and Continental mails we shall look for it, with variations in French and German; and later for the echo of the same stunning report from the Himalayas.

THE TOWN CRIER.

"Hear the Crier!" "What the devil art thou?
"One that will play the devil, sir, with you."

"He'd a sting in his tail as long as a flail,
Which made him grow bolder and bolder."

The sleuth-hounds of the Press have dogged Ulysses with tolerable pertinacity since his arrival here. They have told about all the girls he kissed; how his boots are polished every day by George Madison Jefferson Brown, the eminent African shiner of the Palace Hotel; how the ladies at that institution begged the privilege of being allowed to starch his three best shirts and mangle his ex-Excellency's six reliable stand up collars. But there is one little incident which has not been related, and which only wants to be known to set all the poets in the United States, from Whittier down to the South Sea Bard, at their wit's ends weaving the lovely story into melodious verses. It will be remembered that an eminent citizen breakfasted the General last week at the Cliff gave him a genuine square meal; none of your three dishes for a quarter, but solid twelve-and-a-half-cent viands. Well, just before sitting down to the first course, which consisted of pork and beans, Mayor Bryant noticed that General Grant's back was somewhat dusty after the drive. With admirable forethought he seized a brush and a scraper, which were contiguous, so to speak, on the adjoining mantelpiece, and commenced to groom the hero of Appomattox. "Go gently, Andy," cried the General, "that coat's got to last me another six months, and cost two pound twelve and six at Wales' tailor in London." But the brawny arms of the head of our municipal government were not to be denied. Up and down the great man's back they swept like steam engines, till nature cried hold! enough; and the Mayor sat down on the sofa, reeking with perspiration. All that remained of the General's garment was a few incoherent threads, struggling for connection, down his manly back. The baseless fabric of shoddy Manchester cotton had disappeared under the operation, and General Grant had to borrow a duster from the proprietor to cover up the unfortunate state of affairs from the thousands of eyes, eager to catch a glance of him on his return home. With touching devotion to the chief, however, Mayor Bryant on the same day bought an elegant twenty-dollar suit from a Kearny street clothing store, and had it sent to the General's rooms. They fitted him perfectly, and except for being a little shop-worn, owing to exposure in the window, were as good as new. Mrs. G. thinks she can make a vest or something ont of what is left of the destroyed garment. but she may change her mind and present it to the Home of the Inebriates. As for the Mayor, he keeps the brush under a glass case in his library, and intends handing it down to posterity as a precious relic of the saviour of our country.

The conversion of the Jews in Poland is going on very satisfactorily at latest dates. It always does. Near Posen, a Jew named Levy nearly starved to death, on account of the prejudice existing in the village against his religion, so, yielding to the miseries of leanness and the cravings of his stomach, he abjured "Yom Kippur," "Rosh Hoshono," "Tuccoth," and "Lai Succoth Town Tikosaiwu," went to confession to a priest, was baptized Ignatius Pius and became a devout attendant at Mass. Business prospered, and, as they say on the Comstock, he struck a big lead, waxed fat and prospered. But one Friday there was an unmistakable smell of beefsteak issuing from his domicile, and the villagers rushed en masse to the Padre, aghast with the news. His reverence ran down, speechless with horror, and found Mr. Ignatius Pius Levy walking into the affections of a large tenderloin at a healthy, five-mile gait. "Is it possible," he cried "that you, who are so sincere a convert, so devout a Catholic, are eating meat on Friday?" "No," replied Mr. Levy stolidly, without interrupting his meal, "it certainly is not possible. I wouldn't do it for all the money in the world." "Are you crazy, that you lie so infamously before my eyes?" shrieked the Padre. "Certainly not," retorted the Jew, as he swallowed the last mouthful, wiped his mouth, and lay back in his chair. "I am not eating meat! My name was Levy, the Jew, and you poured a little water on me and changed me to Ignatius Pius, the Christian. This used to be a beefsteak, but I sprinkled it with holy water before I cooked it, and changed it into the finest salt codfish I ever ate." He was absolved.

On dit, that the next use to which the Pavilion is to be put is for a six days' wood-sawing match for the championship of the Pacific Coast and several money prizes. Two forests are being cut down up in Puget Sound to supply the material, and the arrangements are all in the hands of an ex City Hall contractor, which insures perfect management, disinterestedness and honesty of purpose. A novel feature (and nothing succeeds without a novel feature), will be a long distance piano match, to go on at the same time, for which there are several entries. The contestants will play any kind of music which suits them– go as you please melodies, in fact—and each ivory thumper will have two trainers and a nurse to rub his hands and keep the swelling down. The man who keeps on the keyboard longest and makes the greatest number of miles of discord will be presented with a gold plated jews-harp and a thousand dollars, half of which will be deducted for entrance fee and half retained as security for the jews-harp. As Martin Tupper remarks somewhere:

"The world goes on and advances, science and pleasure are one,
An oyster is not a trombone, in misery lays our fun."

It was on the overland train. He was introduced to her at Ogden. She was lovely, with the most bewitching smile and dark brown eyes, that, when they gave a side-long glance, caused his heart to go pit-a-pat after the most approved fashion. He was all devotion; her slightest wish received instant attention; he was envied by his companions, and considered a lucky man. But oh! what a revolution, when conductors were changed at Wells Station! Hopkins gave her away; told who and what she was, and how she had behaved on a previous trip. The dream was dispelled, and he, the lucky man, wilted, confessed himself sold, and vowed never again to trust to appearances and believe in a woman with a cold in her head and a fever blister on her upper-lip.

The last victim of the blonde Don Juan is the daughter of a well-known lumber dealer. Papa is after the gay and festive Lothario. He has a marriage license in one hand and a double-barreled shotgun in the other, and, at the present time, is uncertain which to use. He don't want the relationship, and dislikes to scatter the fellow's brains; but as he is determined upon one course or the other, and that immediately, we can only say: Please take notice.

Being received by thirty thousand school children, and deluged with the same number of bouquets at one time, reads very well on paper, but you ought to hear what Grant says about it. Sitting in the back office last week, whittling our best ebony ruler and smoking four cigars an hour, he said: "I was kinder skeered (this is just the way he talks) when them all-fired little cusses stood up with their durned flowers. Not skeered of the girls particler, becoz they throw light as a rule, but there wuz thousands of yure dedrotted boys with bunches of flowers as must have had marbles in 'em. When the opening shower came I jammed my hat on tight and wuz sorry as it were new; but the fust sunflower that hit me on the mouth knocked the reception smile clean out of me. It wuz worse than Shiloh. As I saw the second volley coming, all dead center shots, I jes closed my eyes, don't you make any mistake, and bowed my head in silent prayer. I got one on the left ear that was either a ginger-cake four weeks old or a box-wood top; but I durs'n't budge. At last I was told they'd fired everything and hadn't any more ammunition, and I opened my left eye slowly and cleaned the rosebuds out of my collar. I'll eat all the dinners as ever was given," added the General slowly, "and shake agin any man in the States—that is hands—but no more flowers in mine, not if I know myself."

The "Morning Call," last Tuesday, published the following: "A citizen informs us that he caught from his own water pipes on Saturday no less than twelve well-formed leeches. What would be the effect, if a few of these leeches were taken into the human stomach, may well be imagined. It is thought that most of the leeches which are found in the water furnished to our people for drinking purposes are pumped into the distributing pipes from Lake Merced." Feeling a deep concern for the welfare of the human stomach, we addressed circulars at once to several distinguished citizens, asking if they had ever swallowed leeches, and if so, what they thought about Lake Merced. The only answer yet received we subjoin:

ED. NEWS LETTER:—Yes, indeed, frequently; and, between you and me, it's jolly good fun. The leeches always cry out for mercy when I get them down, and this is the origin of the allusion to Lake Merced in one of my two papers, both daily. Are you really green enough to believe in Yours truly? L. PICKING.

The Brooklyn Eagle, well known as the most powerful journal in the country, and the only one perfectly acquainted with the inner life of European society, announces that in a few months Victoria C. Woodhull and Tennie C. Claflin are to be married to members of the English aristocracy. There can be no doubt of the fact—the Eagle never is at fault in its facts—but the native delicacy of the editor has led him to veil the startling truth under the vague term "aristocracy." We are not held to the same high responsibility, and make haste, therefore, to name the parties. These are none other than the Prince of Wales and the Duke of Edinburgh, who will divorce their present wives in order to unite themselves with the "persoually magnetic" ladies from Wall street. There will be despair in Denmark and in Russia when the truth is known, but who can resist love and the Brooklyn Eagle?

The curse of California—and our readers will at once understand that we refer to Denis Kearney—after threatening to burn Gen. Grant in effigy on his loathsome Sand-lot, actually called on him four separate times, sent up—what he never ought to have—a card, one of the outward and visible signs of a gentleman, and hung round the Palace Hotel for hours in the vain hope of seeing him. Gen. Grant has shaken thousands of honest American workingmen by the hand since he came here—men who black their own boots and shave their own chins, and who would never have occasion to say, as the mendicant agitator did on Sunday, that he spent the only two-bit piece he had in getting shaved and having his boots blacked, in order to call on Gen. Grant. If Denis wants to be a workingman, let him first learn to black his own boots.

The revival of the heathen ceremony of swearing Chinese witnesses, by cutting off a cock's head, is strongly suspected to be a deeply constructed plot on the part of the presiding magistrate. When that worthy has a dinner party nowadays, all he has to do is to send the bailiff out, and buy a couple of tender chickens, arrest a brace of Chinamen for violation of the Cubic Air ordinance, and the piece de resistance—a phrase which should only apply to tough roosters—is at once supplied for the feast. "Chicken-fed officials" will probably be the next addition to the little drayman's slang dictionary.

The Indian, Salvador, who was wafted into the realms of bliss on Thursday at the end of a somewhat stout cord, died full of penitence and broiled chicken. His ghostly advisers have no doubt of his perfect repentence, and considering that he had only committed six murders that can be proven, and denies all the others he is accused of, there can be no doubt that he is now resting happily in the arms of St. Peter, or taking a bath composed of happy angels' tears. There are a few people wicked enough to believe that he may possibly be in the eternal tropics, but, as the scripture says, "What are they among so many?"

President Eliot, of Harvard University, is said (by Mr. Taylor) to have told Jno. W. Taylor last spring that the boys from the San Francisco High Scool were better prepared than any others who applied for admission to Harvard. Interesting, if true; but President Eliot is not given to that kind of talk, and Mr. Taylor never loses a chance for puffing himself. Did not President Eliot also say that he thought the San Francisco Board of Education the most learned, the most high-minded, the most delicate and courteous, the most modest he had ever heard of?

Ever since that little trifle of over five millions, accidentally forgotten in the Hopkins estate, turned up, we have been examining our old vests and things under the firm conviction that we have absent-mindedly at odd times left a few hundred thousand coupons, bonds, and such trifles in the pockets. There has nothing turned up so far except a ticket, bearing interest at four per cent., for the family watch, redeemable in——well, you know how it is yourself.

The "Call" on Thursday, in an editorial, finds it necessary to explain that the Fortnightly Review is an English magazine. If Mr. Pickering's editorials were compiled and published, California could boast of having issued the most complete infant's primer ever given to the world.

A Chinaman has been arrested with four stolen eight-day clocks in his possession. This upsets another old proverb and shows that procrastination is not the only thief of time.

Baptist ministers have decided to admit reporters to the meetings of the conference. Each reporter will have his own special tub, with hot and cold water faucets.

NOTABILIA.

THE PEDDLER'S SONG.

Lawn as white as driven snow;
Cypress black as e'er was crow;
Gloves as sweet as damask roses;
Masks for faces and for noses;
Bugle-bracelet, necklace, amber;
Perfume for a lady's chamber;
Gold quoifs and stomachers,
For my lads to give their dears;
Pins and poking-sticks of steel,
What maids lack from head to heel:
Come buy of me, come; come buy, come buy,
Buy, lads, or else your lasses cry.

WILLIAM SHAKSPEARE.

Forged bank notes can be readily distinguished from the genuine by the fact that the impression of the engraving can be seen on the back if the spurious note is turned over. This is an item worth remembering, now that the whole world is thrown open to these makers of false money; and it naturally suggests to the mind the unfailing distinction between a genuine and a Brummagem gentleman. The real gentleman takes his breakfast and lunch at that best of all family restaurants, the Original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter street, while the spurious article is never to be met there.

It has been a very wet year in Europe generally, and particularly in the British Islands, but the famous pear-tree in Merrion Square, Dublin, is covered with fruit which is fast ripening. At the same time there is an alarming increase in coughs and colds, and the attention of the medical men is naturally turned to California, which is now attracting the notice of all; and the reputation of F. & P. J. Cassiu's cordial of Old Rye Whisky and Pure Rock Candy as a cure for every complaint of lungs and throat, is daily increasing among them.

Now that women can plead in the United States courts and vote on the school committee, perhaps they may gradually acquire the knowledge that a woman has a right to but one seat in a railway car.—Boston Com. Bulletin.

There has been a great deal of complaint of hard times and dullness in business for many months; but it has been noticed that a growing band of resolute and bright-eyed men took no share in the lamentation, but went serenely on their way. Inquiry developed the simple fact that these superior men purchased their underwear and neck-gear at Carmany & Crosett's, 25 Kearny street, at surprisingly low prices and of the richest quality. The rumor of dull times decreases hourly.

A French paper lately advertised a grand prize for the man who had the oddest fancy to gratify, supposing he became suddenly rich. One aspirant said he would take 1,000 partridges, 1,000 turkeys, 1,000 beefsteaks, etc., and make a rich paste to fatten Sara Bernhardt with. His claim was promptly rejected, because the intelligent newspaper man knew that with one of Montonya's Union Ranges to cook her dinner, the great Sara could not fail to grow fat.

Nearly all the poets have sufficient fancy, but many of them sadly need to ballast with a good strong body of thought.—Modern Argo.

One of the remarkable inventions of the day is the material called celluloid, a composition of fine tissue paper and camphor, like a transparent gum in appearance, and very elastic. This article takes the place of ivory, tortoise shell, porcelain, leather, linen and paper. Invention is always at work, but no ingenuity will ever enable men to dispense with the photographs of Bradley & Rulofson, which must be had, so long as love and friendship hold their ground.

The greatest rock-salt station in the world, unless it be Wieliczka, is in the Russian government of Orenburg. The vein is nearly a mile and a quarter in length, and the salt is perfectly pure, the quantity in sight being estimated at 950,000,000 tons. A far finer sight than this, however, is a Christian gentleman, with one of White's hats, from 614 Commercial street.

It is the poet who hankers most for rest that never thinks of giving any one else a taste of it.

If your throat feels sore or uncomfortable, use promptly Dr. Jayne's Expectorant. It will relieve the air-passages of phlegm or mucous, allay inflammation, and so give the affected parts a chance to heal. No safer remedy can be had for all Coughs and Colds, or any complaint of the Throat or Lungs, and a brief trial will prove its efficacy. Sold by Crane & Brigham, San Francisco.

A French gentleman, thoroughly acquainted with the wine-manufacture, has lately made a report on American, and especially Californian, wines. He declares, with great justice, that the chief cause of the roughness and harsh taste of many American wines is the nature of the soil, as yet comparatively untilled; but he necessarily exempts from this charge of roughness Landsberger's Private Cuvée, to which he gives the greatest credit as a pure, excellently handled sparkling wine.

Among the many industries of our coast, the glass manufacture has received a wonderful impetus the past year, through the growing demand for bottles for the Napa Soda trade. This delicious beverage is the best tonic for the system at this season.

FOREIGNERS AND THE FOREIGN TRADE IN CHINA.

In the "Fortnightly Review" for September, among other important articles, there is one on "The Present State of China," by Mr. Herbert Giles, which, though not very commendable in its literary form and style, nevertheless contains recent statistics of considerable interest. The following table gives the numbers of foreigners residing at the treaty ports of China, exclusive of Hongkong, which is British :

NATIONALITY.	Number of Firms.	Number of Residents.
British	220	1,953
American	35	420
German	49	384
French	9	224
Spanish	1	163
Russian	17	55
Danish	2	69
Dutch	1	24
Austrian	1	38
Swedish and Norwegian	1	35
Italian	.....	17
Belgian	.....	10
Japanese	9	81
Non-Treaty Powers	6	341
Total	351	3,814

We think that few of our readers will he prepared for such a small total of residents at the treaty ports as these figures show, and this enumeration helps us to get rid of exaggerated ideas on the subject.

The total foreign trade for 1878 at all the treaty ports was distributed as follows :

	IMPORTS FROM. Taels.	EXPORTS TO. Taels.	TOTAL. Taels.
Great Britain, including Hongkong	42,396,351	42,588,944	84,985,295
India	21,077.099	374,251	21,451.350
Continent of Europe	826 128	8,461,304	9,287,432
United States	2,253,148	6,576,125	8,829,273

The chief imports were: Opium, to the value of taels 32,262,957, against taels 30,237,712 in 1877 ; cotton goods, taels 16,029,231, against taels 18,-800,232, and woolen goods, taels 4,875,594, being a slight improvement on the total for 1877.

The chief exports were : Tea, valued at taels 32,013,184, against taels 33,332,387 in 1877, and silk, taels 25,126,204, these two accounting for taels 57,000,000 of the total exports of taels 67,000,000.

The shipping engaged in this trade amounted in 1878 to 13,446,394 tons, against 11,983,591 in 1877.

The total customs revenue at the treaty ports amounted in 1878 to taels 12,483,988, of which England contributed taels 8,469,704, Chinese merchants availing themselves of the foreign custom house taels 1,927,929, and the United States taels 281,234.

In Berlin there is a chemical laboratory, established hy a society of housewives, for the examination of articles of food. It is directed hy a competent chemist, who gives to the members of the society a course of lectures on practical chemistry. There is also a cookery-school under the patronage of the society. Domestic servants who have remained a certain number of years in one household (of a member of the society) are rewarded with prizes. The society also procures situations for domestic servants.

No, Janet ; it is not customary to climb trees in order to gather Fall leaves, but it is easier and more economical than felling the tree, because you can't fell a tree with a sewing machine.

LONDON ENCLOSURES TO THE S. F. NEWS LETTER.

The political supremacy of the "Native" question is revealed in the fact that in Zululand there is an estimated population of 2,000,000. In the Transvaal the native population may be roughly put down at 1,000,-000, against a white population of some 40,000. In Natal we find the natives number 350,000, and the whites only 20,000. In Kaffraria proper, Basutoland and Tambookieland—all of which lie hetween Natal and the Cape Colony—there are supposed to he upward of 1,500,000 natives and a few white traders only; and then we come to the Cape Colony—the oldest settlement—and there we find a white population of 250,000, and a hlack population ahout four times as numerous. These rough figures mean that, if the wave of civilization is to go forward in these distant settlements of the British Empire, it will necessarily have to contend against all the resisting elements of harharism.

An extraordinary outrage has been perpetrated in the county Limerick, in consequence of the employment of a machine instead of manual labor for mowing purposes. A respectahle farmer named Browne, of Effin, Kilmallock, recently purchased thirty acres of land near Bruree. On August 29th Mr. Browne proceeded to superintend the mowing operations, which were done by the machine, against which there is a decided prejudice in the county. On his way three men, with hlackened faces and armed with firearms and with a pitchfork, rushed out of an unoccupied house and stopped Mr. Browne. They plunged the prongs of the pitchfork into the horse's side, and threatened the rider that if he continued the use of the machine he would share the fate of his horse.

A clever swindler of the feminine gender has been sent to prison for twenty days in Glasgow for defrauding no less than three lawyers—Scotch lawyers, too. She was a domestic servant, twenty-three years of age; and representing to each in turn that she would inherit a considerable fortune, giving each in turn instructions how to dispose of her prospective "property," she induced each of the astute gentlemen to advance her small sums for preseut necessities. But of course this sort of thing would not go on long among lawyers, and this the domestic servant of twenty-three, with "great expectations," has found.

The hody of a young lady was removed from Brighton on August 30th for burial, under somewhat romantic circumstances. The day of her interment was the day originally fixed for her marriage, and her friends complied with her dying wish that she should he drawn to the grave hy the horses which had been engaged to convey her to church. To the catafalque there were attached four greys, whose heads were decked with floral rosettes of white and red geraniums, and the coffiu was covered with a white and amber silk pall. The carriages which followed were drawn hy horses caparisoned similarly to those which drew the hearse.

THE NEW MINE.

History and Description of the Golden Gate.—The old Vermont Consolidated ground, after some little difficulty in the matter of reorganization, change of name, etc., has finally passed into the possession of the Golden Gate Mill and Mining Company, and it was regularly listed on the San Francisco Stock Board as such. The title to the ground is complete, being perfected hy United States patent, and the location is among the most eligible and interesting. It lies immediately south of and adjoining the Sierra Nevada, and extends along the easterly portion of the Union, Mexican, Ophir and California to the Cousolidated Virginia; therefore, whatever honanzas may he encountered in the depths of those mines, may eventually be shared by the Golden Gate. It is one of the pioneer locations, heing made in 1859. The heavy surface croppings were sufficiently explored hy the old Bunker Hill shaft and the Vermont tunnel to indicate one of the true Comstock fissnres, and at several points hunches and streaks of fair grade ore were encountered, showing the location to be one of great prospective value and interest. The early owners were poor men, and consequently unable to stand the expense of heavy machinery and deep explorations, hut they incorporated under the name of the Vermont Consolidated, and did ample work to keep their title good until perfected hy the United States patent.

A couple of years ago they commenced sinking a first-class three-compartment working shaft a short distance to the northeast of the Ophir shaft and nearly on a line hetween the C. & C. and Sierra Nevada shafts, going to a heavy expense in the erection of excellent steam hoisting works. By the time they had attained the depth of 550 feet, however, they found themselves inextricably involved in debt, and last Christmas the Sheriff compelled a suspension of operations. A company of San Francisco capitalists have since then hought up all financial claims, squared up the indebtedness, and now, being finally reincorporated under the acceptahls name of the Golden Gate, the development of the mine will be proceeded with as soon as suitable arrangements can be made, under new and favorable auspices, with plenty of capital and everything to do with. The machinery is amply sufficient for present purposes, the shaft is in excellent order, and the proposition is to sink it a thousand feet deeper or until it reaches the extensive pay ore deposit which neighboring developments have already demonstrated that it must run into ahout that depth. The location and title are certainly among the very hest on the Comstock, and the Golden Gate must necessarily soon take its proper position of prominenca and favor among the valuahle mines of the north end.—Gold Hill News.

The annual report of the British Postmaster-General for the financial year ended 31st March, 1879, has just heen presented to Parliament, and shows a satisfactory rate of progress in most branches of post-office work. As regards the Telegraph Department, it is satisfactory to find that, notwithstanding the depression in trade, there is an increase in the number of messages over the preceding year, though only to the extent of 317,617. The total nurnher of messages forwarded was 24,459,613, and of delivered 22,792.000. Nearly 286 millions of words of news were delivered in the course of the year to newspapers, clubs, etc. The total number of telegraph offices open on the 1st of March was 3,853, in addition to 1,401 railway stations. Several improvements have heen introduced in the apparatus, and the adoption of the quadruplex apparatus, by means of which one wire is made capahle of simultaneously conveying four streams of messages—two in eacb direction—has added another to the fast speed instruments in use hy the department.

SPORTING ITEMS.

Pedestrianism.—The great six-day mixed race for the championship of the Pacific coast commenced October 1st, at 11 P. M. Thirty-nine, out of the forty entered started, their many colored costumes, presenting a very pleasing effect as they walked or ran round the track. The Pavilion is handsomely decorated, and additional seats, commanding a splendid view of the track, have been built on the west side. The track appears to be fast. It is made of a bottom layer of fine loam, then a layer of cinders, topped off with sawdust. It was laid out by the City and County Surveyor and his deputies, who certify that it measures exactly 220 yards in circumference, making eight laps to the mile. Scoring so many men on so short a track presents many difficulties, one of the principal being that the caller's voice is often drowned by the ringing cheers that greet every burst of speed, but, as two gentlemen are on constant watch to check the score, there is not much fear of errors. Colonel Shaw was chosen referee, greatly to the satisfaction of all concerned, who feel sure that his decisions will all be dictated by a spirit of fairness. We notice that the Pavilion has become a very popular place for all classes of people. Even those who do not take much interest in athletics find it a very pleasant place for an afternoon or evening promenade; the cool fountain, the splendid music, archery grounds, billiard tables, shooting-gallery, and other attractive amusements, giving a fair-like aspect to the arena. The work is far ahead of that done in the last match here. Wilcox made his first mile in 8 m. 19½ sec., and 7½ miles in his first hour, being the best records so far. So far, the betting has been very wild. It looks as if the friends and admirers of a few contestants had plenty of money. Laying odds on an unknown man like Lee, even if he is a good man, shows more enthusiasm than sense. Even if his backers win, they will regret to know that the more sensible policy of taking odds from so large a field would have made a much larger return. So far, we see no reason to change our opinion, that the winner may be looked for from among those who made a place in the last race, though Wilcox looks a dangerous man. ——There are twelve entries for the coming ladies' six-day race. Von Berg will walk, and we advise our friends to back her for first, at any reasonable figure. We hear that some of the unknown ladies are put about as good things, but experience shows that dark horses seldom amount to much in a long race. However, the field against the favorites, at evens, would not be a bad bet.——The Fall meeting of the New York Athletic Club, held at Mott Haven, Saturday, September 20th, was remarkable for the beating of American amateur records for seven events, as follows: L. E. Meyers, quarter-mile run, 49 m. 1-5 sec., beating E. J. Colbeck's 50 m. 2-5 sec., that has stood for eleven years. L. E. Meyer's 220-yard run, 22⅘ sec, W. B. Curtis slinging the 56 lb. weight 23 ft., 1½ inches; hammer-throwing, 88 ft. 1½ inch. W. Purdy, seven-mile walk, 55 m. 36½ sec. Van Houten, pole-leap, 10 ft. 5⅝ in. J. Duffy, mile-run, 4 m. 37 2-5 sec., beating McIntyre's Californian record.

Shooting.—So far, reports of quail shooting are favorable. Good bags have been at all the following places: The gulches back of the Fourteen Mile House; between Millbrae and San Mateo; San Andreas Valley, as far down as Belmont; Belmont; in the ravines four miles back of Redwood City, and behind Mountain View. All these places are on the line of railroad, and afford from six to eight hours shooting to the city sportsman without taking him from his business over one day. The ranch of R. J. Throckmorton, who is always ready to oblige gentlemen with permits, literally swarms with quail. Near Mr. Throckmorton's ranch there is a piece of land free to all without permits. It belongs part to the Saucelito Ferry Company and part to the Government. A bevy of over 300 was seen on it by a gentleman, a few days since. Farther from town, but still easy of access, are many splendid grounds for hunters, among which are Grass Valley, back of San Antonio, Shabos Lake, Haywards, down to Crow Canyon, Palmyra Valley, between Haywards and Dublin, in the mountains back of Mission Warm Springs. Between the Spriugs and Calaveras Valley one party bagged over 600. J. McShafter is issuing a limited number of permits to shoot over his Olema ranch. All round Bolinas and Tomales Bay, between San Pablo and Martinez, the sport is very good. In Pinole Valley, in the gulches down to San Pablo Creek, between San Pablo and Walnut Creek House, birds are very plentiful. Back of San Raphael, near the Orphan, and on Sweetzer & De Long's Ranch, are perhaps the best stocked grounds within 100 miles of the city. Snipe are plentiful in all the islands in the San Joaquin, at Webb's Landing, Sherman Island, Altoon and Kimball's, all of which places are free.——George Routier's challenge for a trap shoot to any one in Sacramento County has been accepted by Lopez Mauldin, to take place the middle of this month.

Rowing.—The order and times for the races to take place at the regatta this afternoon are as follows: 1. McKinlay Cup, 1:30 P.M. 2. Junior Singles, 2 P.M. 3. Second-class Four-oared Shell, 2:15 P.M. 4. Senior Singles, 2:30 P.M. 5. Four-oared Out-rigged Gig, 3 P.M. 6. Phips' Boats, 3:30 P.M. 7. Second-class Barge, 4 P.M. 8. Duck Race, 4:30 P.M. The Pioneer Rowing Club since the closing of the entries have been permitted to enter for the four-oared out-rigged gig race. Their crew will be the same as is entered for the four-oared second-class shell. There is no doubt that the St. George's regatta, that takes place this afternoon on Oakland Creek. will show some splendid sport. We hope that it will be well attended, as it deserves to be, for the Committee have spared no pains to ensure the comfort of the spectators and the success of the races. We are positively assured that the Neptune's crew will not race, as was rumored the past week. The practice of the different crews have been closely watched, but we find nothing to add to our comments in last week's NEWS LETTER. Speaking of the uselessness of timing rowing races, and the liability to draw erroneous conclusions from time made in practice, we just received news that the time of 19 min. 30 sec. over the course from Putney to Mortlake has been beaten 20 sec. by a very ordinary sculler, with the aid of favorable wind and tide, but still he is as well entitled to the record as any other sculler on the same course.

Swimming.—The season is drawing to a close, but here in San Francisco we are promised a grand finale. Captain Webb will be here in less than two weeks; Flemming says he is ready and willing to make a race with the Channel hero, and his backers are ready to put their coin on the result of it. We think that Flemming can beat the Captain any distance under two miles.——Daily's doctors fear he will never recover the use of his injured leg.——The next contest for the Neptune Club badge will be very exciting. Dean, Williams, Melrose and the present holder (Catton) are all expected to compete.

Baseball.—The game at Oakland last Sunday, between the Hop Bitters and Mutuals, gave the former a victory; score, 10 to 7. Some of the knowing daily papers, and a few ball tossers (who ought to know better), have stated that the Mutuals could have won were it not for the nervousness of their pitcher, Mast. The fact is, the Hop Bitters were merely fooling with them, and are far ahead of any team that could be got together out of our local talent.——Last Saturday's game between the Californias and Oaklands was one of the most remarkable on record, the latter winning: score, 1 to 0. There was only one error made in the entire game.——Games to-morrow: At Oakland—Hop Bitters vs. Californias. The Chicago Club will arrive here Friday, October 17th. En route they will play the Blue Stockings at Sacramento, and the Oaklands at Stockton and Oakland.

Bicycling.—Dunbar won the mile handicap at Cardiff, September 6th. Time, 2 min., 52½ sec. Stanton's time for the mile, with a distance allowance of 200 yards was 2 min. 44½ sec.——The six-day match, lately finished at Agricultural Hall, London, resulted in some marvelous performances. Following is the score: Waller, 1,404 miles 6 laps; Terront, 1,390 miles 5 laps; Higham, 1,145 miles 3 laps; Cann, 1,100 miles 1 lap. This shows a great improvement in the sport. In the last six-day race Waller won with only 1,172 miles to his credit. The riding time in these races is limited to eighteen hours per day.——Cortis won a ten-mile race recently in 34 min. 31⅗ sec., the best time on record for a grass track. He rode a 58-in. wheel.

Coursing.—The Fall meeting of the Pioneer Coursing Club is arranged to take place at Merced the second Thursday in November.——The match set for November 1st, between T. Tunstead's "Minnehaha" and Devlin's "Pride of the Cañon," for $200 a side, is off, Tunstead paying the forfeit. The match between "Jemima" and "California Boy" is also off, owing to the loss of "California Boy." Fifty dollars reward is offered for his recovery.

Archery.—An archery picnic will take place to-day at Adam's Point Range, Alameda.——The score of the Eureka's, at the Sacramento tournament, was 1,125, not 1,031, as incorrectly reported.

Editor News Letter: It has come to my knowledge that inquiries have been made during the week why the names and addresses of the milk carts, stores and bakeries whence the reported specimens had been obtained were not given in my report on adulterated milk last week. I am not ready for that yet. Though many gentlemen have seen the tests used and the results obtained, their attention was not called, in any case, with the view to their testimony being sought should legal proceedings be taken against the paper. But those most interested may rest well assured that everything is booked, and that another series of experiments on milks, got from the same sources, is going ahead every day, and more still minute investigations are being made into the effects of these adulterated milks on sickly children. In one house, to which I have access at all times, I am watching a young boy, of say three years, whose craving for milk is insatiable. He will drink pint after pint and cry for more. Now, this child is ill-nourished, is pale, has brown rings about his eyes—in fact, shows the well marked symptoms of starvation by swill-milk. As the dairy is known, and the more minute investigations are only a matter of time, a case will probably be established ere long upon which criminal proceedings can be advantageously taken. In the Himalayas, says "Das Ausland," is found a plant of the family Aroideæ, which strikingly represents a cobra with its head erect: it is known as the cobra-plant. The half-moon-shaped markings on the cobra's head, and the lines on its neck, are imitated in the flower-sheath of the plant, while the tongue-like elongation of the pistil and of the midrib of the flower-sheath serve to increase the resemblance of the plant to a living animal. Indeed, so striking is this resemblance, that upon coming upon it unawares a person instinctively recoils with horror.

DR. CARVER ON MR. W. W. GREENER'S HAMMERLESS GUNS.

Sir--On my arrival in England last winter, I noticed a discussion in your valuable paper relative to the merits of hammerless guns, and it occurred to me that they were just the kind of gun for my exhibition shooting, where rapid firing and easy loading are most essential. The only doubt I had respecting them was their durability, the work I have being very severe on the gun.

After much consideration I selected the treble wedge-fast hammerless gun, made by Mr. W. W. Greener, as the most likely to meet all my requirements. Those who have witnessed my exhibitions at the Crystal Palace, will agree with me that the hammerless gun was put to a very severe test, my rapid firing so heating the barrels as to necessitate the constant application of cold water to render the handling of the gun agreeable. I have shot this gun 130 consecutive days, generally in two and often in three exhibitions per day, often in hail and rain storms, and during this period it has never been taken to pieces, the locks or action cleaned or oiled, or the stock taken off, and yet the gun works evenly and smoothly, and is quite as pleasant and efficient to use as when first turned out. This gun has gone through more rough work and withstood more hard usage than is likely to occur to any gun during five years' game shooting I am acquainted with either in England or America. Rifle shooting is my great "forte," but the way this gun breaks glass balls at long distances—60 or 80 yards—has called forth much applause.

I feel much pleasure in recommending this gun to the notice of my brother sportsmen in the United States as being the most reliable, the easiest to manipulate, the safest to use, and the best adapted for hard work. Also W. W. Greener's guns of all grades as sound, well-finished and honest work, which sportsmen can depend upon. W. F. CARVER.

TO THE SPORTSMEN OF THE PACIFIC COAST.

I take great pleasure in announcing that I have forwarded to Messrs. Liddle & Kaeding, gun-makers, San Francisco, a large and fine assortment of my best breech-loading guns of all grades, and recommend the sportsmen of the Pacific Coast to examine them. For finish and strong, hard shooting, no better guns have ever left England. [Oct. 4.] W. W. GREENER

THE DAY BOOK
FROM
Saturday to Saturday.

London, September 26th.—Three hundred agricultural tenants bave arrived in the town of Tipperary, Ireland. They refused to pay the full amount of their rent, and disturbances are feared.——A dispatch dated Cape Town says Cetewayo left Port Dumford on the 4th instant. Quarters have been prepared for him at the Castle here. All the remaining hostile chiefs in Zululand have surrendered. Sir Garnet Wolseley arrived at Utrecht, Transvaal, on the 7th instant.——Tupiza (Bolivia), August 31st, via Lisbon, September 27th.—The vanguard of General Campo's army has forced the Chilians to evacuate Coloma, and has defeated the corps of Colonel Ruiz, and the Peruvian and Bolivian armies are marching on San Pedro de Aticama.——New York, September 27th.—Total imports of specie since the resumption of specie payments at the beginning of the year, $39,730,402, of which $31,921,461 was in gold and $7,808,941 silver. From the 1st of August last to the close of business yesterday, specie imports amounted to $33,552,628, of which $10,256,283 came from Great Britain, $19,098,858 from the Continent, principally from France, and $4,197,487 from the West Indies and South America. The $33,552,628 imported since August consisted of $20,434,471 foreign gold coin, $8,544,421 gold bars and bullion, $3,115,982 United States gold coin, $951,971 United States Silver coin, $402,022 foreign silver coin, $90,387 gold dust, and $12,774 silver bars.——New York, September 29th.—The Herald's Washington special says: It is understood that our Minister to China has nearly completed a modification of the Cushing and Burlingame treaties, which will discourage emigration of the lower order of Chinese. The modifications are intended to especially promote trade, and not immigration, and place merchants of each country on a commercial equality. It is believed this important work would have been accomplished many years ago, if Seward had not been called home last winter to meet the attempt to impeach him; and that his object in returning to China after the adjournment of the Forty-fifth Congress, was to conclude negotiations on this subject. The modified treaties will doubtless be submitted to the Senate early in December. Since the establishment of the Chinese Legation in Washington, it has been generally understood that it was the intention of the Chinese Government to harmonize its commercial relations with other nations, and to place such restrictions upon the forced coolie trade as will effectually prevent it. With this view the negotiations have been concluded with Spain, permitting the establishment of a Chinese Consulate-General at Havana, with subordinate Consulates at other Cuban ports. The Consul-General, accompanied by several officers, left Washington yesterday for Cuba. On their arrival a census of the Chinese population in that island will be taken.——London, September 28th.—Prince Lobanoff is the bearer of the project for an alliance between Russia and Turkey. It is rumored Russia is willing to renounce 800,000,000 francs of the war indemnity, and to give back some of the former provinces of Turkey in Asia.——Notices of ten per cent. reduction of wages were posted Saturday at nearly all the earthenware and china manufactories in the Stafford potteries. The men are determined to resist this reduction, which will affect 80,000 persons.——London, September 29th.—All workmeu in the shipbuilding trade at Grimsby are on a strike against a resolution of the masters to extend working hours from fifty-four to fifty-eight and a half hours weekly.——The Pall Mall Gazette says it has become apparent that serious trouble is brewing in Ireland, in consequence of the Anti-Rent and Nationalist agitation.——Sir Francis Wyatt Truscott has been elected Lord Mayor of London.——Eastern Siberia is menaced with famine. Grain is dearer than ever before, and the poor are suffering severely. The harvest was very bad.——St. Petersburg, September 29th.—Intelligence has been received from Beurnia that during a reconnoissance near Geok Tekpe, on the 28th of August, the Russians encountered large masses of Tekke-Turcomans, strongly intrenched, who made a desperate resistance. The Russians for six hours cannonaded a position occupied hy thirty thousand Tekke-Turcomans. In the evening the Russians obtained possession of the outer intrenchments, and at night the enemy fled, losing several thousand. The Russians lost seven officers and 178 soldiers killed, and had 16 officers and 238 soldiers wounded.——London, September 30th.—The Pall Mall Gazette concedes that the complaiuts of the Irish tenant farmers are mostly genuine, that they are for the moment unable to pay their rent, and that they hclieve in their right to remain on the land in every event. If a general refusal to pay rent is followed by wholesale eviction, this again will almost certainly be followed by a series of agrarian murders; and, unless the Irish Executive is prepared to support the landlords by measures amounting to little less than military occupation of a large part of the country, the landlords will have to choose between virtually conceding the tenants' claim to fifty years of tenure, or giving a signal for an outbreak of something hardly distinguishable from civil war. The anti-rent agitation is only one among other symptoms of general unrest in Ireland. For the moment it is the most urgent; but even if the worst pinch of agrarian distress was relieved hy universal redemption of rent, there would still be much disquiet, as in the condition of the country the enthusiasm by which Parnell's progress has been attended has infinitely weakened the hands of the more moderate Home Rulers and emboldened the Ultras, and among its first results was somewhat to precipitate the proposal to assemble a National Convention. The troublous prospect in Ireland is not really affected by the success or failure of any given scheme for organizing pressure upon the Government. The present temper of the Irish people and their leaders concerns us much more seriously than any particular proposal for its manifestation; and while this temper remains what it is—seditious among the people, and recklessly incendiary among the leaders—the situation must be a grave one, whether a convention ever meets or not. The old statute which prohibited conventions in Ireland has been repealed.

No man realizes how rapidly he is passing through this world till he runs against an open iron gate of a dark night.

"The World," the Flesh, and the Devil.

[By a Truthful Penman.]

Mr. J. C. Uhthoff, second house-surgeon at Guy's Hospital, relates the following extraordinary incident in the Lancet: A well-dressed and lady-like female, with a strong French accent, asked to see me, and requested that the interview might be a private one, as the subject upon which she wished to speak was, to use her own words, a "delicate" one. A young woman, a relative or friend of hers, was entitled to inherit some property if married; but, being single, there was a prospect of her losing it. As no suitable husband seemed likely to appear, she was desirous of finding some "dying" man, of what position it mattered not, to whom she might be formally married, and so obtain the property, while at the same time the link might be a slender one, and soon broken. This they had not been able to manage in France, where she lived, and they had accordingly sent over to a London hospital, where they hoped for success. I was requested to find such a dying man suitable for the object. If he were a widower and had children they would make some provision for the children. I need not dwell upon the answer given to such a request. It would be curious to know if the same attempt has been made at other London hospitals.——Babymania, which is the rage just now at French seasides and chateux, is considered there an English importation, and fashionable as such, although it may claim more properly a Yankee origin. French ladies, however, have not yet gone to the length of opening exhibitions of babies, with prizes to and honorable mention of successful competitors. They are satisfied with keeping a pair of scales in the nursery, and betting heavily between themselves on the probable weight of their respective olive-branches. The game, by the way, must be somewhat restrained by the limited number of children in the French upper classes; that number is, on the average, curtailed to two or three, who cannot be expected to remain forever in the baby stage of their existence for the sole purpose of supplying their fond parents with an additional pastime. On the whole, however, the fashion may be considered a distinct improvement in French life, as so many young wives who used to look with anything but enthusiasm to the prospect of renewed maternity may be led by the hope of high premiums, transformable into new gowns and bonnets, to consider it in a more philosophical spirit.——A little girl in Washington, D. C., was shot in the head, July 14th, and lost an ounce of brain. The surgeons treated her with the utmost skill, and saved her life. The broken skull bone has knit together, and the parents of the little girl are unable to see the slightest mental effect from the loss of brain. She is as cheerful, bright and lively as before the injury. This incident proves that a Washington child can lose without any serious results a quantity of brains, the loss of which would bankrupt an ordinary Washington politician.—Peoria Evening Call, Ill.——A very important step has been taken by the Dominion of Canada which will probably have an excellent effect upon emigration to that colony. The Government agent at Liverpool has been authorized to communicate with tenant farmers who are at all inclined to go to Canada. Those who can show that they have sufficient capital to set to work with advantage can appoint delegates to go and examine the state of the country and their prospects of success if they settle there. The expenses of these delegates will be paid by the Canadian Government, and every opportunity is to be given for investigation. At the present time in particular this is a most judicious proceeding.——Fate has overtaken pretty Mrs. Langtry with a divorce, as it has so many court beauties before her. Whether the Prince of Wales figures this time in the case as he did in Lord Mordaunt's suit is as yet unknown, but a public hearing now close at hand will show, and the Jersey lily is in foul way to be dragged through scandalous mire. Up to the opening of this divorce suit Mrs. Langtry had enjoyed an enviable reputation, her talent disarmed malice and her prudence prevented slander. She was received at Sandringham by the princess, and universally accepted as a woman above reproach.—Springfield Republican.——For some time past the custodians of the Bois de Boulogne have remarked an amazon who was in the habit of traversing the rides reserved for gentlemen at full gallop, and of disappearing, as if by enchantment, without the Customs officials being able to go through the usual examination. As the unknown was generally wont to enter the Bois by the Boulogne gate a watch was kept, and soon afterward she put in an appearance, her steed, as usual, clearing the barrier at a bound. Hereupon, however, an accident befel the daring equestrian. The horse given the rein, took the bit in his mouth and rushed under the trees, the rider now calling loudly for aid. As both came to the ground together two young men arrived, and, on raising the pseudo-amazon, were astonished to find that the victim was a man, and that his feminine vestments served to conceal a corsage of caoutchouc filled with brandy, the saddle also helping to convey the precious fluid into Paris free of duty. As for the disguised smuggler, he rushed away, leaving some articles of his attire in the hands of his rescuers, and vanished, the horse being taken to the greenyard.——Indian servants always have written characters, or, as they are called, "chitties." These can, of course, be forged at will by any native who writes English. Some of the "chitties," however, produced by servants who can neither read nor write English are amusing. Here is one, for instance, which the bearer imagined to be highly flattering: "Cassim is a thorough blackguard, and has robbed me of innumerable articles since he has been in my service. He is also a confirmed liar. I firmly believe he has kept other swindlers and robbers away; but the depredations he has committed will suffice for all."—World.——Thomas Wilson, a retired merchant, worth over a million dollars, and a well-known Quaker, has just died in Baltimore, at the age of 91, leaving $500,000 to found a sanitarium for the children of the poor, $200,000 to endow the "Thomas Wilson Fuel Saving Society" and to aid the poor, and $6,000 each for four local societies. He gave over $500,000 to nephews, nieces, etc., having no children.——There never was any real ground for the assiduously circulated report that the Princess Louise would return to England this year, but she will probably pay a visit there next spring. Lord Lorne will not accompany her. He likes his post very much, but finds the work far harder than he had anticipated.——There has been sad commotion in the nursery of a great house, one of its noble occupants having been convicted of sticking pins into the canary-birds. The cages were getting empty, so the governess was moved to examine one of the dead birds, when, on blowing aside the feathers, lo and behold! it had been converted into a pincushion by the fairy fingers of dear, pretty little Lady ——.——Before leaving Plymouth the Prince of Wales "received" on board the Osborne the champion female rower of the world, the venerable Mrs. Ann Glanville, of Saltash, who is now nearly ninety. The Queen and Prince Albert once saw Mrs. Glanville win a race at Cherbourg, and afterward "received" her in the Victoria and Albert, when she amused her Majesty by dancing a hornpipe. The Prince's invitation to the old lady has given much gratification to the people of the "three towns."

A GOOD PLAN.

Anybody can learn to make money rapidly operating in Stocks, by the "Two Unerring Rules for Success," in Messrs. Lawrence & Co.'s new circular. The combination method, which this firm has made so successful, enables people with large or small means to reap all the benefits of largest capital and best skill. Thousands of orders, in various sums, are pooled into one vast amount and co-operated as a mighty whole, thus securing to each shareholder all the advantages of the largest operator. Immense profits are divided monthly. Any amount, from $5 to $5,000, or more, can be used successfully. N. Y. Baptist Weekly, September 20th, 1878, says: "By the combination system $15 would make $75, or 5 per cent.; $50 pays $350, or 7 per cent.; $100 makes $1,000, or 10 per cent. on the stock, during the month, according to the market." Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, June 29th: "The combination method of operating stocks is the most successful ever adopted." New York Independent, Sept. 12th: "The combination system is founded upon correct business principles, and no person need be without an income while it is kept working by Messrs Lawrence & Co. Brooklyn Journal, April 29th: "Our editor made a net profit of $101.25 from $20 in one of Messrs. Lawrence & Co.'s combinations." New circular (mailed free) explains everything. Stocks and bonds wanted. Government bonds supplied.

"BIZ."

The export trade of the port is very active at present. The Wheat movement heing large and of considerahle volume since the commencement of the harvest year, July 1st, our grain fleet to European ports numhers 82 vessels, carrying upward of 3,000,000 ctls. Wheat, of the value of $5,400,000, against same time last year of 105 vessels, carrying 3,700,000 ctls. Wheat, valued at $6,400,000. At this writing we have on the European berth a fleet of 38 vessels, of 57,000 registered tons, and these ships are having quick dispatch. Wheat arrives freely from the interior, and there seems to he little detention loading.

Our Barley exports hy sea are much larger this season than last, hy reason chiefly of the superior quality of this year's grain. Our exports hy sea of this grain, since July 1st, aggregate 300,000 ctls., valued at $450,000, against same time last year of 88,000 ctls., valued at $137,000.

The freight market has been hooming for some weeks past, a large number of ships having heen chartered for England and France at steadily advancing prices. At the close of August 45s. was the rate of freight to Havre or Liverpool direct, while, at the close of September, 55s. was freely paid for American ships, and even more paid for British iron vessels; and at this writiug we hear of grain charters made for Cork, U. K., at £3. This is encouraging to ship-owners. At this date our fleet of disengaged vessels in port is 17—aggregating 20,000 tons register.

Flour.—The outgoing steamer, City of Tokio, will carry, it is said, 1,300 tons of Flour. Our exports of Flour since July 1st aggregate 103,394 bbls., against same time last year of 143,271 hhls. The foreign demand for Breadstuffs seems to he chiefly for Wheat, giving our millers little to do in the way of shipments. We quote shipping extras at $5@$5 50; Extra Family and Baker's Extra, $5 25@$5 75 ₱ 196lbs.; Standard Superfine, $4 25@$4 50; Extra Superfine, $4 75@$5. There are, however, lower grades of so-called Superfine, to he had at $4, or even less.

Wheat.—There is an active export demand for all that arrives. Our total export of this grain to all ports since July 1st aggregate 3,079,273 ctls., against same time last year of 3,752,016 ctls. At the close of Septemher 800 tons extra choice No. 1 milling sold at $1 93¾. Other lots, to a considerahle extent, were placed at $1 90, hut since then there has heen a slight reaction, shippers huying freely of No. 2 choice at $1 82½@$1 85 ₱ ctl., and millers paying for selections $1 87½@$1 90 ₱ ctl.

Barley.—There is no special demand for this grain, even at the low prices ruling, say 82½@85c. for Feed, 90@95c. for Brewing, and for Chevalier $1.50@1.70 ₱ ctl. The R. J. Stanhope has cleared for Iquique with 10,027 ctls.; R. J. Moulton, for Liverpool, with 6,573 ctls.; the Moro Castle, for Philadelphia, with 10,574 ctls.; the City of New York, for New Zealand, carried 4.683 ctls. Thus far in the season shipments East overland have heen very light.

Corn and Oats.—There is little demand for these grains other than for local use. We quote Corn at 85@95c. ₱ ctl.; Oats, $1.25@1.50 ₱ ctl., with a light traffic.

Hops.—The receipts are light, and hut few transactions see the light, and, in the absence of reported sales, we quote the price at 22½@32½c., according to quality.

Honey.—The crop is light and the stock small, price 8@10c. for Strained; Comh, 12@15c.

Wool.—The demand is better than the supply. Good, clean Fall Clip, 16@18c for Northern; 14@15c for Southern ditto. Burry and Earthy rule as low as 10@12½c.

Hides.—The market is strong at 17@18c for Dry.

Tallow.—The demand is light. Sales of 15,000 lbs Refined at 7⅞c. Crude, 5¾c.

General Merchandise—Bags.—Grain Sacks are in excessive stock, and the price nominal, at 10@11c. No demand for standard Burlaps at present.

Borax.—The market is unmoved, and prices steady. The supply restricted. Price 6@7c for the two grades.

Case Goods.—There is a hetter demand for Salmon, and the prices are a turn dearer. Columbia River 1-lb standard brands now held at $1 10@$1 12½. Sacramento River Salmon are obtainable at $1 05 ₱ dozen. The R. J. Moulton, for Liverpool, carried 5,906 cases Salmon.

Chemicals.—There seems to be a hetter inquiry, but no change in values.

Coal.—The market is steady at old prices. The Pacific Coast supply is liheral, which tends to keep prices in check. Most of the Foreign arriving was sold some time since.

Coffee.—There is a good demand and a firm market for Guatemala at 16@18c. for good to choice; other Central American grades, 12@16½c.; O. G. Java, 26c.

Hardware.—There has heen of late a decided uphcaving in the price of nearly all staple goods in this line, the advance ruling from 25 to 75 per cent.

Metals.—The market for Pig Iron, Iron Pipe, Bar Iron, etc., is very firm at the late rise, and holders asking advanced rates. Stocks of Pig Iron are, however, large, and the consumption light.

Nails.—We note a purchase of 2,000 kegs Standard at $3.50 from store, and the price advauced to $3.75 ₱ keg.

Oils.—The market is flat; Pacific Castor Oil 90c.@$1 at the mill. The City of New York, for Australia, carried 6,000 galls. Whale and 600 galls. Neatsfoot.

Provisions.—There is more activity to be noted in the Meat market, especially for Bacon. Eastern Sugar-cured Hams arrive frcely. Lard is in good supply. Butter and Cheese are the turn dearer.

Quicksilver.—The market is as flat as a pancake, and the article can be bought for export at 36c, and possibly for less. Receipts in 1878, 43,751 flasks; same time in 1879, 53,030 flasks; increase this year, 9,279 flasks. Our exports by sea since January 1st, 44,999 flasks, valued at $1,298,649; same time in 1878, 23,198 flasks, valued at $771,121; increase this year 21,801 flasks, valued at $527,528.

Salt.—The market for Liverpool is strong at $15@20.

Teas.—On the 2d instant S. L. Jones & Co. held an interesting auction sale of new crop Japan and China Teas. The catalogue called for 3,500 packages, being the importation of Macondray & Co. Terms, ninety days, or three per cent. discount for cash. The attendance was large and the bidding spirited. One thousand five hundred hlf. chests Japan, M. & Co., in papers, pounds and hlf. pounds, all sold at 36@36½c; Japan in hulk sold at 45c, for Yamashiro, 37½@33½c for Natural Leaf; Comet Gunpowder sold at 54½c; Comet Oolongs sold at 53@52c; 100 mats ditto, each two 15-lb. hoxes, 52½c; hlf. chests Formosa Oolongs sold at 36½@32½c; English Breakfast Souchongs sold at 59@44½c; Congou, 35@39c; Japan flowered hoxes Greens, Young Hyson and Oolongs sold at 35@34c; 10 cases small jars Japans 42c; 40 large jars, each 70 lbs., sold at 36½c.

Rice.—The market for Hawaiian is strong, with sales per recent arrivals at 6¼c. China, on the contrary, is dull of sale, at 4⅝@5⅝c as the range of the market. The Colwyn, from Hongkong, hrought 15,511 hags China.

Sugar.—The market is strong at the late rise. Imports from Hawaii are liheral; the hulk of this goes to the Refinery direct, having heen bought hy them on contract. We quote Whites at 10¾c, Yellow 8¾c, and Golden 9½c.

Tobacco.—The dealers in Manufactured report a good trade at steady prices.

Wines.—The demand for Native continues active, and prices seem to hc on the up-grade.

IT IS EASILY REACHED,

and is unsurpassed in the excellence of its climate, the beauty of its scenery, and in the attractiveness of its truly remarkable sea beach. Those extraordinary pebbles, among which are to be found agates, opals, sapphires, etc., were never so numerous as now, the past Winter having thrown up immense numbers of curiously-shaped stones, which for ages have been subjected to the everlasting motions of the tireless Pacific. GOOD TROUT FISHING is obtainable in the Pescadero river.

SEPTEMBER 28TH, 1879.

F. E. Luty, Esq., Secretary—DEAR SIR: Since last report the winze has been entirely completed and sinking resumed. Shaft now down about 93 feet in good formation. The fissure is considerably wider than the shaft, and the ledge of good quartz about 2½ feet in width. A good-sized ledge is found in the hanging-wall. A contract has been let to sink to the 200-foot level at the low price of $6 50 per foot.

SEPTEMBER 28TH, 1879.

F. E. Luty, Esq., Secretary—DEAR SIR: Since last report, the main shaft has been sunk to the depth of 360 feet and well timbered. The bottom of the shaft is still cutting a part of the new ledge, which improves in quality as depth is gained. The contract has been let to sink to the 400-foot level, from which point cross-cutting and drifting will be commenced. Several tests of samples from the ledge show it to be very rich in fine gold and some silver. J. G. McCLINTON, Superintendent.

At the Terrace Baths, Alameda, the improvements carried out have attracted thousands during these few weeks of our delicious Autumn weather. Nothing like the perfect accommodations here offered to the bather, or to those in search of recreation, can be found on this coast. Water, fresh from the ocean with every tide, in an absolutely safe enclosure, private and retired, with fresh air and enchanting views of the woods and bay and the city in the distance; sunny exposure, which gives just the necessary warmth to the water, and a shelving beach, so that one can choose his depth. No more delicious enjoyment can be found than a dip in these placid waves on one of the lovely moonlight nights we now rejoice in, in this our true Summer season, when the chilling winds have died away and a mellowed atmosphere prepares all nature for the coming rains. Time flies, and but too swiftly; we should gather the exquisite pleasures of life within our reach, and lay up memories of happy hours for the days that are cold and dark and dreary. It will soon be too late to share in the moonlit ramhles or float in the crystal waters, sparkling with diamonds at every stroke of the swimmer, for the moon waues and the long nights are coming, when only the electric light can illumine these retreats.

The softness and finish of the pictures taken at Taher's new Gallery are universally acknowledged, and surprise those who had imagined that the last word was uttered about the improvements in photography. With real artists there is no such last word, and Taher is continually advancing. So well known is the fact, that our illustrious visitor has felt it a duty which he owed to himself, as well as to this great city, to sit for his likeness at this Gallery; and here are to be found the only satisfactory photographs of Gen. Grant and his family, as they looked and moved among us on their return from the uttermost Orient. Every one will desire to see and to possess one of these admirable mementoes of this great event.

At the Arcade the arrivals of the most exquisite novelties have continued during the past week, and the vast establishment is visited every day by ladies, eager to inspect the velvets, silks, cloaks, dress goods, and fancy goods in every possible variety, and at prices surprisingly low. All these articles were purchased hy Mr. O'Brien last month on singularly advantageous terms, due entirely to his unbounded credit; and the stocks laid in were so large that it will take weeks to receive and display them. House-furnishing goods and shawls, trimmings, mourning articles of the approved styles, and all the latest adaptations of Oriental fabrics meet the eye on every side in this crowded hazaar of taste and fashion.

SANITARY NOTES.

The sanitary condition of the city is unusually good for this season. There is some diarrhea, due to unwholesome fruit, and the public should be specially warned against eating muskmelons when even slightly decomposed. Children are also suffering from diarrhea. Mild cases of typhoid fever are prevalent, and two deaths have been registered from it during the last ten days. Diphtheria is less prevalent. In consequence of going to press on Friday, we are unable to give the usual causes of death in detail. In place of this we shall continue to note the sanitary condition of the city, and commeut on the details once a month.

Among many new and interesting facts developed by Dr. Arthur Haviland in a recent discourse on the distribution of disease, was this, that the mortality of women from cancer is highest in those districts which skirt the banks of rivers subject to periodic floods. Having ascertained this fact, Dr. Haviland studied the physical and geological characters of the districts where cancer does not thrive, and found that all these districts are characterized by being high and dry, with non-retentive soils. The obvious conclusion for all this is, that patients who show tendency to cancer, or persons in whose families cancer appears to he hereditary, should choose for their permanent residence high, dry sites. During the last twenty years no less than 100,000 women died from cancer in England.

Professor Cohn, of Breslau, has been making experiments with the electric light on the eyes of a number of persons, for the purpose of ascertaining its influence on visual perceptions and color-sensations. He finds that letters, spots and colors are perceived at a much greater distance through the medium of the electric light than hy day or gas light. The sensation of yellow is increased sixty fold compared to daylight, red six fold, blue two fold. Eyes which can only with difficulty distinguish colors by day or gas light, are much aided by the electric light.

SKELETON SKETCHES.--No. 8.

Lost and Found.

[BY T. A. HARCOURT.]

During several years of my life I used to make a point of paying an annual visit of a week or so to a little hamlet called Glanzdorf, which nestles in the heart of the Tyrolean Alps. It was, and still is, I suppose, one of those remote and picturesque nooks, far from the ordinary routes of travel, unknown to fashion and consequently unprofaned by that abomination of all abominations, the tourist. Everything and everybody in Glanzdorf was primitive and innocent. The place had never been troubled by war, pestilence, or famine, and its people, who seemed to know absolutely nothing of the great world beyond tbeir own mountains, were the most simple and contented race I have ever seen. But nature here was in strange contrast to man, for of all the glorious scenery that earth affords none is more royally magnificent and grand than that which jealously encircles little Glanzdorf.

I, in common with the rest of the traveling world, should probahly have remained i norant that such a delightful retreat existed, but for a young student, whoss acquaintance I made at the University town of Bonn. Otto Bernard was a native of Glanzdorf. His mother had died when he was a child, and it was in accordance with her dying wish that his father had consented that the hoy should be well educated. The old peasant was geuerally accounted the richest man in the village, and was notoriously close-fisted, hut in his gruff way he loved his only child and revered the memory of his dead wife, so Otto was sent first to a good school at Berlin and then to the University of Bonn. Within the memory of the inhabitants, he was the first native of Glanzdorf that had ever enjoyed such advantages. The gossips of the village were never tired of talking about him and the illustrious career for which they predicted hs was destined, and on the rare occasions when he went home for a vacation he was the idol and the pride of the little place. And not without reason, for his character was as gentle and modest as his gifts and learning were great and varied.

It was in Otto's compauy that I first visitsd Glanzdorf, and it was then that I learned, what he had never before spoken of, that he had a sweetheart there. This was Cbristine, the only daughter of old Mark Hesler, a villager, reputed to be nearly as rich as his neighbor Bernard. She was then sixteen, and was assuredly the most beautiful creature it has ever been my fortune to admire. Nor, though descended from a race of peasants, was her beauty marred by a trace of coarseness, but was delicate, refined, and perfect. She and Otto had been betrothed when they were babies, and to make her a proper match for her future husband, she had been sent to a boarding school at Trient. Her vacations were fixed, but Otto could take his at any time he could afford it. Naturally he timed them so that he could meet his betrothed at Glanzdorf. In two years his University course would be finished, and they were to be married.

Whether Christine ever really loved her betrothed more than as a brother, I cannot pretend to say, but I know she seemed to, and in those days I would as soon have doubted my own existeuce as the purity and devotion of her heart. As for Otto, I know that his love for his betrothed was as deep as his faith that it was loyally returned.

The following summer I again went to Glanzdorf for a week at the time when Otto and Christine were there. This was the last time the young couple were to meet before their marriage, and little else was talked of but that great event, distant as it still was. By this time I had become quite intimate with the two families, and before I left they made me promise to be present at the festivities. I was not likely to forget the invitation, for to tell the truth I had grown to be almost as much interested in this simple love affair as the principals themselves. I had all the affection of a brotber for Otto, and it will do no barm to confess that perhaps I had a little more than that feeling for Christine. Their lot, too, seemed so singularly happy, and their future so utterly cloudless, that one could not help regarding their humble history with interest.

Accordingly, next year, the eve of the wedding-day saw me once more at Glanzdorf. I had brought a few trifling presents with me and hastened to the house of the bridegroom to place them among the other gifts. To my surprise, I found the family and assembled friends in a state of great excitement. Christine had been expected to arrive from Trient two days ago, hut had not come yet. Everybody was at a loss to understand her absence, and though as yet nohody could believe that anything serious had befallen her, the disappointment and anxiety were so great that the preparations were practically at a standstill. Otto, I was told, was with his betrotbed's parents. We waited till after midnight—an unheard of hour for the Glanzdorfers to he out of bed—and then the curious and mystified friends withdrew sbaking their heads. I stayed at the house all nigbt, sleeping in Otto's room.

Morning came, hut no Christine. I set off to old Hesler's place to see Otto, and found him saddling a horse with trembling hands. "Where are you going?" I asked. "To Trient," he answered, in a thick voice; and before I had time to question him further, he had mounted and set off at a gallop down the mountain road. Trient was over thirty miles distant, and unless he met Christine on the road, we did not expect Otto back for at least two days. But he returned late tbat night—and alone. I heard his horse's steps, and went out to meet him with a lantern. As he dismounted at the stable door, I saw that his face was deadly pale and rigid as a stone. Before I could speak he turned from me and entered the house. I unsaddled the tired horse and put it in its stall. Old Bernard was still asleep, and feeling that the son had brought evil tidings, I did not awake him. A few moments later Otto came down from his room, carrying in his hand the little valise which had been ready packed for his brief honeymoon. He scarcely seemed to see me, hut, taking the lantern, went back to the stable and began to saddle a fresh horse. Feeling that it was time to make bim speak, I placed my hand firmly on his shoulder and asked him what was the meaning of his singular conduct. For a moment he stared at me without replying, as if trying to collect his senses, and then slowly drew from his pocket a paper. "Read tbis," he said, in a strangely altered voice. "They had found it in her room just before I got there." By the dim light of the lantern I read:

"DEAR OTTO:—I leave to-night—as they believe here—for home; hut when you get this I shall be far away with one whom you do not know. We have met often. I love him, and cannot help it. He has promised to make me his wife. I do not ask you to forgive, but you must forget—
"CHRISTINE."

I felt sick at heart in my pity for the poor boy. "And where are you going?" I asked, as he mounted. "To find her," he answered, and disappeared in the darkness.

I will not attempt to describe the particulars of tbe painful task which was mine in the morning. I will not dwell upon the despair and desolation which thenceforward blackened two hright and happy households in Glanzdorf. I will only say that neither Otto Bernard nor Christine Hesler were ever seen again in their native place, and that their fate remains to this day a mystery in the little Tyrolean village. The curtain which then fell over their lives was, however, lifted again for me when the last scene of the tragedy was played. Others besides myself witnessed tbat sceue, and will doubtless remember it, but, until now, I alone have known the incidents that led to it.

Nearly five years after the events narrated above I was in Paris. Foremost among the sensations of that sensational city was a woman of infamous repute but of surpassing beauty and talent, who was known as Clotbilde. She had lately leapt like a glorious comet into the firmament of the Parisian demi-monde, and had taken the gay capital hy storm. Nothing was known of her past history, though there were several who were confident they had seen her in other places, under different names, and in various circumstances. One recognized in her the former companion of a Russian prince, another had seen her break the bank at ths gaming tables of Monaco, a third was confident that she was the same who had infatuated and nearly ruined an Austrian Arch-duke. All we positively knew of her, however, was that she was an adventuress, as beautiful as she was unscrupulous and as accomplished as she was cruel. For the moment she eclipsed every other Parisian queen, not only of her own world, but also of society proper. She held a kind of court of her own, which eveu the most distinguished men thought it a privilege to bs permitted to attend, and such were the charm of her wit and the power of her fashion, that her latest bon mot or style of coiffure became tbe rage the day after she had uttered the one or worn the other. It is no wonder, then, that when a French officer of my acquaintance offered to introduce me to the court of this Lais for an evening, I eagerly accepted.

The splendors of that reception and the hrilliancy of the company assembled it is unnecessary to describe here. One thing alone need hs noted, and that is that I, like so many others, felt sure, the moment I had set eyes on the glorious beauty of Clothilde, that I had seen her somewhere before. But where, for the life of me I could not tell; yet her face was in my memory, as a word that cannot he uttered is sometimes on the point of the tongue.

At midnight, according to custom, all the guests departed but those who had been invited to supper. I was one of these, and thsre were ten others. Hitherto I had been greatly surprised at the decorum and refinement which had characterized the proceedings. I hegan to think that Clothilde had been maligned. But at supper I soon saw that this was not the case. As the wine flowed faster and faster, the repast degenerated into an orgie; the wit became highly flavored with coarseness; ths court of Lais was transformed into the temple of Astarte, and Clothilde and her companions into Bacchanals and Bacchantes.

The disgraceful scene was at its hight when a servant entered with the announcement that a young man wished to see the hostess. The company stared at such an impudent request, hut Clothilde only laughed and said: "Another victim, I suppose; show him in. We will have some sport, ladies and gentlemen." Then she threw herself back in her chair, all flushed and disheveled, but more beautiful than ever, and, with a cruel smile on her red lips, waited to laugh this presumptous visitor to scorn for the amusment of her guests.

So intent was I on looking at her that I did not turn when the door opened; but as it did so, all the color suddenly faded from her face, and, rising slowly from her chair, with both hands pressed tightly over her heart, she hoarsely whispered, "Otto?" I turned. It was, indeed, Otto Bernard. But how changed!

Supporting himself by the back of a chair, he said, in a low and distinct voice: "At last, Cbristine!" Then, stretching out his arms, he cried aloud, "I have found you; will you come to me, Christine?" She had seemed frozen with horror, but at these words she staggered toward him, hut, as he advanced a step, she recoiled, and, stretching out her hand to keep him off, moaned out, "No, no! It cannot, must not be! Otto, it is too late. I am unworthy of you. I am lost forever!" "Christine, will you come?" he repeated. In the moment while he spoke she resumed her calmness with an incredible effort of will. "Never," she said, in a cold, dry voice: "Never! Begone, and leave me to the fate I have chosen." "It is enough," replied the man, in the same voice. There was a flash of steel, a cry of horror from every throat, and Otto fell to tbe floor. Christine had swooned where she stood, and the silken folds of her dress were stained hy the life-blood of her old lover.

I saw Clothilde once more, three days later. It was at the Morgue, and Otto lay hy her side.

The Burmese troops have lately heen drilled hy a French officer, but the operation as yet seems to have heen hardly a success. A correspondent of the Rangoon Times, who has just returned from Mandalay, was present at a drill parade of the troops, and was shocked at the spectacle he witnessed. The French officer who was drilling them failed altogether in his endeavors to induce them to attend to his orders. Every time he uttered a word of command torrents of abuse were showered upon him, mingled with such remarks as "Bah-loup tailay kullah," or "What are you doing, foreigner?" The Frenchman was mounted about fifty paces in front of the parade, and, being unahle to speak a word of Burmese, was trying to drill in French. This increased his difficulties; and at last he thoroughly lost his temper, his rage finding vent in a volley of "sacrés." The Burmese troops, on being addressed in this fashion, became highly indignant, and reported the conduct of the French officer to tbe Minister of War, who told them to take it easy and not to attend drill until further orders. This settlemeut of the difficulty appears to have given satisfaction to all concerned; for hy the latest accounts the Frenchman is also "taking it easy," and declares that so long as he gets his pay he prefers doing nothing to attempting to effect an impossihility —namely, instructing the Burmese troops in their drill.

GEN. GRANT AT THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

The merchants of the city received Gen. Grant on Wednesday, more than six hundred being present. The General was escorted to the President's seat by Messrs. Gen. C. Perkins and M. P. Jones. The latter introduced the distinguished visitor, and Mr. Perkins made a brief, addressable address of welcome, which we are forced to omit for want of space. To this Gen. Grant made the following reply:

Gentlemen of the Chamber of Commerce and Board of Trade, San Francisco: I hardly know how to express my gratification at the kind and cordial reception you, and not only you, but the people in every place in the State and city that I have visited, have given me. There is no question but that the prosperity of the country depends upon the class of people you gentlemen represent. It requires just such people as we see here to make it profitable for a man to labor with his hands; also, to make profits for the whole nation. Anybody who has been over the world as I have has seen the degradation to which laborers have fallen without some hand to guide them into the right course. In other countries the laborer is sunk far below the poorest and most abject citizen of this country. We have not a healthy person in America, who is willing to work, who is not better off than the best laborer in any other country. We need not be jealous or jealous of any country in the world.

THE HAWAIIAN SUGAR CROP.

By the arrival of the Pacific Mail steamship Zealandia, from Australia via Honolulu, we are favored with the following letter from our esteemed Island correspondent, dated Honolulu, September 29, 1879:

The bulk of our sugar crop for this year is about in, although there are a few plantations that grind through the year. The prospects for next year's crop is very fair, and will point towards 40,000 tons for 1880—commencing about the 1st of December next. This will show quite an increase over the current year. The following year we also look for the increase—say 50,000 tons—which will be about our limits under present prospects. There are now 57 plantations or mills, 31 of which have started since the Treaty went into operation—say two in 1876, thirteen in 1877, fifteen in 1878, and one this year. So many new enterprises, started in so short a time, have used up the surplus capital, and money is scarce and the rate of interest high. The importation of sugar machinery alone, both from Europe and the United States, is no ordinary item for a small country. This is also at an end for a time. The importations from the United States, largely from the Pacific side, are fearfully heavy, and still continue. This has demoralized the Exchange market, and it is difficult to get sight drafts on San Francisco, or, in fact, time exchange. Outfights are scarce, and will be for two months to come; after that we hope to begin to turn our balance to the Hawaiian side of the account."

The Savings Banks are lending money more freely. Altogether, there is more confidence expressed, and consequently loans are made more easily, but there is no change in our quotations, the business in securities for the past week being entirely of a retail character.

FUNERAL OF CHAS. H. WILLIAMS.

The obsequies of this gentleman, who met with so strange and terrible an end on Sunday last, were celebrated on Thursday in a manner that showed how large a circle of friends had been reached by the dreadful blow. The church was decorated with an extraordinary profusion of flowers and wreaths, and the coffin was a pyramid of tuberoses and maiden's-hair ferns. There was hardly standing-room in the edifice, and the faces of the vast throng expressed grief and sorrow, entirely in sympathy with the soul-touching notes of the choir and the solemn organ-music, the requiem of the friend, taken from them in the strength of his manhood, and changed as in the twinkling of an eye.

SKELETON SKETCHES.--No. 9.

Padre Bruno.

[BY T. A. HARCOURT.]

I.

One beautiful moonlight night in the year 1815, when Sola was Governor of California, two men were walking up and down together outside the wall of the Presidio of San Diego. The elder was a man of herculean stature and handsome as a Greek god. His skin was of a pale, olive tint, his features were regular, and his dark brown eyes, though sad in expression, were singularly beautiful. His age may have been thirty-five or possibly forty. His face was smoothly shaven, and he wore the eombre habit of the Franciscan order, for Padre Bruno was the junior priest of San Diego Mission. His companion was a little man, and looked still smaller hy the side of tbe gigantic priest. His face, though handsome enough in itself, wore a weak and irresolute expression. He was the Comandante of the Presidio, a captain of Mexican cavalry, and for his age, which was not more than twenty-eight, a successful man in his profession; hut for all his showy uniform and military strut, Don Mattias cut a sorry figure heeide the majestic friar. The officer was speaking earnestly, and the Padre listened dreamily, as he strode hack and forth with his eyes fixed on the ground.

"You will do this thing for me, then, Father?" said the young man, looking anxiously up into the abstracted face of his companion. "I cannot tell whether she loves me or not. Surely I am a good enough match for her"—and his strut increased as he continued—"for her, an orphan, fortuneless and friendless"—

"No, not friendless," interrupted the priest, in a deep and mellow, hut constrained voice, still keeping his eyes upon the ground.

"Well, I did not mean that, Father," the soldier continued hastily, seeming to catch some faint sign of warning in Padre Bruno's tone. "What I meant to say was that she has no future and that I can give her one." For the first time the Franciscan lifted his eyes, and for a moment fixed them on the speaker. Their soft, sad, dreamy look was changed to one of mingled indignatiou, contempt and pain. But it was only for an instant, and his gaze was on the ground again as he answered: "Yes, it is true. You can promise her a future. And perhaps you are right, since you are not sure that she loves you—and are afraid to ask her—to make me your amhassador, or, rather, spy." His voice tremhled a little, as he continued, after a pause: "I have known Marina from childhood. You know I came here from Spain very soon after her father, the former Comandante, consigned her, on his death-hed, to the care of Padre Pedro, my senior here. Padre Pedro's ill health has left her much in my charge. I love her—as a father. Her welfare is mine. I will do my hest to urge your suit."

"What a strange fellow Padre Bruno is," said the Captain to himself, as he walked joyfully toward his quarters. "I should he afraid to ask a favor of him if it could he helped. But she has repulsed me more plainly than he knows of, and his intercession is my only chance."

For a moment the priest stood looking after him, with a lurid light in his eyes that ill-hecame his peaceful calling. Nay, he took one stride after the retreating figure, with clenched and uplifted hand. Tben, turning abruhtly, he folded his arms across his hreast, and walked slowly toward the Mission.

As Jacoh wrestled with the Angel, so did Padre Bruno wrestle with the Tempter on his knees that night. And he conquered.

II.

It was the beginning of the afternoon, when all living things in those drowsy old days took their siesta; hut Padre Bruno walked alone among the flowers and the fruit in the little garden which he and his colleague called tbeir own. If he wished to he undisturbed, he could not have chosen a hetter time and place. None might enter here without permission, at any hour; hut now, when the very hirds and insects seemed to imitate man in taking their midday nap, the priest was more safe from intruders than if it had heen midnight. But his manner showed plainly that he expected somehody, and he had not long to wait. The silence was suddenly broken by the voice of a woman singing softly, and round a turn in the garden-walk the singer soon came into sight. She was a girl of sixteen or seventeen, tall and willowy, hut fully and perfectly formed. Her heauty—and a marvelous heauty it was—was of the purest Spanish type, except the eyes, which, though they looked hlack in some lights, were really a deep violet.

Padre Bruno did not lift his eyes wben he heard her voice until he had muttered a prayer for strength. Then, as she approached, he said: "I fear I have rohhed you of your siesta, Marina."

"Of course you have, Father," answered the girl, laughing; "and why did you do it?"

"I wished to speak with you alone. I have something important to say to you." The smile died from Marina's face and gave place to a look of anxious wonder. "Well, Father?" she said inquiringly.

"Marina," he went on, "you know that I have your welfare at heart; I may speak to you plainly, may I not?" She only answered with her eyes. "Then, Marina, tell me truly, are you in love?"

Had the priest foreseen the effect of this question he would have put it less abruptly. The hlood rushed to the girl's face and then left it as suddenly. She gazed at him with a strange look in her eyes, a look of mingled terror and yearning, as if something she had long feared, yet hoped for, had come at last. If he had not supported her with his strong arms she would have fallen.

Padre Bruno seemed scarcely less agitated, and a look of intense pain swept over his face. Yet he had obtained an unmistakeable answer to his question, and much more easily than he had expected. Was it the answer he had desired?

"She does indeed love him," he muttered hetween his teeth. Still, he would hear it from her lips. "I see, then, that you are in love, Marina; tell me, is it not so?"

She lifted her eyes to his with the same look of terror and yearning, as if she wished to move from his side hut could not. Then, yielding utterly, she suddenly threw her arms ahout his neck, hid her face upon his breast, and, sohbing as if her heart would hreak, moaned out: "God help me! O, Bruno, you know that I love."

In an instant the whole truth flashed upon him, though he had never dreamed of it before. He could have held her there forever. He could have torn off the black rohe which condemned him to be desolate all his days. He could have lifted her in his arms and proclaimed his love in the face of a horrified world. But with a mighty effort he controlled himself. His love he conld not help, hut he had not meant to tell her of it. She had mistaken his meaning, though she had guessed the truth. He must save her from this deadly sin at all hazards.

Affecting, then, to misunderstand her, he said gently, with his lips almost touching her tresses:

"My daughter, I am glad to hear this; hut Don Mattias doubted your love and asked me to counsel you. You will he happy as his wife, my child. He is a good man."

Slowly she lifted her head, and for a moment they looked into each other's eyes. Had the words "I love you!" heen written across his forehead, she could not have read his secret more plainly than she did in that instant, and, as she fell swooning to the ground, he knew that he had betrayed himself.

Old Padre Pedro was much concerned when his ward was horne senseless into his little house. "The sun has been too hot for her,' said Padre Bruno; "she should not have gone into the garden."

While Marina was still hovering between life and death, the Comandante was killed on an Indian expedition. When Marina hecame a nun, they said how true she was to the memory of her lover. Padre Bruno was soon afterward transferred to a Mission in Central Mexico. But why the sun had been so hot in the garden that day, no one ever knew.

GENERAL GRANT'S VISIT

To the Country Seat of J. C. Flood, Esq., at Menlo Park.

After reviewing the marked progress in building operations during the last few months in and around San Francisco and its suhurhs, we turn our attention to the palatial residence which was commenced nearly two years ago for Mr. Flood at Menlo Park. The scenery in this locality had lost none of its hreadth and grandeur of landscape since our last review of the advancement of the works on this nohle edifice; on the contrary, the autumnal tints having commenced to appear, seemed, if possihle, to enhance its heauty and the chaste character of the design selected hy its owner. We will risk our reputation for judgment that a more appropriate style of huilding could not have heen chosen for this Californian paradise. The interior elevations heing all hut completed, with their crested roofs and richly formed turrets and chimney-caps, terminating with the main central tower 150 feet in hight, produce such a delightful blending of a perfect sky line with the natural ohjects that the inward feelings of the beholder become almost intuitively emotional and moved with admiration at the splendid picture. The achievement of results like these in architecture we hold to he the work only of the truly educated architect, and have, so far as we can remember an instance, either here or in Europe, seldom attained to so skillful and successful a treatment as in this rural retreat. The grounds are heing laid out with like grandeur, with wide serpentine roads and lahyrinthine walks, and terrace walls surmounted with statuary. The magnificent masses of polished black granite at the four entrances to the mansion also form a most attractive feature, particularly in the Porte cochere, most of the stones being monolithic and weighing some ten tons. The large fountain, sixty feet in diameter, is also huilt of the same polished material, whose peculiarity rests—as in the imperishable Egyptian granites of the pyramids—in the formation of that hard suhstance geologically known as horn hlende, which is its chief component part. This granite is a new discovery in our State, and has heen introduced, for the first time, in Mr. Flood's residence. It is found near Penryn, Cal., and the quarry is owned hy G. Griffith, who has performed all this work at Menlo Park. The inside finish of the mansion is heing executed in a most superh manner, and consists principally of satin wood, mahogany, German walnut, rosewood, hird's-eye maple, white bolly, English and American oak, and primavera, the whole French polished and constructed in the hest style of workmanship of cabinet work. Certain of the rooms and all the halls on the first floor will he inlaid in various designs of hard wood, the entrances heing of choice marhles designed in mosaic patterns; the whole of this work so far contracted for, including the exterior, has heen performed hy the Santa Clara Mill and Lumher Co., of San Jose, and shows an enterprise little known among the lumhermen of this coast, all the choice wood having heen ohtained at great cost from the Eastern market, and doing great credit to them in the excellence of its selection. The ventilation, heating and drainage are very perfect; the latter is conveyed through iron stone-glazed pipes the distance of ahout half a mile in a remote part of the estate, and thoroughly trapped. A more healthful outlook can scarcely be imagined for the future occupants of this princely ahode. The stables, with all necessary accessories for twenty horses, are large and commodious, and placed some two hundred yards distant from the residence, are now approaching completion, and, unlike buildings of this kind, help to add heauty thereto as forming, in costliness and style of architecture, a portion of the whole, amidst this naturally picturesque scenery. Wending our way through the estate further toward the hay, we come upon the race track, heyond which is a heautiful artificial lake, with islets formed therein, plentifully supplied with choice game fish. A magnificent conservatory, we hear, is one of the future works to he projected, as also water and gas works; material for the latter having heen placed at a convenient distance from the huildings. It will take another year before these vast works are completed and made ready for furnishing and interior decoration. General Grant, who paid Mr. and Mrs. Flood and family a visit on last Wednesday, at their present residence at Menlo Park, expressed in unmeasured terms his admiration of the new huilding, and the park scenery of the locality.

If the difficulties of transport can he overcome, California fruit-growers are invited to seek a field for their produce in the manufacture and export of jam. In Kent one manufacturer alone is reported as hoiling up last season the astounding mass of 2,000 tons. This extraordinary quantity was chiefly made up of black and red currants, raspberries, damsons and plums; and to contain it seven harge loads of jars were required, in sizes capahle of holding from 4 to 14 lhs. each. The retail price of such jam is about 7d. to 9d. per pot, containing ahout one pound of jam. Private householders are able to make their own jams for less than half the retail price, even with the disadvantages of buying small quantities hoth of sugar and fruit. Beyond this, home-made jam does not receive adulteration, and has equal parts of sugar and fruit.

INCLOSURES FROM LONDON.

Mrs. Langtry and the Prince is almost the only topic of talk we ve on hand at present, and those helpless souls who cannot rise to a pro-r appreciation of the Bathybian protoplasm, to the wooing of the Span-h King, or to the interesting little quarrel between Germany and Russia out the Baltic Provinces, have started a bit of scandal for themselves out one of the most distinguished of the professional beauties. It is d that the complaisant husband—and he is very complaisant—has filed bill of divorce against his wife in Sir James Hannen's Court with the me of an illustrious personage among the co-respondents. The story it-f is old—I heard it at least six weeks ago, and I believe I gave you a nt of it at the time; hut it was reproduced, with names and circum-nces, a few days ago in one of the newspapers of the gutter, and now ry one is whispering it about. I do not believe there is the slightest ndation for the story, for the lady, with all her beauty, is circumspec-n itself, and her hushand must know this as well as any ono of us. t uneasy lies the head that owns one of these professional beauties, l perhaps if men were wise they would recognize, with Talleyrand, t there is no domestic bliss like that which arises from the conscious-s that your wife is neither witty nor superlatively beautiful. Mr. ngtry, Mr. Wheeler and Mr. Cornwallis West can hardly take up a wspaper without finding a paragraph, generally an impertinent one, ut their wives, and their wives' portraits present themselves to them in ry photographer's window from a group of actresses and hallet-dancers.

The London World—a good authority—says: With reference to certain ndalous rumors, which have obtained perhaps a wider and more per-ious currency abroad than at home, implicating certain illustrious and l-known persons, it may simply he said that these are absolutely, wan-ly and utterly false. Of this fact any one can convince himself who es the trouble to inspect the perfectly accessible lists of a certain Court.

A rise in any one article of prime necessity is a serious matter to usands of people, and he is a public benefactor who shows the way to emedy for such a state of things. This is why Breeze & Longhran, shington and Davis streets, call attention to their stock of Whittaker's w England Mild Cured Breakfast Bacon and Boneless Breakfast Bacon. e reputation of these hrands is second to none, and the only direct way reak down the combination now existing in this market to keep up prics of California Bacon, is to supply yourself with Whittaker's cele-ed, which is offered at lower rates. The Breakfast is put up in white vas, in strips weighing four or five pounds, and is the very best article put up in this line. "PLEASURE'S WAND."

"We Obey no Wand but Pleasure's."--Tom Moore.

California Theater.—Miss Cavendish is an actress who comes very near heing a great one. She possesses intellectuality of mind and magnetism of person, is natural in speech and manner, and avoids relying on exaggeration or sensationalism for effects. Her voice is of a pleasing timbre, and her intonation very pure. On first acquaintance the strong English accent is disagreeahle, hut this feeling gradually wears off. The character of "Miss Gwilt" is, perhaps, one of the most difficult to properly represent on the stage. Wilkie Collins delights in mystifying his readers, and in the creation of this woman he has succeeded admirably in this respect. As played hy Miss Cavendish, the governess is a woman whose existence is a continual hattle hetween the good and evil in her. It is the picture of a heing whose every vicious instinct and impulse is temporarily smothered under the workings of a true and honest love for an honest man. When this influence ceases to exist, under ths belief of "Midwinter's" death, wickedness hecomes oncs more paramount, to he succeeded with utter despair at his re-appearance. Miss Cavendish does the hest acting in the last two acts, when the hard side of her character is preeminent, and the interview with her hushand and the scene with "Dr. Downward" were acted in a truly magnificent manner. Keene did very well in the first act, hut hecame, as usual, too melodramatic in tbe stronger scenes. Pope Cooke was an admirable "Dr. Downward." Plausihle and smooth toward the dramatis personæ, the rascal was plainly indicated to the audience heneath the hypocritical suavity displayed. Miss Harold deserves a word for fresh, pert representation of "Miss Milroy." The rest of the cast was excellent, harring the part of "Captain Manuel," which was outrageously hurlesqued hy John Wilson. As Miss Cavendish will appear in several characters, a more extended notice of her great qualities is reserved. On Monday Lady Clancarty will he produced.

Baldwin's Theater.—The production of the same play, equally well-acted, as a whole, at two theaters simultaneonsly, ought to excite the interest of theater-goers. That this is not a fact evidences that our public has hecome satiated with theatricals through an excess of supply. At the same time there are strong counter-attractions of a peculiar nature. Ths preparations for the forthcoming Authors' Carnival, which is engrossing the attentions of all the ladies, the walking matches that attract from all classes, and the great social event at Belmont on Wednesday, all these causes will explain the paucity of attendance hestowed upon the different theaters. Miss Jeffreys-Lewis's "Miss Gwilt" is conceived in a slightly different way from Miss Cavendish's, and not in a manner that the former lady's general style of acting would indicate. The virtuous side of the character has the upper hand; the display of tenderness toward "Midwinter" heing excessively womanly and honest. With her, vice seemed to he a matter of regret and remorse. In the great scene with her hushand, where he overwhelms her with reproaches at her perfidy, her humiliation is meek and lowly. Miss Lewis's idea of the character appears more natural to life, but, as a piece of acting, lacks the artistic finish, the talented elahoration and minute detail of stage-husiness noticeahls in Miss Cavendish's rendition. Mr. O'Neill is a more reserved, intense "Midwinter" than Mr. Keene. He fails, though, to put sufficient force in the more dramatic passages. The two impersonations are, in their respective styles, very creditahle. Mr. Jennings' "Dr. Downward" is well acted, hut the true nature of the man is too apparent. His honesty has the ring of the counterfeit coin, and would not pass current. Mr. Barrows is an intelligent and natural "Capt. Manuel," though his make-up is decidedly exaggerated. There is no reason for and twenty against this rascal having the looks of a hushwhacker. On Monday, Byron's The Girls will he produced, and on this occasion Miss Carey will make her reappearance.

Standard Theater.—John E. Owens is a comedian as there are hut few on our stage. There is, in fact, hut one other name to he coupled with his, and that is Joseph Jefferson. Owens elaborates all the details of a character to the extreme limit, making the impersonation perfect in all respects. To the gift of natural humor he adds the knowledge of all stage tricks and artifices. Every point is made to tell without tbe slightest effort. In facial expression Owens' resources seem to be illimitahle. These remarks are applied to this excellent comedian in general. As far as "Solon Shingle" is concerned, his acting of the old farmer seems to have deteriorated. At times the too minute elahoration of hy-play, although thoroughly artistic, hecomes tedious. And he has of late years given to the character a peculiar gait and manner more indicative of city intoxication than of provincial awkwardness. The douhle hill of Everybody's Friend and Solon Shingle is a little too long for one sitting, especially with the heavier piece at the end. All of Mr. Owens' well-known characters are announced for this engagement—a rare treat. Miss Stanhope deserves more than ordinary mention for her performance of "Mrs. Swandown." It was arch and vivacious, and full of naturalness and ease. Manager Kennedy received a cordial welcome, and played "Felix Featherly" very well, although, apparently, with a certain amount of nervousness. The houses have heen large, and things seem to indicate a very successful season.

Bush Street Theater.—This theater is for the present closed, while undergoing extensive ameliorations. Orchestra chairs are being placed in lieu of the uncomfortahle henches; a new stage is heing huilt, with a new proscenium and hoxes, and the entrance will he enlarged. These are all very necessary improvements, particularly that of a new entrance. As at present existing, the means of exit are outrageously dangerous and should have heen condemned ere this. The date of the re-opening will he announced hereafter. As the first attraction, the Colville Folly Troupe will he presented.

German Theater.—The German Company produced, last Sunday, The Children of Captain Grant, with the same scenery and accessions as used during the week hy the regular California Theater management. It was well acted, and particular mention is due to Mrs. Witt, and Messrs. Freeman and Urhan. These artists fairly outdid themselves in their respective characters. To-morrow evening Moser's comedy, Haroun-al Raschid and His Mother-in-Law will he played, for the first time in the United States. This is said to he a most amusing Lustspiel.

Vienna Garden.—The Ladies' Orchestra continues to give its nightly concerts. This is sufficient attraction to keep the place filled to repletion. The proprietors are courteous and obliging toward their patrons, but do not give them enough air. The ventilation is defective, and, as this is a matter easily remedied, should be attended to immediately.

Herold's Concert.—The opening concert of this season's series drew a comparatively large audience, giving promise that Mr. Herold will bs this year the recipient of mors puhlic patronage than heretofore. The change to Baldwin's Theater is a wise one, hut a little more light than was turned on Wednesday afternoon is ahsolutely necessary. As it was then, a state of semi-darkness prevailed which was dispiriting and tiresome. Ths orchestra, which is suhstantially the same as last year, bas not as yet got down fairly to work, and was a little unsteady. F. Hiller's symphony, in E minor, constituted the piece de resistance, and was fairly played. The light selections were Boccherini's Minuetto, for strings, with mutes, and the popular craze, Michæli's Turkish Patrol. This last trifle is heing played lately ad nauseum. Mr. Herold's efforts to give us orchestral music deserve support, and it is a lasting shame that such has not heretofore heen the case.

Chit-Chat.—It will please all of Harry Edward's friends and admirers to know that he has heen engaged for the coming season at Wallack's Theater. He hopes to pay a flying visit to this city next May.——Bartley Camphell is the coming American dramatist. His My Partner is an immense success in New York, and The Golley Slave has just been enthusiastically received in Philadelphia.——Pinafore is heing played throughout the Soutb.——The Banker's Daughter is to he done at the Court Theater, London.——Marie Gordon has been divorcsd from her hushand, John T. Raymond.——Genevieve Ward has gone into retirement on account of the death of her father.——Frank Mayo, disgusted with his London failure, gives up his engagements in the English country towns, and returns at once to America.——Theodore Thomas is giving orchestral concerts in New York.——It is definitely settled that Miss Fanny Morant is no longer a memher of Union Square Company. Mrs. Phillips takes her place.——John Gilhert, wbo has been very ill, is much better, and his recovery no longer a matter of douht.——Philadelphia says of Ella Wilton: "She not only lacks force, hut acts without experience, and is mechanical in manner."——The Vienna theaters seldom present anything hut adaptations from the French. The pieces, however, are called original.——The author of "Baby Mins" is about to hring a suit against Ditson & Co. for $20,000.——There is a woman in a variety show in ths West who plays selections from Pinafore on two hanjos at once!

PUBLIC HEALTH.

There was a considerable increase last week of tbe mortality from zymotic diseases, hut, on the whole, there is an improvement as compared with former years. Typhoid fever of a mild type still prevails, and now and again mild sore throats are made serious hy sewer gases. As cold weather approaches we find more deaths from consumption. Aneurism is fearfully common in San Francisco. There were two deaths last week and there are already three this. Heart disease is also remarkably fatal to many in the prime of life. Both are probahly due to evil habits rather than to defective sanitary arrangement. Young children are beginning to suffer from cold and the variable temperature. Out of 72 natural deaths last week 34 were of children under five years of age. The mortality over 60 years is augmented hy the same causes.

SPORTING ITEMS.

Rowing.—As fixed, the St. George and Columbia Rowing Clubs' Regatta took place last Saturday afternoon, course two miles, with turn. Weather pleasant, wind light, water smooth for the first two events, and lumpy for the remainder. The first race was the principal contest of the day, being the four-oared shell race for the McKinlay Challenge Cup. The entries were:

The Pioneer R. C.—1, A. Tobin (bow); 2, M. Sullivan; 3, J. Sullivan; 4, M. J. Murphy (stroke). The St. George R. C.—1, H. N. Wallace (bow; 2, C. R. Browne; 3, D. Browne; 4, R. D. Girvin (stroke). A very fair start was made, each crew getting well away at the word "Go." For the first three quarters of a mile the boats were bow-and-bow; then the St. George forged ahead a length, but a bad turn at the stake enabled the Pioneer to close the gap and take a lengthy lead on the home-stretch, which, however, they were permitted to retain but a short distance, as the St. George, by a vigorous spurt, again came to the fore, and succeeded in holding a quarter to half a length's lead till about a quarter of a mile from home, where the Pioneer took the lead, crossing the winning-line two lengths ahead. The race was the closest and most exciting that we have had since amateur racing was commenced on this coast. The St. George were evidently overmatched in skill and strength, and it was only by great exertion, through sheer determination not to be beaten, that they succeeded in making so good a showing. The Pioneer crew row well together, and the style of their stroke-oar is worthy of imitation. If this crew holds together for another season, the probabilities are that their club will become the final possessors of the cup, this being the second time in succession that it has won it. The time of the Pioneer crew in this last race was 13 m. 5s.; the St. George, 13 m., 17 s., both comparing very favorably with the winning times of most Eastern crews.

Junior Single Sculls—Columbia R. C.—W. I. Casey, J. E. George. St. George R. C.—W. A. Wilson. Won by Casey, 16 m., 37 s.; George second.

Second-class four-oared shell. Pioneer R. C.—1, J. J. Whelan (bow); 2, B. Oliver; 3, F. Notting; J. Foster (stroke). St. George R. C.—1, C. J. Okell (bow); 2, I. C. Friedlander; 3, E. T. Huhhack; 4, J. G. Lucas (stroke). Course, one mile straight away. Won easily by the Pioneer. In connection with this race, we would make the suggestion to the management of the St. George Club that it does not reflect credit to their club to enter an unpracticed crew for a representative race, and especially when practice is quite feasible.

Senior single sculls. Columbia R. C.—T. W. Fenn. Pioneer R. C.—J. Sullivan. Ariel B. C.—L. Stevenson. Won by Sullivan, 16 m., 53½ s.; Fenn a good second.

Four-oared lapstreak; Ariel B. C.: 1. Fred Smith (how); 2, W. H. Browney; 3, J. C. Cotsford; 4, W. H. Wall (stroke). St. George R. C.—1, H. N. Wallace (how); 2, C. R. Browne; 3, D. Browne; 4, R. D. Girvin (stroke); won by the Ariel Club, 14 min. 34 sec.

Second-class harge; Dolphin S. and R. Club: 1, E. Kehrlein; 2, E. Lutgens; 3, L. Schroeder; 4, E. Peterson (stroke). Pioneer R. C.—1, J. J. Whelan; 2, B. Oliver; 3, F. Notting; 4, J. Foster (stroke). St. George R. C.—1, W. Wilson; 2, P. J. Cadogan; 3, J. Watson; 4, E. T. Huhback (stroke). Won by the Dolphin; the Pioneer a good second; the St. George anywhere. We cannot understand why any club, having the remotest respect for its rowing reputation, should allow such a crew as this St. George Barge crew to figure in public. Judging from their style—especially that of No. 2—and the commotion they caused in the waters of the creek, one would suppose that they had learnt their rowing by ferry application to a churn splasher. We would take this opportunity to point out to the rowing element generally that it would be to the interest of their sport for them to endeavor, in their public races, to display as near as possible, perfection in form and condition. By so doing, rowing would become to be regarded by our community at large with respect, interest and intelligence. The management of the regatta deserves nothing but praise. We would like to suggest here to our leading dailies, that in future, when they desire to have an account of any of our regattas in their columns, that they employ reporters who can, at least, give a just account of what takes place. Ignorance is but a poor plea for injustice. Some of the accounts of this regatta in our dailies were evidently not taken from facts, but from the erroneous mental wanderings of juvenile aspirants to repertorial honors.——There is a rumor that a well-known patron of sport intends offering a silver challenge cup, open to amateurs, in four-oared harges.——A race between the Golden Gate and Pioneer clubs, in harges, is talked of.——The Dolphin Club, elated with their late victory, think of getting a four-oared shell, to compete in the next race for the McKinlay Cup.

Pedestrianism.—The late six-day walk for men has proven that California pedestrians are the equal of any in the world. The ease with which P. McIntyre, the winner, made his distance of 500 miles, making his last mile in 5 minutes 25 seconds, shows that he could have put 550 on record. Carmichael, the second man, who had 478 miles to his credit, is quite new at the business, this being his first long walk. Scott, the third man, covered 455 miles, walking most of the distance, and could have done much better had he not thought the distance made in the last race a criterion to go by. Murdock came in fourth, with 430 miles. He, too, is a green hand, this being his first public walk. Chenowith fifth, with 412 miles, was put out of the race for fourth place by an injudicious use of liniment, which penetrated the skin and poisoned his blood to such an extent that serious results are likely to ensue. The only trouble connected with the match was caused by a disreputable scoundrel named Macfarlane, who personated Santos, and endeavored to swindle the other competitors by wearing and walking with his clothes and number while the real Santos was resting. For conniving at the trick Santos was ruled off the track and Macfarlane incontinently fired out of the hall——The six-day walk for ladies started last Wednesday, with all the contestants who had entered. So far the unknown ladies, who, by the way, have all good records (or say they have), do not show any wonderful speed. Miss Florence is the most graceful goer, and Miss Denman the fastest, but neither of them can compare with La Chapelle. Last week we selected Von Berg for first place, and see nothing to call for a change of opinion.——The two Apache Yuma Indians, who ran against time last Wednesday, failed to lower the record. Mootoomosonnic made 19 1-16 miles in two hours. His fastest mile was 5 min., 34 sec. We think he could make 20½ miles on a straight track.——The match between men and horses will commence next Wednesday at the Pavilion. Its novelty will ensure its success.

Coursing. The regular fall meeting of the California Pioneer Coursing Club will be held at Merced on Wednesday, November 5th. This meeting will be attended with considerable interest, as the stakes are only open to greyhounds belonging to members of the Club, which comprises all the best dogs in the State—many of them being imported stock. There will also be a run for the Puppy Stakes—that is, greyhounds under eighteen months old. These having never met before on the coursing-field, afford room for a large amount of speculation to pick out the winners. The stakes to be run for at this meeting are far in excess of what has ever before been offered. Mr. Bless has written to the Club that the people of Merced will give a liberal purse toward the prizes. The entrance fee has been fixed at ten dollars for the Old Dog Stake, and five dollars for the Puppy Stake, besides considerable added money given by the Club. The reports received by the Club concering the coursing-ground, and the abundance of hares, are very favorable for one of the finest meetings ever held on the coast. On Tuesday evening, October 21st, the Club will meet for the purpose of making all arrangements for the coursing.

Shooting.—In a late issue we spoke of the poor quality of Winchester cartridge shells. Further inquiry among sportsmen and gunmakers shows that we dealt too leniently with what one gentleman calls the biggest swindle ever puffed into notoriety. The universal complaint is that Winchester shells are very uneven in size—so much so that a No. 12 will often no more then enter a No. 10 gun. The heads are badly made, often dropping off before loading; and many sportsmen have spoilt their day's shooting by getting one of these wretched shells so jammed that no one but a smith could remove it.——Reports of good bags of quail come from all parts of the State.——We hear that ducks are rather scarce in San Joaquin and Sacramento counties.

Baseball.—The Hop Bitters of Rochester got an easy victory over the Californias last Sunday; score, 16 to 5.——Games to-morrow at Oakland: Cincinnati vs. California.——At Recreation Grounds: Hop Bitters vs. Knickerbockers.——The advent of the Eastern club, and the disgraceful way in which they have tried to prostitute the game to mercenary ends, will ruin baseball on this coast if not checked.——Nolan is reinstated by the League for obvious gate money reasons.——We advise our readers not to bet on Sunday's game at the Recreation Grounds, as we hear that lots of coin could be made by the Hop Bitters losing.

Swimming.—Dean, Williams, Catton and Melrose will compete for the Neptune Club medal to-morrow.——In Daily's absence his mantle seems to have dropped on Flemming's shoulders, for he pulled another drowner out last week.

Predictions.—The NEWS LETTER is the only paper on the Pacific Coast that has enterprise enough to ascertain the probable winners of sporting events and publish tips for the guidance of its readers' betting. In this we take considerable pride, but have still greater grounds for congratulation in the fact that so far all our predictions have turned out correct, and persons who followed our judgment have made considerable money. Amongst other notable winners that we have named are Edwards for the July walk, Callahan for a place in the same event, McIntyre for the late walk, Rowell for the Astley Belt, and LaChapelle in the six-day walk at Platt's Hall. It remains to be seen whether Von Berg, our selection for the ladies' contest, will win.

CETEWAYO.

New York, October 5th.—A cable dispatch to the New York Herald from Capetown, September 16th, via London October 5th, says: Cetewayo is a fine specimen of the noble savage—big, black, about fifty years of age, and standing nearly six feet high. He is well proportioned, has a fully-developed physical frame, and a good-natured, open face. He was accompanied to Capetown by four of his wives, four followers and a little girl. Major Poole speaks of the King's amiability, and says he gave very little trouble, except on one or two occasions, when he demanded to have an entire ox roasted for his daily meal. In Simon's Bay he was taken on board the Boadicea. There he saw the soldiers at drill, and expressed wonder and admiration, remarking: "Oh, I was only born yesterday. I am a mere baby. I never should have fought against such good men as the English, who intended to take away my country and govern it so much better than I could. They shot us to make us Christians. I ask pardon for shooting back at them." In an interview between the Premier of the Cape Government and King Cetewayo, the latter said: "I was the child of the British Government, and my father (the English) came to chastise me for wrong-doing. I caught the stick with which he wished to beat me, and broke it. I did wrong to fight him, and am punished. I am no longer King. The English are a great people. They will not kill those who fought with them. I hope the great Queen will pardon me, and allow me to return to my country, and give me place and permit me to build my kraal." When informed that the Government intended to treat him with consideration, in view of his valor and previous distinction, and that the English officials desired to supply him with everything necessary for his comfort, Cetewayo asked that ten more of his wives he sent for at once, giving the names of his favorites.

LATE TELEGRAMS.

St. Louis, October 7th.—Jay Gould arrived here to-day from Colorado, and left for the East by the Wabash Railroad to-night. In a consultation between himself, Benj. W. Lewis, President of the St. Louis, Kansas City & Northern, and A. L. Hopkins, of the Wabash, it was finally and for the first time determined that the two roads should be operated under one management, and that its headquarters should be in St. Louis. Mr. Gould was questioned regarding the situation of his affairs in Colorado, but would state nothing, except that he will not part with either the Colorado Central, South Park, or Denver and Rio Grande railroads, and that he means to stand by them.

LONDON, OCTOBER 6.—The following named governments have signified acquiescence in the new International code of ocean and river signals and the rule of road at sea: France, Germany, Russia, the United States, Italy, Spain, Portugal, Belgium, Denmark, Sweden, the Netherlands, Austro-Hungary, Greece and Chile. The new rules and signals are to come in use everywhere on the 1st of September, 1880. The regulations relate to the lights which vessels should carry at night, the sound signals which they shall make in a fog, their speed in fog, mist or snow, and the method of steering when approaching one another.

LONDON, October 8th.—The Times reports that two mills, which have been closed for some time, have reopened in Preston, though the depression is keenly felt throughout North Lancashire. Spinners and manufacturers are more hopeful than for months. Cotton is decreasing in price, and there is a prospect of large arrivals, and a better selling margin for manufactured goods is expected. In East Lancashire, too, the prospect is more hopeful. The Operatives' Association urges a general adoption of short-time working.

During the past week shipments of pig iron from Cleveland have been on a scale unprecedented during the history of the trade, averaging 5,500 tons daily. This was caused by the demand in the United States.

FACING THE HIGHTS.

Since the one song that we sing is What? Is this our strait? and truly
But a sad one! Is all lost?
Since the presence that we bring is Is hope given up and duly
Not a bad one: Shrived and crossed?
Must we—you, my heart, and I— Come, heart! Can not you and I
Stay to watch the world run by, Yon untrodden country try,
While we two sit back and cry— Rather than lie down and die—
Wearily? Drearily?

Seems to me, the hills glow greenly
Over there.
If our fate has served us meanly,
Can't we hear?
Let us trudge it, you and I,
Heart, to where these new lands lie;
Let us bid the old good-by—
Cheerily!

MY BOYHOOD'S LOVE.

My boyhood's love! I see her still,
All radiant in her girlhood's prime,
And feel again my pulses thrill
With joy, as in the olden time.

Again I walk the village street,
The lights upon the lamp-post shine,
I hear the coming of her feet,
And soon her arm is linked in mine.

Her hand I for a moment press,
As o'er the flags we slowly glide,
And then one lingering caress:
She's promised to become my bride.

'Tis strange these scenes can seem so new,
So long she's slumbered with the dead;
But time seems brief as I review
The moments which so sweetly sped.

She passed away, my boyhood's pride,
With youth's bright sunlight on her brow:
It seems but yesterday she died,
Though wide the space 'twixt then and now.

Perched on the pinnacle of age,
I look back through the misty years,
To read her life's half-written page;
The blank I fill up with my tears.

For me, these years have wrought decay.
Just look at these poor shrunken hands:
These once brown locks are turned to gray;
Spent, nearly, are life's flowing sands.

But, though I'm ripening for the tomb,
With cloudless faith I look above;
For there, in all her youthful bloom,
I'll meet again my boyhood's love.

THE LABOUCHERE-LAWSON TROUBLE.

In this country an assault committed by one editor upon another creates little sensation and no surprise. Such occurrences, disgraceful as they are, have become so common among us that we take them as an inseparable adjunct to journalism of the "live" sort. It must not be imagined on this account, however, that American editors are more sensitive to insult or more quick to resent it than their European brethren. On the contrary, the offensively personal character of our Press is such, that if an editor were to resent every insult hurled at him by his rivals, he would have a fresh fight on his hands for every hour in the day; consequently he has to sit down under nine hundred and ninety-nine insults out of every thousand, and content himself with throwing back mud for mud; but, if he makes the thousandth a casus belli, his broils are still too numerous to have any novelty about them. In England it is different. Personal journalism is, or has been till lately, unknown there, or, at least, unpracticed by any reputable journal. When, therefore, the editors of two such newspapers as the London Telegraph and Truth first abuse each other in their periodicals and then come to blows, the affair not only takes a great stir in England, but is thought of sufficient importance to be telegraphed to the four corners of the earth. It is greatly to be deplored that such a shameful quarrel should have come about, but there is little doubt as to who is most to blame. Henry Labouchere, the editor and proprietor of Truth, has, ever since he started his journal, indulged in a strain of personality which is often offensive, sometimes abusive, and always in bad taste. Bright, clever and readable as Truth certainly is, this feature has always been a stain upon its pages. Among the objects of its most bitter attacks was Levy Lawson, proprietor of the Telegraph, and any one who has read the incessant abuse to which he was subjected, cannot wonder that at last he resorted to the argumentum baculinum. But he, too, since his intimate relations with the New York Herald began, has not always been as careful of the dignity of the Press as might have been expected from the proprietor of the mightiest newspaper in the world; and if Labouchere had only slapped his face in return the Londoners would have been well pleased.

"THE NATION" ON GRANT'S RECEPTION.

General Grant's reception at San Francisco forms in every way a pleasing contrast to what it was at the beginning of the year feared it might be. Instead of being seized on the wharf by a crowd of political jobbers and converted into a Presidential candidate a year in advance of the election, partly in ostentatious preparation for civil war or some sort of illegal "salvation of society," and partly in covert preparation for the return to power of the corrupt gang who brought disgrace on the Administration, he has come back amidst the enthusiastic welcome of men of all parties, as a great general who has deserved well of his country and whose military talents have met with much respectful recognition abroad, and to whom a return to honored repose in his own land is very grateful. When one sees how passionately the people desire a hero whom they can admire and applaud simply and heartily as a man, and not as a candidate, and how desirable it is in the existing condition of American life that there should be such a hero in American society, it is difficult to find words of condemnation sufficiently strong for the plans, both past and present, for using this simple soldier as the head of the Machine, or as the pea with which the managers did their thimblerigging. Grant's true, as the war left him, was one of the national treasures. The politicians did their mortal best to destroy it, and bad he been an older man they would have succeeded. It has happily survived their suares, and nothing should now be done to keep it intact during the remainder of his life.—The Nation.

OUR HOTELS; WHAT THEY OUGHT TO BE, AND WHAT THE BALDWIN IS.

San Francisco is, perhaps, better supplied than any other city on this continent of its size with large hotels. These great hostelries are availed of as homes by the best of families. When decently and properly kept, they are agreeable to many of our most worthy people, who prefer their comforts to the worry and trouble of housekeeping. Hotel proprietors and managers owe it to themselves, to the houses they keep, and to the respectable families who patronize them, that decorum and a decent regard for the proprieties of life shall be strictly maintained. If hotels are to be firmly established as substitutes for homes, then they must be what a good home is, namely: decent, orderly and quiet. Their surroundings must be unobjectionable to the moral sense of the wives and mothers who make them their permanent abiding place. Whatever affects the social life of the people affects them in a most serious matter. In this view our hotels are properly subjects of criticism. They have, perhaps, hitherto enjoyed an immunity from adverse remark, on the part of the press, which they have not always earned. In short, the conclusion is forced upon us that the focussing of a little light upon those institutions will be for their own good and the public benefit. We begin that duty this week by making some very pointed allusions to the BALDWIN. Our attention has very frequently of late been called to that house. In it there are many families of wealth, of culture, and of the highest respectability. But it is also permitted to be frequented by people who have no business to be there. The reading-room is a place of resort for what are known as hotel loafers and sports, to an extent that almost excludes the better residents of the hotel. There are females in the house who sometimes excuse their late entries and exits as being necessitated because of their pretended connection with the theatrical profession, and whose constant companions are men of fast repute, who go to and from the rooms of these females at extraordinary hours of the night, leading other occupants of the house to believe that these women are fitting themselves for another and very different profession from that of a theatrical star. There are females occupying rooms in secluded portions of the house, in close proximity to the rooms of gentlemen, and whose behavior toward those gentlemen is highly calculated to mislead verdant people as to the nature of the legal relationship they bear to each other. There have been regular boarders among the females, whose escapades while in the house, and since, have been such as to stamp them as members of the Cyprian class, and they are now known as such by the fast men of the city, as well as by the keepers of the hotel. Men have been known to keep the house, as far up as the sixth floor, in a hawdy roar all night, when a proprietor or clerk could not be found to quell it. Bells have been rung by decent occupants at three o'clock in the morning, and the favor asked that quiet might be restored, but without effect. Rooms have been divested of their furniture during the absence of boarders, and without their knowledge or consent. A man was shot dead in his own room on a Sunday morning, on the principal floor of the hotel, and no one heard or knew anything about it until the body was found, several hours after the deed was done. If the principal floor is thus left to run itself to death or destruction, what may be imagined in regard to the upper ones? One of our well-known citizens was reported in a city print as being confined to his room in this hotel, by reason of injuries sustained from a cowhiding given to him by a lady boarder, whose name was stated. The clerk at the office saved his life by throwing up his arms and having them broken by hoodlum habitués of the place. Fast men, men about town, racing men, gamblers, who are on the lookout for country greenhorns, sports, hangers-on to the outskirts of the theater, loafers and bilks generally, crowd around the hotel, fill its reading room, make appointments in its parlors, aye, and in its more private places, loiter about its corridors and entrances, associate with manager and proprietor, and give it characteristics that are anything but in keeping with the decorum and good order essential to the home of good families. The Manager, McAhee, has been reported of in various positions, at one time as a carpenter and wheelwright, at another as the associate of the forger Saville, and as being intoxicated about the hotel in the presence of ladies. Some months ago a gentleman visitor there was swindled out of a considerable sum at a game well known to gamblers. It is rumored that something or other has given the Manager, McAhee, a strong hold on Baldwin, the proprietor, and that, as a consequence, the former does pretty much as he pleases with both the hotel and theater. Neither McAhee nor Baldwin are men of such experience, moral elevation, or gentlemanly instincts as to constitute them the kind of persons best fitted to run so important an institution. Men who cannot take care of their own social lives can hardly be expected to cater wisely and well for the social lives of others. It is one thing to keep a livery stable and quite another to keep a first-class hotel, as Baldwin must be made to know. He may take his Lennie McCormicks where he pleases, and even have it shamelessly told in courts where he takes them, but he owes it to his better class of patrons that neither he nor his congenial friends shall take their Lennies to the Baldwin—some people are now pronouncing it THE BAWDY.

THE AUSTRALIAN EXHIBITIONS.

The Exhibition at Sydney is likely to be considerable of a success, all nations being represented. The one, later on, at Melbourne, will undoubtedly surpass it. Not a little regret is felt that the United States have not made a greater show. Dr. Cox, who was sent as Commissioner from this country, is reported as not being the right man in the right place. He is old and slow, and evidently fails to realize the importance of his mission. This is so keenly felt by the American residents in the colonies that they have virtually superceded Cox, having organized and appointed a manager from among themselves, who is doing his best with such exhibits as come to hand. We do a large trade with the colonies, which might be greatly increased by availing ourselves to the utmost of this favorable opportunity to make known what we have to sell. There is yet time to make a fair display at the Melbourne Exhibition, and the people there are exceedingly desirous that we should. Our Government might well send a man-of-war with such articles as may now be hastily gathered together. This attention is only what other governments have shown, and would be highly pleasing to our trans-Pacific neighbors. A gentleman, eminently qualified to look after the matter, arrived from Melbourne by the Zealandia, and is already on his way overland to stir up the manufacturers East, as well as the authorities in Washington. The Hon. George C. Levy, C. B., who represented Australia at the Philadelphia, London and Paris Exhibitions, is the gentleman we allude to. After a necessarily hurried tour through this country, he proceeds to London.

"HURRAH! HURRAH! MERITT HAS COME."

The telegraphed account of the trials and rescue of Captain Payne's little command makes wonderfully exciting reading. Take it all in all, few episodes in Indian fighting exceed it in interest, which is saying not a little. The officers and men have covered themselves with glory, and deserve far greater rewards than, we fear, will be theirs. No mistakes were made, but everything appears to have been done at the right time and in the right way. Major Thornburg was selected because of his known prudence as an officer, and the result proves the wisdom of his selection. To his care and forethought the fact is owing that his command was not utterly taken by surprise and annihilated on the spot. As it was, he was drawn somewhat into the toils of the red devils, but that was unavoidable and owing to the nature of the country. Had he not been the cautious man he was, the plan to crush him was so well laid that he had otherwise been overwhelmed and his little band had bitten the dust. He lost his own life, but saved the lives of a large majority of his men. He died a brave man, in the faithful discharge of his duty. His sorrowing widow and little ones remain behind. Let us hope that a grateful country will see that they want for nothing, and that a better allowance will be less grudgingly provided than in the case of the brave Custer. The soldiers on the frontiers who preserve the lives of our countrymen against the deviltry of the Indians, have much hard fighting and but little glory. Theirs is not an enviable lot. The wonderful defense made by Captain Payne and his comrades during those six weary days and nights excites our warmest admiration. Payne, by the death of his superior, was suddenly left in chief command. It was a trying moment. The men were separated into two parties, and were distant from their wagon train of supplies. To bring these together was an immediate necessity. That it was accomplished successfully was, under the circumstances, a great feat. Surrounded by greatly superior numbers, the very best thing was done when barricades were erected, pits dug, and arrangements made for resisting a siege. This move saved the command. Who can fail to get excited in imagination over the weary waiting and dangers of those six days and nights until relief came? If evil had happened to the messenger who stole away in the darkness of the night, the little command had still been besieged. No wonder that, at the sight of relief, they broke out into cries of "Hurrah! hurrah! Meritt has come." The brave heroes were saved.

WATER RATES.

There is something very inequitable about our present method of collecting water rates. A few thousand taxpayers contribute the whole sum. The balance of the population pay nothing, property pays nothing, and the city pays nothing. The Water Company is entitled to reasonable interest upon its outlay. That is its just due, which may not honestly be denied to it. To attempt to force it to accept less would be to confiscate private property, which the law would not permit. There is such a thing as honesty toward a corporation, as well as toward an individual. A corporation is many individuals instead of one. It represents the rights of an aggregation of private individuals. To filch its just income is to rob the poor man, the widow and the orphans, who may be stockholders. Not that it is morally right to steal from the rich man any more than from them. We make the distinction merely to show that robbery of a corporation generally means robbery from classes that it is not very popular to steal from. We reach the conclusion that common honesty requires that the Water Company should be allowed a just income. The question is as to who ought to pay that income. Should it be paid solely by the ratepayer? The poor man with his little cottage has a considerable contribution to make. Montgomery Block, or even say Nevada Block, being made up of offices, pay little or nothing. Why should this be so? The existence of the water supply greatly reduces insurance, and, therefore, benefits all property, and hence property should pay for that advantage. That is the principle adopted by all other cities with which we are acquainted. Again, the city is a great consumer of water, and it is so for the benefit of the whole people. The streets are sprinkled, the sewers are flushed, the parks irrigated and the Fire Department supplied, and all this is done, not at the cost of the many but at the expense of the few. Some seventeen thousand taxpayers bear a burden that ought to be equitably distributed among all those who in any way are advantaged by the water supply. That is a principle so fair and just that it appears most extraordinary that it has not been sooner adopted. It is a marvel that housekeepers have not broken out into open rebellion against so grievous a wrong. The Legislature should apply the remedy.

PUBLIC POLICY.

It is understood that a suit is about to be entered to test the validity of the election of several of the Workingmen's candidates for office. It is claimed that the promise to return a portion of the legal salary amounts to bribery of the voters, and renders the election of the men who made the promise null and void. There are decisions in Missouri and Massachusetts which sustain this view of the law. A very great deal may be said against such promises. That they are corrupt in their inception, and demoralizing in their effect, is beyond a question. If this kind of bidding for office is once encouraged, there is no telling where it will stop. Unscrupulous men will promise anything in order to get their hands into the public treasury. That accomplished, they will sooner or later get even in some way or other. The people, through their representatives, have declared what the salaries shall be, and it is a violation of the law and an assault upon public policy to seek to lower them by indirection. Besides, if this kind of bribery of the voters is once commenced, where is it to stop? Candidates will be driven to the necessity of out-bidding each other in many scandalous ways. Men will be found to promise that gas shall be supplied for nothing, that water shall be as free as the air, and that fares and freights shall be reduced to the bare cost of running the locomotive. Indeed, this very evil had its beginning at the last election. The Workingmen were the first to hold their convention. They promised that fares and freights should be reduced. The Republicans came next, and were asked to name a specific reduction of twenty-five per cent. The New Constitution Party followed, and made the bold bid of a reduction of thirty-three and one-third per cent., and if there had been any more conventions to hold, the promises would doubtless have been still larger. Thus is a most demoralizing element injected into our political system. If it can be destroyed before further harm is done, we may well be thankful for the means by which that end is reached.

THE TOWN CRIER.

"Hear the Crier" "What tha devil art thou?
"One that will play tha devil, sir with you."

"He'd a sting in his tail as long as a flail,
"Which made him grow bolder and boldar."

A private telegram from New York informs us that Mr. John W. Taylor's report of the conversation he held with President Eliot has created horror and dismay in the minds of the teachers in New York; and a great public meeting is called to consider the question of abandoning altogether any attempt at educating the youth of the city. They say, with great show of reason, "What is the use of trying to teach our boys? Already President Eliot's bosom-friend, Taylor, tells us the San Francisco scholars are ahead of us; and what will it be when this monster of learning and friend of presidents takes his place as Superintendent of Schools? Better close at once." The same thing, we are told, is likely to be done in Boston. We are sorry for these cities, but we have our Taylor to guide us in our triumphant march through the long glories of the future.

The energy of the Superintendent of Streets is still the theme of admiring comment in the neighborhood of Washington and Mason streets. One week ago a hole, large enough to take in a barrel of sugar, opened suddenly in the very middle of Washington street, by the large school. It was left there unprotected for three days, no zealous inspector took the poor thing in at night to save it from the cold, and, during the day, the small boy from the school actually spit in its face unchecked. At last, on the fourth day, a railing was put round it, and there the hole stays, with nothing to shelter its modesty, nothing to comfort its loneliness, while it grins behind its cage.

Kate Newell Daggett (Miss, or Mrs., unknown to the telegraph) has made an address to the National Association for the Advancement of Women, and complains therein of the exclusion of women from almshouses and penal institutions, as well as Boards of Education. We heartily sympathize with this cry of indignation, so far as regards the almshouses and the prisons, to the hospitality of which we think a number of women have a natural right; but we cannot tolerate the idea of their advancing backwards to the point of sitting in a Board of Education. We are proud to say we have seen no women quite low enough to deserve this.

Two Polish Jews, who recently arrived in New York, took a walk around the city on a tour of exploration. The first thing necessary was, of course, to find a lodging, and one of them, who understood a little English, speedily struck a sign in the window, "Rooms Furnished." "Das ist aber a Medinah" (a good country), he cried to his friend. "Rooms for nichts! that vos they don't cost a single pfennig." And then his smile vanished, as he saw underneath the words "To Let"; and he turned sadly to his companion, and added: "Dot fellow's making damphools of us! He says ve can have bis rooms for nichts, but ve come too late."

"Closed until the walking match is over" is confidently expected to be the next sign posted over all the theaters, churches, and other rational places of amusement very shortly. Mr. Oscar Weil, acting on this suggestion, is re-writing Pyramus and Thisbe on the six-day plan, with the entire Olympic Club as scorers. Madame La Chapelle will play "Thisbe," and Mr. McIntyre "Pyramus," with Bowman, Scott, Santos and Chenowith, and a large five mile an hour chorus. The proprietor of the Bush-Street Theater says if business does not revive this winter there will be a dead Locke in his establishment.

Our favorite black-and-tan came home, the other day, rather out of sorts. He would not eat, sulked under the table, moaned, and conducted himself generally in a disagreeable manner. As he had always been a jovial dog, we were greatly concerned, and worried ourselves to discover what ailed him, but in vain, until a little boy, the son of a neighbor, told us he had seen the pet stop at a wall and nose an advertisement, which he offered to show us. It proved to be an offer of $10—reward for arrest and conviction of any person found stealing the Morning Call. The dog still refuses to be comforted.

There is a good deal of monotony, after all, in this confounded walking business. Most people have legs, and one walk is a good deal like another. Why not vary the performance a little? Crowds would go to see a match of any kind, but how much more taking it would be if the walking were done on the bands, or on the knees. There would be some real endurance in either of these, and the spectators would be entertained. Even a match on hands and knees would have its charms. There's money in it, and we charge nothing for suggestions.

The first heavy rain of the season descended early this week, and has left us in the intoxication of clear skies, and balmy airs, and open sewers, and boundless stinks in every street. The sweet influences of Orion and the Pleiades are more than enough to make us love our native land; but the passion is nothing less than maddening when the breeze is strong enough to knock down a Street Commissioner.

When General Grant saw the Chronicle map of Belmont, made up of parenthesis marks and dashes, he is said to have remarked, under his bated breath: "This beats anything I ever did see, ever dreamt of seeing, or ever hope to see again as long as I live." He is a great admirer of newspaper enterprise—thinks an eight-page Chronicle the best paper in the world when Mrs. G. is packing.

We ought to have our elevated street railroads as well as other places. The traveling public hardly know what they are missing all this time in the unexpected vistas through second-story windows as the train glides along. New Yorkers are said to pine for this innocent recreation, even amid the joys of Paris. Why are we to be left out in the cold?

We remark with pleasure that the Call is still published. It's tremendous efforts to increase it's circulation must have strained it, but the native toughness of the creature, we are proud to say, has survived; and California still bangs the world in the most tremendously unreadable paper that ever dulled the morning.

When a man cries, "Stop thief!" suspect him. For the last six or seven years—that is, ever since the Bulletin began to be a frightful bore to the public—it has been urging the people to bore Artesian wells, in the hope, of course, that one bore would be as much as anybody could stand. So it is; but it's not the Artesian.

The committee engaged in getting up the grand sawing-wood match have not as yet decided on the date. Some dissatisfaction has been manifested—the match is not open to ladies. We think ladies should be content to act as spectators. If it were once discovered that the gentle sex could saw wood, we believe it would upset the whole social fabric. One facetious young gentleman writes to us, objecting to oak wood, and says if he enter he will require beech, and his motto will be:—

"I saw from the beech!"

The Chicago "Inter-Ocean" is very savage against the National Board of Health, because it has done nothing to arrest the yellow fever. Lord bless you! where did you come from? Boards are not elected for that sort of thing. We always put ignoramuses into Boards of Education, men who can't take care of their own bodies into Boards of Health, peanut venders into Boards of Trade, and solid blocks into any other boards. The staff of the Inter-Ocean must be supplied from some of this old stock.

The following advertisement is clipped from the N. Y. Herald:

"An intelligent and refined young gentleman (a stranger, aged 30) will give guitar lessons to an amiable and pleasing young lady just for the pleasure of her company; a sweet singer preferred. Please address "Friendship, box ——, Herald office."

If the advertiser will take sound advice he will come straight to California on the first train. There are thousands of ladylike sweet singers here, just dying to learn the guitar, and very few of them have any big brothers to speak of.

According to the local papers the British success in Afghanistan is only a barren success, and brings with it an endless train of dangers and troubles. We deeply regret this, for the sake of the British, and can see no way out of the business for them but to make Pickering Emir and Fitch Grand Vizier, on condition that they publish the Morning Call at Cabul. Six months' subscription to that cheerful journal will make the Pathans themselves as mild as white of egg.

Some men are not to be taught. Here is Beecher, not satisfied with all the glory he acquired in the Tilton business, coming out in New York on the stump, "against scratching." This may be all well enough for him, and we have no inclination to peer into any man's private affairs; but we should like to know what a fellow is to do, when the wicked flea has him by the small of the back? If Mr. Beecher knows a more excellent way than scratching, let him come out with it.

Some of the New York journals, it appears, are almost in the neighborhood of common sense, if we may believe our own superior papers; and here the reflection comes in how much more simple life would be for these outsiders, if they ceased trying to see anything for themselves, and subscribed to our daily Press. We have to teach them now at a great disadvantage, puffed up, as they are, by the possession of what it pleases them to call their own organs.

It is wonderful what a cataplasm an Indian divested of his tomahawk is, and how many thousand people these red blisters will draw when they run against time at the Pavilion; and this reminds us that as far as the running is concerned, it is exactly what the white people are doing in the Utes' country just now—the only difference being that instead of speeding round a track to wild applause for gate money, our countrymen are making pretty lively time across country to save their scalp.

Elder Erastus Snow told the Mormons last Monday that, rather than submit to the Government, or to the President, or to the judges, the Mormons would see them all in Hell. Now, this is a little rough on the devil, and we can't stand by and see it. He's a tough old sinner, no doubt, but he leads a quiet life, anyway, and behaves like a gentleman, and it's brutal to think of turning our Government loose on his premises.

The union between Bismarck and Pope Leo is freely commented on in political circles. Mr. B. has promised His Holiness not to eat meat on Friday on the condition that the Pope will get privately married and join the Free Masons. If this understanding is happily arrived at it is probable that further concessions will follow.

A Philadelphia school-teacher has refused to allow a child in her class, on account of her having sung in Pinafore. This is a step in the right direction, and an evidence of love of good music, which only wants to be widely known in order to kill "Little Buttercup" and the entire gang forever.

The Autumn brings its usual crop of sea-serpent and wild man stories. The wild man this time is from Yolo and Colusa counties. He is a desperate looking Esau, and articulates nothing but a hoarse cry for "'backy." That's the country form of the affliction. In town he strikes you for two bits, and, like Death, he has all seasons for his own.

It is remarkable enough that, though the Agricultural Fairs are in full blast all over the Union, and there's no end of premiums to be had, not a single demand has yet been made at this office for the grand prize offered early in the year for the fattest hog. None but principals dealt with.

A priest in Jersey City refuses to allow more than twelve carriages at any funeral, on the ground of unnecessary extravagance. It is believed that he will be excommunicated at once by Jimmy McGinn, as a warning to contumacious and penurious divines.

Somebody says that the American youth ripples with blaspbemy as spontaneously as the nightingale trills forth her gushing melody to the moon. This is what comes of education and founding Young Men's Christian Associations.

Who can, day after day, read a journal and not be greatly informed thereby? This question is triumphantly asked by a distinguished contemporary, which no man, woman or child can read without being asphyxiated; and this is our triumphant answer.

The Rev. J. L. Lodge, of Jersey City Heights, has excommunicated a fireman for heating up his engine on Sunday; and properly, too, for the clergy have the exclusive right to everything hot, on the Lord's Day.

A Chicago paper says that a Michigan man has cars for a railroad, with gearing to run by wind, when favorable. Why not? The Chicago papers run that way, and nobody ever caught one of them—in a lie.

What would this world be without the Morning Call? "A bowling wilderness!" said the Sunday edition of my two papers, both daily. Just so! But let her howl, we prefer it.

Gen. Grant will not visit Sacramento. He has stood fire, has been under it, but he must draw the line somewhere.

NOTABILIA.

THE PEDDLER'S SONG.

Lawn as white as driven snow;
Cypress black as e'er was crow;
Gloves as sweet as damask roses;
Masks for faces and for noses;
Bugle-bracelet, necklace, amber;
Perfume for a lady's chamber;
Gold quoips and stomachers,
For my lads to give their dears;
Pins and poking-sticks of steel.
What maids lack from head to heel:
Come buy of me, come; come buy, come buy,
Buy, lads, or else your lasses cry.
WILLIAM SHAKESPEARS.

One of the most delightful excursions is to be secured by a trip to the Sonoma vineyards and fruit orchards, now in their full ripened glory. Every day the steamer Herald leaves Washington-street wharf at 9 A.M. for Norfolk, where passengers take the new railroad to Lyons, and from there reach Sonoma by two miles coaching, over a splendid road. Saturday afternoon, at 2 o'clock, boat excursion; and another on Sunday at 8 A.M. Fare but $1.50, and a day of the most entire enjoyment within reach of every one. At Winkle's vineyard the scene is now extraordinarily attractive. The vines are loaded with their fruit, and the vintage is just begun, with splendid prospects for an unequaled year.

It has been well said that nearly all the very modern poets have sufficient fancy, but that many of them sadly need to ballast with a good strong body of thought. The only way to supply this is to furnish the body with wholesome, pure, invigorating food, done to a turn by the best cooks, and served up in style becoming civilized men; and all these are met with at the Original Swain's, 213 Sutter street, where the generation of poets, thinkers, statesmen, divines, men of wit and learning, and brilliant women, who are to form the society of this metropolis, are now building up their physical and intellectual natures.

Immediately after the gigantic review of the thirty thousand school children at Woodward's Gardens, two weeks ago, Gen. Grant, it was remarked, looked pale, and declared himself more fatigued than after a day's warfare. He was assisted to his carriage, and driven at a foot's pace to the Palace Hotel, where he lay down on a lounge till a bottle of Landsberger's Gerke Wine was brought. A glass of this so refreshed the General, that he sprang to his feet and walked for three hours' sight-seeing, and read through the last school report, without assistance, by midnight.

There is serious danger of a collapse in the efforts now making at Washington to find a way for restricting Chinese immigration. So many independent minds are at work on the problem that it is feared the result will be like that recorded in song and story, of the broth cared for by too many cooks. In all such affairs there should be but one cook; and yet such is the superiority of Montanya's Union Range that even three or four cooks simultaneously toiling cannot keep it from cooking a perfect dinner.

The famous Boston artist, Hunt, whose recent suicide is deplored by all, was asked by Schoff, the engraver, to touch up for him a London photograph of Geo. McDonald, so that it could be engraved. This Hunt did with six or seven brief strokes; but if the photographs had been one of Bradley & Rulofson's we should have lost this characteristic incident. Schoff could only copy with exactness everything he found in Bradley & Rulofson's pictures, declaring that it was always better than nature herself to work from.

Carlotta Patti, sister of the great prima donna, has just been married to M. de Munck, in the presence of the Marquis de Caux, who gave away the brids and also a good many blessings on the happy occasion. The bridegroom's name sounds like a satirical commentary on his changed condition; but he is indifferent to satire, not so much on account of his Carlotta as because his neck-gear and underclothing were supplied by Carleany & Crosett, 25 Kearny street, and he feels that he is dressed at last.

When a Chinese witness takes the chicken oath in Court, he says: "If I tell a lie, may my life be as this chicken's." And off goes the head of the bird, and out comes the truth in Chinese. Visitors from the East and from Europe are strongly impressed by this heathen ceremony in our courts, but yet more so by the magnificent display of the finest styles and shapes of hats at White's, 614 Commercial street.

The Neptune and Mermaid Baths, North Beach, foot of Hyde street, are the most health-giving resort within miles of the city. The water comes in fresh from the ocean, and rolls in breakers on the natural beach, sloping gradually to every depth, so that beginners and accomplished swimmers can equally be suited. Prof. Mohor, a perfect master of the art, gives lessons in swimming.

The Rev. Robert Collier, in his farewell discourse at Chicago, said that he had always believed that the nearer a minister could come to his people in every wholesome human way, the more surely he could help them and they could help him. These noble words of the blacksmith preacher naturally recur to the mind when one thinks of the benefits secured to the sufferers with consumption by F. & P. J. Cassin's delicious Cordial of Old Rye Whisky and Pure Rock Candy, the most delicious and soothing compound known.

In his address to the Home Rulers at Waterford, Mr. Parnell is said to have used this language: "Why is it that the sons of the Green Isle who remove to California are almost invariably found to be the brightest and bravest of their race? I have learned that, one and all, they habitually drink of Napa Soda, the cheeriest and most lively of nature's unspoiled fountains of health."

Ships and the tonnage market, particularly that suited to the Wheat-carrying trade of the port, have occupied and received during the week more attention than aught else in commercial circles. The exciting state of the English market is the occasion of this uprising in both Wheat and freights. Wheat cargoes on passage have been run up to 55 shillings in Liverpool, and Wheat charters here have risen to 65 shillings, paid for small vessels soon to arrive. These advances are about ten shillings on each within the past few weeks, and this rapid advance was anticipated by few, owing chiefly to the unexpected had weather for the English Harvest and a greater European scarcity of Breadstuffs than was anticipated.

Our available spot tonnage supply at this writing has been reduced to less than 10,000 tons, and during the week it had diminished to 5,000 registered tons. The opportune arrival of three first-class ships from New York—the "Great Admiral," "Alemeda" and "Armenia"—these large American ships, with that of the "Valparaiso," from Callao, checked the momentary alarm and activity of the market, and there came a pause.

Ship-owners now are confident of holding the call of the market for the balance of the season, and are now holding the few ships in port at 70s. to the United Kingdom, feeling well assured that Freights will soon touch this point, and before the close of the year look for engagements as high as 80s. for Wheat to the United Kingdom.

The Breadstuff Question.—The next important query to solve is, as to the effect upon the Wheat market of this rise in freights. The price of shipping Wheat with us has now touched $1 85@$1 90 ₱ ctl., while millers have already paid within a small fraction of 2c, ₱ pound. The above shipping rate for Wheat was freely paid for some 10,000 tons for the loading of ships secured at 55@57s. 6d. But at 60@65s. freight no such prices for Wheat can safely be paid on this coast, much less when freight engagements are written at 70s. and upwards, as now predicted by some. Farmers, under these circumstances, would do well to consider the question whether it is not now their time to sell and secure present rates. Our Wheat receipts from the interior (exclusive of Flour) now aggregate for the current harvest year 4,300,000 ctls., against 4,450,000 ctls. same time last year. Our exports appear to be in about the same ratio. Our Wheat fleet now on the herth numbers 45 vessels, of 69,000 registered tons, and this fleet is having quick dispatch for Europe. The disengaged fleet in port only numbers 9 vessels, only a part of these suited to the grain carrying trade.

The fleet to arrive within the next five months, so far as we are advised, does not vary materially from 150,000 tons' register, and the most of these ships are far off, while some few of the near-by vessels have been already chartered.

The first rain of the season fell on the 6th of October, exceeding one-half inch in quantity. This rain was quite general throughout the State. It is not believed that any damage was caused thereby to the many thousand tons of exposed Wheat stacked upon the river banks, awaiting transportation to tide water. The effect, no doubt, will be to hurry up its shipment as fast as possible. The trouble is the lowness of water in the river and the scarcity of boats suited to its transportation in shallow water. These early rains, unless followed by continuous rains, destroy the dry field pasturage, and leave the cattle with poor feed-picking until the new grass appears. It is feared that this rain may have injured the Raisin Grape, and done damage to those curing sun-dried fruit, but, so far as we hear of, no real damage, but rather a benefit, to the Apples and Grapes now being harvested, by washing off the Summer dust accumulations.

Wheat Exports to Europe.—Since July 1st, we have dispatched to Europe a fleet of ninety ships, carrying 3,305,525 ctls Wheat, valued at $5,890,176; same time last year, one hundred and seven vessels, with 3,929,200 ctls, valued at $6,784,970. We have yet a large reserve of unsold Wheat in store at Stockton and other landings in the interior, quite sufficient in quantity to load all the ships now headed to this port. The present spot price of Wheat is $1 60@1 95 ₱ ctl.

Flour Exports.—Our shipments to all ports since July 1st now aggregate 103,394 bbls, valued at $501,791; same time last year, 128,683 bbls, valued at $671,316. China continues to be our largest buyer. Europe has taken few—very few—cargoes the present season, a large falling off as compared with former seasons. The City of Tokio, for China and Japan, carried 13,612 hhls, chiefly to Hongkong. The present price of standard Superfine is $4 25@4 50; Extra Superfine, $4 75@5; best Family and Bakers' Extra, $5 25@6 ₱ 196 lbs.

The Barley Market.—There is beginning to be some call for choice Brewing at the low price ruling, say at 87½@90c. ₱ ctl. Feed can be readily purchased at 70c., while Chevalier is very scarce, and wanted for export, at $1.50@1.70 ₱ ctl. The Florence, hence for Liverpool Oct. 8th, carried 13,354 ctls., making our total exports for the season, dating from July 1st, at 314,741 ctls., valued at $476,906, against same time last year of 114,946 ctls., $173,119. It is fair to say that overland shipments this year have been less, as compared with last season, to equalize the above outward movement.

Corn and Oats.—There is no export demand for these feed grains; the former worth 80@90c. per ctl., the latter $1.25@1.50 ₱ ctl.

Hops are coming in more freely, and sell readily from 28 to 32c., according to quality.

Hides.—The market is strong for all sorts. We quote Dry at 17@18c.

Wool.—The market is active at 12@13c. for Burry and Earthy; Southern, free, 14@17c.; Northern, 14@15c. for heavy Burry, and for Free 20@24c.; latter for choice long Staple.

Leather.—The market is strong for all descriptions, and prices hardening.

Bags and Bagging.—The combination have taken another turn in the screw, and advanced prices for Standard Grain Sacks to 12c. The demand, however, is so small as to amount to a retail trade only, while their stock for the season is immense. The "Belgic," from Hongkong, brought 320 bales assorted Calcutta Gunnies, said to be hop cloth—ore and coffee Bags. But what of the 4,000,000 Grain Sacks said to be on the "Evelyn," to arrive from Calcutta?

Case Goods.—The export demand for Canned Apricots and other fruits is good, and the requirement steadily increasing. We note an increased inquiry for Salmon, with sales during the current month of 10,000 cases Columbia River fish at $1 07½@$1 10 per doz. of 1-lb. tins. Holders of best brands now ask $1 12½@$1 15. At the rise in freights, it is thought shipments to England will be greatly diminished.

Coffee.—The market is strong for Guatemala first at 17c@17½c; Costa Rica, 16c@16½c; O. G. Java, 25½c; Rio, 15c@15½c. Our stock, October 1st, way of C. A., 4,500 bags, against 31,725 bags same time last year.

Metals.—We note a further rise in Pig Iron, Iron Pipe, Copper, Sheet, Bar and Ingot, the rise in Copper from the start about 4c. ₱ lb. The market for Pig Lead shows firmness. The Zealandia, from Sydney, brought 364 ingots Pig Tin, worth 17@17½c. Pig Iron, $28@$32.

Nails.—Arrivals from New York liberal, with sales 1,000 kegs from store, at $3 75.

Oils.—There is no movement, and Whale continues to rule low. Coal Oils are plentiful and cheap.

Provisions.—The market for Meats and Lard shows firmness, with a fair trade. Butter and Cheese are in favor of seller.

Quicksilver.—The market has collapsed, with sales for export at 34@34½c. The City of Tokio, for Hongkong, carried 400 flasks. Our exports since January 1st aggregate 45,800 flasks; value, $1,321,750. Same time last year, 23,900 flasks; value, $794,576, showing an increase this year of 21,900 flasks; value, $527,173.

Rice.—The market for Hawaiian is strong at 6¼c, with sales. The Zealandia, from Honolulu, brought only 548 bags. There is more tone to the China market, with sales 10,000 mats Mixed at $4 55@4 65, and the price advanced to $4 70. We quote No. 1 China $5 75; No. 2, $5 50. The City of Tokio, from Hongkong, brought 10,054 mats.

Sugar.—The market is without change; 1,200 bags of Hawaiian Grocery grades sold at 8½@8¾c. The Zealandia, from Honolulu, brought 6,639 bags. The City of Panama, from the Isthmus, brought 300 hhls New York Refined. We quote Whites 10½@10¾c; Golden C, 9¼c; Yellow, 8¾c.

Salt.—The market is strong for all descriptions.

Teas.—Markets are firm at the late rise. The Belgic, from China and Japan, brought for this city 4,587 pkgs, and in transit for the East by Central Pacific Railroad, 22,096 pkgs.

CUMBERLAND MINE.

Confirmation of its Most Wonderful Richness and Extent!--Captain Daniel Hanlon, the new Superintendent, after Thorough Inspection, Pronounces it a Property worth Many Millions!--Ore in Sight, of Highest Grade and Quality, Sufficient to Last Many Years!--Mill Site Selected!

The latest news from the Cumberland Mine, of Yavapai county, Arizona, is of a most positive and confirmatory character possible. All the glowing statements of the late Superintendent, Robert Collins (now Assistant Superintendent), made from July 1st to present time, have been most thoroughly substantiated and indorsed by the new Superintendent, Captain Daniel Hanlon, "late of the U. S. Custom House department of this city, under Collector T. B. Shannon, and well known to over twenty thousand (20,000) of the best citizens of this community as a gentleman of absolute honor, truthfulness and integrity." He is likewise father of the eminent young attorney, Charles F. Hanlon, of 310 Pine street, who is also esteemed as highly as the elder Hanlon—so that the truthfulness of the statements made under the handwriting of Capt. Dan'l Hanlon can be substantiated and proven by the testimony of thousands of our most prominent citizens. In a letter to the President, Geo. M. Ciprico, 417 California street, he pronounces the Cumberland property to be a marvelously rich mine! of inestimable value—worth upwards of millions of dollars. Speaking of the ore sent by the late Superintendent, from Shaft No. 1, (down eighty feet), and which, from 52 assays, made by Professor William Irelan, made an average of over $2,000 to the ton, Captain Hanlon says:

"The ore in sight is all of the same quality and grade as that sent you from Shaft No. 1. You may break it off the face anywhere, and find it all of nearly the same grade. I believe you cannot exhaust the ore in sight, with a ten-stamp mill, in SEVERAL YEARS, as it will pay from the croppings down."

Capt. Hanlon goes on to say that the hanging and foot-walls are clearly defined; that the mine has plenty of wood for milling purposes within a radius of five miles, and that a mill site has been selected two miles from the mine, where an abundance of water suitable for its requirements has been discovered. With a marvelously rich mine—showing a record unparalelled in the history of mining upon this coast—and a superabundance of wood and water within easy reach, the Cumberland property is inevitably certain to take rank as one of those startling bonanzas that within the last decade have electrified the world with their millions of wealth.

A 10-stamp mill is in process of manufacture at Col. Savage's foundry, on Fremont street; also, a fine engine, feeders and rock-crushers. These may be shipped to Arizona some time next month, and a large force put to work to bring the mine into a hullion-producing property. This district also contains the Martinez and Gnome mines, which are on the same ledge, and are extensions from the Cumberland. The latter is 1,500 feet long. All these mines contain high grade ore, like the Cumberland; and Cumberland City, where the mill-site of the Cumberland Mine is being located, may have a similar future to that of Leadville, when these startling facts become fully known and comprehended by the vast world of fortune-seekers. In a short time Cumberland lode may be more famous than the Comstock lode, with this condition in its favor: that the mines of the Cumberland lode begin from the surface down, and have, therefore, very light expenses for raising ore, while they avoid entirely the obstacle of water-flooding! Shares of the Cumberland Mining Company are now assuming a very high value, which is likely to increase as the time approaches when the mine will he dividend-paying. The stock is held very close, in large hodies, hy private parties. There has heen no assessment upon the stock, and, from preseut indications, there is not likely to be one. As the stock is not manipulated upon the Stock Boards, the only place for ohtaining reliahle information regarding the same is at the Company's office, 417 California street. Holders of stock, leaving the State, occasionally sacrifice a few shares hy placing the same in the hands of the President for sale, hut the lucky ones who find this out generally manage to gather them in with alacrity. From what we learn, the stock is held at various prices, ranging as high as ten dollars per share. If the statements made above—so thoroughly proven and substantiated hy the reports from expert Craib, the late Superintendent Robert Collins, and the new Superintendent, Captain Daniel Hanlon—are true (and of that fact there can he no doubt), surely the stock is intrinsically worth ten times the highest of these present quotations. A map of the great mines of the Cumberland lode—the Cumberland, Martinez and Gnome—including Cumberland City, will he issued next month.

Among the costly and heautiful dresses at the late Carnival Ball, it is remarkahle that the finest were made hy Mrs. Lewis. The grand first prize, a diamond cross, offered for the hest costume in taste and make, was carried off hy her. Triumphs of this kind are Mrs. Lewis' ordinary experience, when her work is hrought into competition with that of others; and at the late Sharon reception, the most striking among the hrilliant dresses were from her estahlishment. Particularly noted were a heavy hlack satin and an exquisite white satin, in whose folds the shadows lay like a fainter light; a lovely hlue velvet, hrocaded, and a gendarme hlue silk and embossed velvet, marvelously effective. Mrs. Lewis is the accepted arhiter of taste and fashion, and seconded hy her cutter and fitter, the very hest in the State, she produces unrivaled work. She has constantly employed upwards of forty girls—none too many for the throng of daily visitors from the upper ten thousand of our critical and fastidious leaders of society.

It is with deep regret we learn that Mrs. J. C. Duncan is now lying ill with the most serious form of typhoid fever, at the residence of her father, in this city. This lady's unceasing devotion to her husband, from the time of the calamity which overtook them, is known to every one in the community, and the illness that now endangers her life is the result of the ceaseless anxiety and strain, bodily and mental, through which she has passed. It adds keenness to the suffering she has to hear to know that her four little ones must he kept away from her, and that her husband is not allowed even to approach what there is too much reason to fear may he the dying hed of the wife whose unbounded affection has so hlessed and comforted him.

ART JOTTINGS.

It is truly appalling, the rapidity with which teachers in drawing, painting, etc., are increasing in this city. In nearly every shop window one sees specimen pictures, and placards announcing that Mr. or Miss So-and-So will impart instructions in some branch of the fine arts. At 31 Kearny street are to be seen not less than three examples from as many of these pedantics.

One is a colored picture of some sort. The subject looks as if it might he a Zulu mummy. It is by one A. E. Wilson, now residing on Turk street. At the last Academy exhibit a Mrs. A. E. Wilson displayed a number of outrageous daubs, which were a disgrace to the institution which accepted them; yet we are told that this person, who evidently has not the least knowledge of art herself, presides over a very large class of pupils. The second is a portrait of our friend Smith, of the Palace Hotel. It is a crayon, and the artist announces that it is made without the aid of a solar. Had he announced that it was drawn by holding the porte cayon with his toes, instead of his fingers, it would have been something of a curiosity; as it is, there is just enough of the likeness in it to point unerringly to a well-known citizen, and so the simple gulls are taken in, and, of course, apply to Mons. Hecht for lessons.

The third exhibitor in this one shop is a Mr. August Scheffer, who paints in oil, and is also desirous of imparting his knowledge to the uninitiated. His examples display more ability—certainly—than the two first named, but still, were he to be subjected to the rigid rules of drawing and color, it is plain to be seen that no beginner would have to commence lower down the steps.

Now, San Francisco is full—to overflowing—with these nomadic pedagogues, and it is high time that their ability—or, rather, ignorance—was exposed. Many of them, too, are old-timers, who have been bleeding this community for well nigh a quarter of a century. It will he the special province of "Jottings" to call attention to these frauds, and warn the public against them. And, let it he understood, that in this, as in other matters, not one word of injustice will he written.

At times the strictures in this column appear to he severe—they may be—hut they are just and honest. We have in our midst a School of Design, which in a measure is a public institution, and, from the apparent success of this, this swarm of charlatans have sprung up. Its Directors are men of knowledge and experience in art affairs, and at the head of it is a professor of great ability, one who has made the fine arts a study from hoyhood, is familiar with the tenets of art as taught in its great centers, and we propose to show, to the satisfaction of all, why it is that these humbugs so well succeed in fleecing the public at the expense of the San Francisco School of Design.

J. Macdonough, 25 Market street, has the largest stock of coal on the coast, of every kind. He has just received 100 tons of the famous "Red Ash," the first that has been imported in the last 20 years. All over the East this is the favorite coal for house use, in grates and furnaces. It burns clear, with little flame, heing anthracite, and leaves a friable ash, perfectly free from clinker or lumps. Red Ash always commands $1 a ton more than any other coal in the market, so clean and pleasant is the fire it makes. 1,500 tons Hamilton Scotch Splint, and 1,000 tons Davisson's West Hartley have also heen yarded this week, and orders are flowing in.

Nearly $2,500,000 of the sum paid out under the Pension Arrearages Bill has gone South, the Southern States furnishing 300,000 white men to the Union forces, not so very many less than New England, whose pensioners receive $3,600,000 under the same bill, those in New York receiving $3,230,000, and in Pennsylvania $3,050,000.

St. John's Presbyterian Church, Post street, hetween Mason and Taylor. Rev. Dr. Scott, Pastor, will preach Sunday morning at 11 o'clock; also at 7½ P. M. Sunday School and Bihle Classes at 9½ A. M. Prayer and Praise Service at 6½ P. M.

"The World," the Flesh, and the Devil.

[By a Truthful Penman.]

The Lancet remarks that Lord William Beresford, in addition to his distinction as a gallant and chivalrous soldier, will he distinguished in history as the owner of a horse which was poisoned hy tea. The Veterinary Journal reports the "case," and characterizes it as "unparalleled in the annals of veterinary or even human toxicology": A staff cook having left some pounds of tea in a sack, a Kaffir groom filled it with corn, and serving out the contents to a troop of horses, gave Lord William Beresford's charger the bulk of the tea, which was eaten greedily, and produced the most startling results. The animal plunged and kicked, and ran hackward, at intervals galloping madly around, finally falling into a donga, where it lay dashing its head on the rocks, and was dispatched hy an assegai thrust through the heart. The post mortem appearances indicated extreme cerebral congestion. The occurrence as an accident is prohably unique. The phenomena exhihited were, however, characteristic of the action of caffeine—namely, cerebral excitement, with partial loss of sensihility, convulsions and death. The sensory nerves are paralyzed without any corresponding paralysis of the motor nerves, so that the muscular action, which proceeds from ideation and volition, remains unaffected. The reversal of limh movements, which produces running hackward in quadrupeds, is a common symptom of hrain disturhance, frequently witnessed, for example, in the case of puppies with unclosed crania. The case is one of great interest, and may help to throw light on the action of tea, which has not heen sufficiently studied, and must he still classed as unexplained.——A singular instance of the effect of reciprocity treaties is reported in a recent telegram from Washington. The United States has a special reciprocity treaty with the Sandwich Islands —a treaty which tells most unfairly against us as one of the guaranteeing Powers. It now appears that there is a strong suspicion that a great deal of sugar is shipped to the Sandwich Islands and then reshipped to San Francisco under this favorable treaty, thus escaping the heavy Customs duties imposed on other sugar. This is a sort of traffic hy no means easy to trace in a group like the Sandwich Islands, where there are so many harhors and so many sugar plantations. If the truth could he got at as to the amount of smuggling which has gone on for the last few years under the high tariff, especially with articles easily transported, it would prove a strong argument in favor of a reduction of duty.—Pall Mall Budget.——It is satisfactory to find that, notwithstanding Mr. De Young's unfortunate attempt on Mr. Kalloch's life, the Republican party will prohably he ahle to defeat the combination of the Democrats with the Workingmen's party in California. Mr. Kalloch, it is true, has heen elected Mayor of San Francisco, and some of the judges nominated on the Workingmen's ticket have heen carried hy the vote of that party; hut, as a whole, the Repnhlicans have been successful, having elected the Governor and two out of the three members of Congress in the districts where the return has heen made up. There can he little douht that the combination of the Democrats with the lahor party has thrown many moderate men into the arms of the Republicans. Such a programme as that put forward hy Mr. Kearney, and carried hy the popular vote, would frighten most of those who had anything to lose; and it can scarcely he wished that communistic experiments should be commenced in California, if commenced at all, hy a virulent persecution of the Chinese. What is more remarkahle than the rather unexpected success of the Republicans is the peace and quietness which seemed to have prevailed. Such a shooting affray as that between Mr. De Young and Mr. Kalloch might easily have given rise to a popular outhreak.—Pall Mall Gazette.——One of the 80-ton guns constructed for the Inflexible was tried recently at Woolwich, with a charge of 445lhs. of powder and a projectile weighing over 1,760 lhs., when the velocity at the muzzle was ascertained to he 1,657 ft. per second. The gun is stated to he competent to pierce a vessel coted with 32 inches of iron. This result has heen attained after the enlargement of the gun, ordered in consequence of the performance of the German gun designed hy Herr Krupp to surpass the Woolwich ordnance, and the British gun is now superior to its German rival.——Only the other day, M. Sarcey related how a schoolmistress in the Vaucluse, Sister Pacifique, was dismissed for having a map hung up in her schoolroom representing Europe, with such inscriptions as these on it: The Empire of Satan, the Ocean of Divine Love, the Harhor of Obstinacy, the Sea of Self-Ahnegation, the Province of Frivolity; and underneath this map devils armed with pitchforks tossing the lost into flames. M. Sarcey also relates that a prize book recently given at a Congregationalist school was entitled, "Means of Transport to Heaven." In the first illustration a pious-looking youth is represented as going to Paradise in a palanquin; in the second, in a gondola; in the third, on a donkey; in the fourth he is standing on a locomotive which is heing driven by a Jesuit. In another picture he is climhing a ladder; in another, swimming; and in the last he is heing shot up to Heaven hy a volcano.——It is understood that one of the conditions imposed hy the Russian Government in connection with the surrender of Kuldja to the Chinese is that the Kirghiz Nomads, who have fled from Kuldja and its environs to China since the invasion of the former hy Russian troops, are forcihly sent hack hy the Chinese authorities.——Teaching in Germany is a very active operation, if the facts reported of a lately deceased German teacher arc true. During the 51 years 7 months of his official life, he had, hy a moderate computation, inflicted 911,527 hlows with a cane, 124,010 hlows with a rod, 20,989 hlows and raps with a ruler, 136,715 hlows with the hand, 10,235 hlows over the mouth, 7,905 boxes on the ear, 1,115,800 raps on the hand, and 22,763 notabenes (i. e., knocks) with the Bible, catechism, singing-book and grammar. He had 777 times made boys kneel on peas, and 613 times on a three-cornered piece of wood, and made 5,001 "wear the jackass," and 1,707 hold the rod up; not to mention other punishments devised on the impulse of the moment.

A GOOD PLAN.

Anybody can learn to make money rapidly operating in Stocks, by the "Two Unerring Rules for Success," in Messrs. Lawrence & Co.'s new circular. The combination method, which this firm has made so successful, enables people with large or small means to reap all the benefits of largest capital and best skill. Thousands of orders, in various sums, are pooled into one vast amount and co-operated as a mighty whole, thus securing to each shareholder all the advantages of the largest operator. Immense profits are divided monthly. Any amount, from $5 to $5,000, or more, can be used successfully. N. Y. Baptist Weekly, September 26th, 1878, says: "By the combination system $15 would make $75, or 5 per cent.; $50 pays $350, or 7 per cent.; $100 makes $1,000, or 10 per cent. on the stock, during the month, according to the market." Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, June 29th: "The combination method of operating stocks is the most successful ever adopted." New York Independent, Sept. 12th: "The combination system is founded upon correct business principles, and no person need be without an income while it is kept working by Messrs. Lawrence & Co. Brooklyn Journal, April 29th: "Our editor made a net profit of $101.25 from $20 in one of Messrs. Lawrence & Co.'s combinations." New circular (mailed free) explains everything. Stocks and bonds wanted. Government bonds supplied.

HER CONQUEST.

Muster thy wit, and talk of whatsoever
Light, mirth-provoking matter thou canst find;
I laugh, and own that thou, with small endeavor,
Hast won my mind.

Be silent if thou wilt—thine eyes expressing
Thy thoughts and feelings, lift them up to mine:
Then quickly thou shalt hear me, love, confessing
My heart is thine.

And let that brilliant glance become but tender—
Return me heart for heart—then take the whole
Of all that yet is left me to surrender;
Thou hast my soul.

Now, when the three are fast in thy possession,
And thou hast paid me back their worth, and more,
I'll tell thee—all whereof I've made the cession
Was thine before. —October Scribner.

BOOK NOTICES.

Mr. Phillips' Gnneness. By James M. Bailey (the Danbury-News Man). Lee & Shepard, Boston. For sale by all booksellers.

A sketchy story of ordinary folk, who go about their business in a matter-of-fact style, with hardly more sentiment than is just necessary. This is the way Mr. Phillips and the charming widow come to the point:

"Do I understand, Mr. Phillips, that this "much" refers to your regard for me?" "Yes," he eagerly answered.

"That you really love me?" "Yes, yes."

"That you want to marry me?" "I do, I do."

"Then I am your ticket, Mr. Pbillips," promptly confessed tbe blushing widow.

A Tight Squeeze; or, the Adventures of a Gentleman who, on a Wager of Ten Thousand Dollars, undertook to go from New York to New Orleans in Three Weeks, without Money, as a Professional Tramp. By "Staats." Lee & Shepard, Boston. For sale by all booksellers.

A book worthy of its title-page. The gentleman meets witb most snrprising adventures; is lost on an island in the Mississippi, wbere he meets his future wife; they are both swept away by a freshet, and picked up by a cotton boat; the lady is affianced to another, and actually reaches the church to be married, when the god suddenly comes out in the shape of a gentle dame in man's attire, and familiarly known as Tommy. Tommy is the lawful wife of the wretch who is about to marry the lady of the island and the ducking; and the intending higamist dies with borror in the church, which makes everybody comfortable. When it is added that tbere is considerable orthodox piety in the book, and tbat the grammar, like the gentleman, is of, the professional tramp order, no one can douht that this is a lively and original work.

Appleton's Journal, for October, bas tbe continuation of "Vivian" and "The Seamy Side," an admirahle paper by Sidney Colvin on "Art and Criticism," a satisfactory sketcb of Moliere, Karl Blind's third article on "Conspiracies in Russia," Mallock's "Dialogue on Human Happiness," Matthew Arnold's charming and provoking notice of "The Frencb Play in London," a few poems, and the usual Editor's Table and book notices. Mr. Arnold's conviction of the Frencb unfitness for bigh poetic thought vitiates much of his otherwise excellent criticism; and his readers must frequently find themselves irritated by the sweet way in whicb he darkens counsel instead of enlightening it. When he wishes to sbow bow inferior is the Frencb alexandrine to the verse of Shakspeare, he selects from Victor Hugo a passage far below his best, and compares this with one of Shakspeare's most poetical passages. In this way almost anytbing could be proved of almost any poet; and Mr. Arnold would be far from merciful toward any critic wbom be detected in such practices.

The Dialogue on Happiness should he interesting to three-fourths of tbe people, wbo have got so far with their culture as to be very unhappy hecause tbeir is no issue anywhere out of tbis perplexing maze of life. It may be unteeling to say so, hut we must recommend tbese sigbing souls to meditate tbese lines from "Don Juan":

So thank your stars tbat matters are no worse,
And read your Bible, sir, and mind your nurse.

The best paper in the Portfolio, for September, is G. A. Simcox's "Handicraft," which is full of thought and suggestion with regard to the present status of art in the education alike of tbe workman and of the public. Mr. Lang's "Oxford" deals with the spirit of discontent which pervades tbe University atmosphere; and Mr. Hamerton continues his instructive "Notes on Aestbetics."

Among tbe items in the "Art Cbronicle" is a notice of an exhibition of 500 oil sketches of India by Marianne Nortb. These are said to show the most extraordinary skill and labor, while tbe general impression left hy them is less grandiose than that produced by Mr. Veretstchagin's work in tbe same line.

Mr. Poynter's "Ten Lectures on Art" (Chapman and Hall) are praised as the most important recent contributions to tbe literature of art. The ninth, which deals with Ruskin's treatment of Micbael Angelo, is said to hs very vigorous and damaging.

The Pre-Historic World. By Elie Berthet. Translated from the French by Mary J. Safford. Porter & Coates, Philadelphia; Billings, Harbourne & Co., San Francisco.

This book gives, in three tales, tbe history of man's supposed development from the savage life of the Stone Age, through the gathering of the tribes into tbe Lacustrian City, or lake dwellings, on to tbe Age of Metals and the life of the Gallic people several centuries before the conquest of Cæsar. Needless to say that all the incidents, the struggles with wild beasts, the warfare between the rude men, the beginning of social existence, the occupations, the tools, the daily concerns, are fair deductions from comparison and study of the relics preserved in museums. M. Berthet has wrought up his facts with a great deal of ingenuity into a series of pictures, which cannot but serve the purpose of popularizing the discoveries of recent times, though the fiction interwoven with the facts is far from interesting to the reader. We are told what has been discovered, in a story instead of a treatise; and tbe usefulness of the work is necessarily impaired for those who do not choose to have tbeir information, like their pills, sugar-coated.

A REGAL RECEPTION.

The grand reception in honor of our distinguished guest, Ulysses S. Grant, given hy ths Hon. Wm. Sharon, was in all respects the social event of the year. Tn all those who have on former occasions heen invited to the Belmont mansion, it suffices to say that on this occasion all the arrangements were improved upon. Nothing that could he suggested hy taste and refinement, reinforced by great wealth, was left undone to make the fete a brilliant one in all respects. The decorations were of that richness, utterly devoid of gaudiness, which charms the truly artistic and æsthetic mind. Several trains from San Francisco brought down all that the city contains of heauty, wealth and intelligence. The distance from the depot to the house was easily and rapidly covered hy the multitude of vehicles provided. The road was lined with variegated Chinese lanterns, and here and there huge honfines. Tbe produced effect was an extremely picturesque one. In the way of servants and dressing-rooms, everything was truly regal; the parlors and halls were filled-with a slowly moving throng of handsome women and pretty girls arrayed in silks and diamonds, on the arms of hrave officers in uniform or distingue civilians en frae. Every one, on entering, was introduced hy the host to Gen. Grant, and hy Mrs. J. D. Fry to Mrs. Grant, and then passed on to join in the ever-increasing multitude of dancers and promenaders. The supper was an agglomeration of all the seasons' delicacies. The wine-room was conducted with a lavishness unheard of. It seemed as if the combined vineyards nf champagne were at one's disposal. Mr. Sharon gave on this occasion a practical example of California hospitality—that hospitality that is only limited hy the desires of tbe guest, and everything is dealt out with a Horn of Plenty.

Tbe festivities were kept up until an early hour in the morning. Commencing at one o'clock, train after train left the depot, freighted with returning lnads of delighted people. The Hon. Senator stood at the portals of his mansion, hidding each and every one a pleasant adieu, and receiving from all the congratulations due him for an entertainment worthy of the distinguished guest, and worthy of our State. Tbe reputation of the Belmont residence for grand displays was more than ever exemplified on this occasion, for nothing that the most fastidious could wisb or desire was wanting.

EXHIBITIONS LEADING TO DEATH.

That was a most shocking accident which occurred to the two halloonists nn Sunday. Two valuahle lives have heen sacrificed to the morhid curiosity of a crowd. Balloons have been sent up Sunday after Sunday from Woodward's Gardens, simply hecause they drew a large attendance, or, in other words, because they made money. The people went to see hecause of an unaccountahle love of witnessing dangerous feats. No useful purpose was served hy the ascensions. The science of navigating the air was in no manner promoted. It was an exhihition fraught with danger. Just that and nothing more. To witness that the people paid their money. To ohtain that money the balloonists endangered their lives. In this instance they gambled with fate and lost. They staked their lives against the gate money, and having lost the one they forfeited the other. Of all games of chance, surely this was the most unequal and the most to he discouraged. We pass laws to save men from tbe consequences of bucking the tiger. We won't allow our citizens, nor the strangers within our gates, to chance their money against the skill of the professional gamhler. We protect men against the loss of their money hy games of chance, why should we nnt protect them against the loss of their lives in dangerous and demoralizing games in which the dice are greatly loaded against them? There are many good reasons why we should so protect them. If they lose, and therehy pay the forfeit hy their lives, the State loses men who might otherwise he useful citizens. Wives and families are liahle to he left as charges upon the elemosynary institutions of the State. Ahove all, these exhihitions are degrading and demoralizing to the puhlic taste. Not long ago, in order to intensify the depraved curiosity of the crowd, certain balloonists in this city fastened a trapeze to their halloon and hung on to it with their toes when in mid-air. That horrible sight drew largely and paid well. The crowd cheered and were happy! What ahominably perverted tastes to he sure! The law ought to step in and prevent every exhihition that is merely dangerous. When they comhine danger with some useful purpose it may he necessary to tolerate them; hut when no good end can possibly he served they ought to he suppressed. While gambling with money is prevented, gamhling with human life ought certainly to he interdicted.

CALIFORNIA MANUFACTURES.

Slowly but surely our native productions are making headway, upon their own merits, against foreign manufactured articles. In fact, one of our largest importers recently admitted that the growing demand for home manufactures is rapidly curtailing the necessity of imports from the Eastern States and from Europe. This is one of the most encouraging signs of the times, and indicates that we are fast ridding ourselves of the foolish prejudice that foreign goods are superior to those made on our own soil. The first and greatest requisites in all manufactures are purity of materials and thorough workmanship. We are glad to say that these qualities are becoming tolerably well known in tbe Pacific States and Territories, as also in the seaboard countries of the Pacific, and even across the Rockies and in Great Britain. In the latter country there is an almost unlimited market for our canned fruits, and we believe that in a few years our wines and hrandies will make such headway as to cause an immense increase in our vineyard acreage. Canued salmon from the Sacramento and Columhia rivers are now heing largely consumed in the British Islands. We are also practically controlling the sugar market in Utah, Nevada, Oregon and the Territories. In Australia, where the New York and Boston merchants had opened up a market for doors, sashes, etc., we have supplanted them, to their manifest disgust. There is no reason why, with our facilities for tanning and manufacturing, we should not have the West Coast trade of America in hoots and shoes. We should also supply Sonora, Sinaloa and Durango with mining machinery. A reciprocity treaty with Mexico would add largely to our annual profits. In Colombia, Peru and Central America a similar course would give us the advantage over European merchants, who now enjoy almost a monopoly of the field. But, above all, let it he remembered that California manufactures have progressed thus far upon their intrinsic merits, and if we expect to maintain and push our position, we must steadily avoid adulteration and inferior workmanship. Discarding these, all is plain sailing.

THE MARCH ON CABUL.

With a loss of some seventy men killed and wounded, General Roberts has won a victory which will bring him in a few hours to the gates of Cahul. By valor and indomitahle perseverance Afghanistan was already conquered; hy forbearance on the part of the conquerors it was left uninjured, save hy the casualties of active warfare, and practically unchanged politically, save hy a change of rulers. By treachery the generous victor was insulted and betrayed. Now, with the gods of hattle and of vengeance the result must rest. That result is not difficult to foresee. At any moment we may expect to hear that Cabul is in the hands of the English. Probably the city will he surrendered; if not, it will be taken vi et armis. It is almost to he regretted, in this instance, that the code of civilized warfare prohihits retaliation in kind. A "good old fashioned" massacre would teach the Afghans more in twelve hours than humane treatment will in twelve years. Their conduct from the beginning deserved a worse punishment than they have received, though it is true they acted more like fools than anything else. Granted that tbe former Ameer, Shere Ali, did hate and distrust the Englisb hecause their conquests extended to the limit of his domain. Was not that limit a natural one, heyond which ths British were not likely to go? and had he not, on the other side, an enemy, Russia, who was fast approaching his dominions, and whose interest it certainly was to absorb them? But even apart from the question of actual danger, he had his choice hetween the friendship of a Power which has never hroken its word, and that of nne which has never been known to keep it. Blinded with hlank promises, he sided with the latter and insulted the former. There was no course left for the English but to make war upon him, and they did so with the result which is well known. Then, when the power of the conqueror and the faithlessness of the recreant ally were well known, the Afghans were still foolish and treacherous enough to violate the most sacred of international laws, and massacre an Envoy and his suite, in their nwn capital, with overpowering odds in their favor. For this it is to he hoped they will now suffer severely. England was right in declaring the war, she has been successful iu waging it, and she will now he justified in exercising every severity over the vanquished which the usages of civilized warfare will permit under such aggravated provocation.

CALIFORNIA'S PANDEMONIUM.

There are to-day some fourteen hundred men, the majority under 25 years of age, at San Quentin, who are heing disciplined and trained in the service of the devil, and who are provided by the State with harracks and rations, whilst their training in evil proceeds. That is all the State Prison means at this moment. If it is ever to mean anything hetter, if this reproach is to he lifted from the fair fame of California, it is necessary that a right heginning, under the new Constitution, should he made; for assuredly, as we hegin, so we shall proceed. The nhjects of the punishment of crimes are the deterring and reforming of criminals. It is evident that whatever best effects those objects, must be in the line of more economical as well as purer and hetter administration; and, therefore, as a question of dollars and cents alone, this demands the most serious consideration of the economist. But ahove and heyond the question of dollars and cents, lies the question of right, and on that ground the advantage to-day rests, not with society, hut with the convict. For society has played the tyrant and the harharian with her overhearing physical power. She has not heen content with punishing her criminals. She has insisted on degrading and brutalizing them hopelessly also. In this she has exceeded ber just authority, and put herself in the wrong. She has been faitbless to her progressive and civilizing mission, and insisted in maintaining the practices of a harharous age. She has made her State Prison a mere human menagerie, a hideous den of dehumanized men, whoss worst traits have heen developed under her mismanagement. Not only for her own protection, not only to save her purse, hut because there is a deep and urgent question of justice involved, ought society to remedy this grave ahuse, and place herself abreast of the reforms of the century. The truth is, San Quentin is a disgrace to the State. Men are herded together like so many swine. The ohjects of imprisonment are altogether lost sight of. The youth who enters possessed of one devil leaves possessed of nine. The deterring and reforming influences of such institutions have elsewhere heen brought to a high degree of efficiency. Governor-elect Perkins will soon he called upon to appoint new managers under ths Constitution. We hope he is imhued witb a high and intelligent sense of his duty in tbat regard. California's pandemonium needs a thorough reform.

HAWAIIAN RECIPROCITY.

It looks as if an organized effort is to he made in the East for the purpose of abrogating the Hawaiian reciprocity treaty. Congress will bs asked at the next session to have notice served upon the Hawaiian Government with a view to hring the treaty to an end. The sugar planters of the South and the refiners of the North do not like the loss of the Pacific coast market, which has heen the outcome of the arrangement so generously entered into with Hawaii. We pointed out what the inevitable effects would he when the matter was under negotiation. We foresaw that the bonus proposed to he given the planters in the Island Kingdom would stimulate production there, and enable them to monopolize the markets of this coast. The visit of King Kalakaua and the high sounding phrase of "reciprocity" tickled even representative men at Washington, and an era of good feeling set in, which resulted in a hig thing for the planters and people of Hawaii. We failed at the time to see where the reciprocity came in. We gave much. We ahandoned the sugar duties paid by the Hawaiians, hut maintained them as against all the rest of the world. What we obtained in return it would he difficult to tell. It was said that we would ohtain a larger share of the Hawaiian trade, hut we almost monopolized it at the time. It is trus that our exports thither have increased, but that is only because the treaty has given a sudden impetus to trade in the islands, and increased their requirements for the time heing. It is, however, one thing to grant a concession, and quite another to take it away again. Once commerce has taken a particular groove, and has firmly and profitahly estahlished itself under the fostering care of a national contract, it ought to he suddenly and ruthlessly destroyed. Capitalists from this coast saw the advantages of the treaty and have largely invested in the Islands in consequence. The profits mostly come to this coast, which they would not do if the Louisiana planters were allowed to have their way.

THE STOCK MARKET.

San Francisco, Oct. 16th.—The rich ore encountered in the southwest drift of Sierra Nevada, on the 2,300-foot level, has fairly electrified the stock-dealing public, and the sequence is a grand upheaval in the shares of the North-end stocks. Upon invitation of the managers, quite a number of experts were admitted to the mine yesterday, and the reports, in almost every instance, are of the most flattering and enthusiastic character. The drift is now twenty-five feet in rich ore, showing average assays in the face of from $250 to $300 per ton, while selected samples have been taken, giving returns in the thousand. The drift is now being pushed ahead again, and will connect with the Union shaft at the 2,400 level as soon as possible. The progress and appearance of this drift will be watched with the greatest interest and anxiety, and the market will undoubtedly experience some grand and lofty tumbling during that period. Quite a sharp break set in yesterday, occasioned by heavy realizing orders from the outside, and at this writing the market continues weak and unsettled. The liberal purchases made by inside parties to-day would seem to indicate that the worst is about over. While the balance of the list have not participated much in the advance of the North-enders, they have been moderately active and in good request. Outside stocks are comparatively neglected, with the exception of the two Noonday's, which have advanced under confirmed reports of a rich strike on the 300-foot level.

The Health of the City.—The sanitary condition of the city is unusually favorable for the time of the year. Last week the deaths were 78, and the week before 74. Only 8 were from zymotic causes. There was only one death each from diphtheria and typhoid fever. Diseases of the respiratory organs are on the increase. For two weeks there were no deaths from bronchitis, and but 4 from pneumonia. This week there have been already 1 from bronchitis, 1 from pleurisy, and 8 from pneumonia. Rheumatism is somewhat prevalent, and 2 deaths from it were registered last week. Two deaths occurred last week from inflammation of the womb; and the unusual number of 3 died of the only legitimate cause of death, viz., old age.

At the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Bank of California, held on the 14th inst., the following gentlemen were chosen Directors for the ensuing year: D. O. Mills, C. Adolphe Low, H. M. Newhall, Wm. Sharon, Charles Mayne, J. C. Wilmerding, H. W. Carpentier, Adam Grant, Jerome Lincoln, George W. Beaver and Wm. Alvord. The capital was reduced on the 1st of October from $5,000,000 to $3,000,000. No dividends have been paid during the year. The Board elected the following officers: President, Wm. Alvord; Cashier, Thomas Brown; Assistant Cashier, Byron Murray, Jr.; Secretary, S. Franklin.

We repeat our remark, made last week, that the Savings Banks are lending money more freely, and the expressions of confidence increase in numbers and strength. First-class securities are difficult to buy at our inside quotations. There is no change in the rates for money, but borrowers have less trouble than they had even a fortnight since.

Andrew Baird, 312 California street.

The Advance in Wheat.—The excitement of Thursday was renewed at the Produce Exchange, yesterday, by receipt of the Liverpool telegram advising a further advance in quotations of 4@6d., and the market here responded; 300 tons Sonoma Seed Wheat changed hands at $2 25, the highest price yet realized, and numerous lots of Shipping and Milling were disposed of at $2 15@$2 20 per cental, the closing rates being $2 15 bid and $2 22½ asked. The highest price on Thursday was $2 10. Our farmers are thus reaping the benefit from the shortness of tonnage and dilatory crop movement. It is now evident that the European deficiency has been underestimated. The advance of the past week amounts to $2,500,000, estimating our export surplus at 500,000 tons. Higher rates are expected.

The C. P. R. R. Company is building out a solid quay from the Oakland shore to the end of the wharf in the bay. Over 100,000 cubic yards of rock and clay have already been dumped, and the work, as planned, will require 1,000,000. The surface is to be wide enough for six tracks for cars, besides a roadway for vehicles and foot passengers. At the end of the wharf a large depot will be erected. Other improvements are in contemplation.

London, Oct. 16th.—A dispatch from Cahul says: Gen. Roberts on entering the city made a speech to the following effect—It will be necessary to inflict severe punishment. The buildings of the Bala-Hissar and of the city interfering with proper military occupation will be destroyed. A heavy fine will be levied on citizens. A Military Governor will be placed over the city and country within a radius of ten miles.

Quicksilver has risen in London to £9, at least this was the figure cabled on the 16th inst. The asking price advanced to 50c and 45c offered and refused. Our spot stock is nil, and since the great rise in price, Chinese merchants have shown a disposition to buy. It is hard to give a reason for this rapid and extraordinary rise in the price of mercury.

The Merchant's Exchange gatherings seem to increase day by day—a good sign of the increasing activity in business circles. The change in this regard, which has been wrought in a few short weeks, is truly marvelous. Our merchants all wear smiling faces, and have a word of good cheer to all. The improvement is marvelous.

London, October 15th.—Lord Salisbury, at an interview with Count Schouvaloff, the Russian Ambassador, refused emphatically to allow any Russian interference in the settlement of affairs in Afghanistan.

Gov. Stanford and family left for the East in a special car last Monday morning, intending to travel for a year or two for the benefit of Mrs. Stanford's health.

A description of the new town of Smithville, Arizona, is unavoidably omitted this week, but will appear in our next issue.

THE BOATMAN.

A maiden sits in a tiny bark,
Singing so sweetly,
The boatman he is grim and dark,
Rowed so fleetly.

The stream is narrow, the banks are
"Rest thee, good master," [fair;
Idle her longing, vain her pray'r,
He rows the faster.

Anon, they float on a river wide,
A mighty river.
Instead of flowers by the water-side,
Pale aspens quiver.

And lo! a woman where sat the maid
Who sang so sweetly;
The boatman, grim and undismayed,
Still rows fleetly.

On and on, till they reach the sea
That flows forever;
And drift away on the ocean free,
Returning never.

And vain it is for earthly eye
To follow thither!
And vainly mortal tongue may cry,
"Gone—whither, whither?"

PRESIDENTIAL RIVALRIES IN AMERICA.

The periodical demoralization which precedes the Presidential election every four years in the United States has begun. It is the more conspicuous and contagious because there are no great political issues to arouse and divide the country. There are neither principles nor men for whom any enthusiasm can be evoked, and the politicians are therefore compelled to expend a vast amount of ingenuity, as unscrupulous as it is carefully directed, upon the manufacture of political war-cries. In this temper a democracy which has given itself over to the workers of political machinery is always exposed to danger. There are in the United States, as in older countries, inflammable elements which any spark of agitation may light upon. During the railroad riots in Pennsylvania a couple of years ago, the middle classes, the owners of property, the taxpayers, the educational professional men, and the capitalists large and small, got a momentary glimpse of what was in store for them if, some day or other, the tail of the democracy succeeded in mastering the head. The campaign of General Butler and his ally, Kearney, in Massachusetts, revealed the same peril in another form. It is true the railway rioters were put down with the strong hand and the Kearneyite supporters of Butler were fairly beaten in Massachusetts, as the same piratical mob have been again defeated in still more remarkable circumstances at the recent Californian elections. But American society, unless it deliberately closes its eyes to the most patent facts, must now be aware that it is threatened at every national crisis with a revolt of the "Have-nots" against the "Haves." The "Have-nots," indeed, are more formidable in the United States than in older countries. They have emancipated themselves from the ancient restraints of reverence which were wont to hold them back from assailing social, religious and political institutions and ideas. They have experienced the coarse pleasure of trampling on the refinements of the educated and of exacting those refinements from competitors for political power. And with all this they have numerical superiority armed with the electoral franchise on their side. It will be surprising if they do not push forward and make some notable conquests.

The contest for the Presidency opens the sluices to this torrent of disintegrating and defacing selfishness. In the first or the second year of a Presidential term, American politicians, whether in office or in opposition, are able to bestow some care upon the public interest and to offer some resistance to the audacity and cupidity of a mob; but in the third year they grow timid and reticent; and in the fourth year, if they have not altogether abandoned decency and accepted the shibboleths of the mob-leaders, they are in all probability occupied in framing such arrangements of oratorical commonplaces as may seem to concede much while really surrendering as little as possible. But the cleverest of politicians is, in this conflict of wits, at a disadvantage compared with the mobs he is striving to cajole and deceive. He may win the game for the time, and get into power without, as he thinks, committing himself; but his concessions stand against himself, his party and his country. He has familiarized the electorate with dangerous views, and sooner or later he will be called upon to give them effect.

If we are not much mistaken, the campaign now begun in the United States will compromise the reputations of many public men, whether they are successful or whether they fail. The State elections which will be decided within the next few weeks are scarcely of less importance than those which will immediately precede the Presidential contest next year. The State of New York and the State of Ohio are the centers of the keenest interest; for in these the two most conspicuous competitors on each side are to show their strength. Mr. Tilden is still, if not the favorite, the indispensable candidate of the Democratic party. The keystone of Mr. Tilden's power is his influence in the State of New York. If it can be shown that his strength in the Empire State is declining, his claim to the Democratic nomination at the National Convention of the party next year will be seriously impaired. If New York, or the Democratic majority of its voters, is faithful to him, his title will scarcely be disputed. The hostility of the Republican, which manifests itself, in the ordinary American fashion, in the manufacture of slanders more or less piquant, does not hurt but rather helps Mr. Tilden. What is really injurious to his chances is neither this nor the prevailing belief that he is politically and otherwise tricky, but the growing feeling among Democrats with regard to him that he is the "Old Man of the Sea" of their party, of whom they cannot get rid. The fraud by which the Republicans "counted out" Mr. Tilden has given him what is called, by a sufficiently amusing twist of language, a "moral claim" upon the Democratic nomination for the Presidency, and this claim is found very galling and inconvenient by many Democrats. Some of these may be crossed in their personal ambitions by Mr. Tilden; others may consider him not the best candidate to unite the Democratic vote and to secure unattached supporters in 1880. At any rate, it is possible his supremacy in the State of New York may now be challenged and shaken; and if so he must probably give way to some rival, as yet unknown, in the Convention next year. Unfortunately, though Mr. Tilden did not take high rank as a statesman and though his political morality was not of an elevated kind, the Democratic politicians who wish to get rid of him have less respect for "capital" and more inclination to borrow from the vocabulary of the "Greenbackers" and the "Friends of Labor."

The Republican party have been more successful in getting rid of General Grant. The ex-President, whose "social successes in Europe" were used by a political "combination" in the United States as a pretext for a new "third-term" movement, has thrown over his agents, authorized or unauthorized, and left them in the most ridiculous position. A "Grant movement" without General Grant would not be easily worked, even in American politics; and General Grant's conversation with the Chinese statesman, Li Hung Chang, as well as Admiral Ammem's explicit statement that he had accepted the presidency of the Nicaragua Canal, can only mean that he is anxious to escape from a false position. Nothing could be more destructive of political virtue in the United States than a Grant "third term," which would be regarded, and rightly, as the achievement of a victory over Civil Service reform and all the other reactions against the "politicians." But from another point of view the project is less satisfactory. General Grant had a popularity of a certain kind which, in a democratic country perhaps, was the least mischievous. The masses looked upon him as the personification of the great struggle for the Union—the most ennobling political idea with which the American democracy has ever come into contact. General Grant would have had less need than other Republican politicians, and from his habit of mind less inclination, to pander to the passions of the mob. Now that he has left the leading place vacant, there seems to be no doubt that Secretary Sherman is the coming man on the Republican side. Mr. Sherman is an able financier; but, like most of his rivals, he lacks political backbone. "His natural tendencies," says the Nation, "are sound. In fact, when he thinks nobody is looking he usually creeps stealthily in the right direction; but when he thinks 'the people' is watching him he often jumps up and pretends that he is just as foolish as anybody, and can swallow as many lies as anybody." Such a man, when he encounters the seething folly of the West, is not likely to hold his ground firmly.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Emily Faithful, in her London Express, says: "The object of Arctic exploration seems likely, in this dead season, to divide the columns of some of our contemporaries with the terrible news from India. We have more than once questioned the utility of these passages through seas of icebergs, and we have never yet met with any exposition that proved the game to be worth the candle. The passages could only be used during a short period of the year; the climate kills all but exceptional people. What in the world is to be gained by discovering routes through such regions?

"'Cham,' the famous caricaturist of the Charivari, is dead. The quaint son of the Marquis de Noe was meant for the army, but the pencil was plainly his vocation, and he gave himself up to it. For forty years 'Cham' has charmed France with his clever drawings, and his yet more brilliant letter-press. Always funny, never ill-natured, never coarse, 'Cham's' drawings could offend no one, and not one of his many hundred caricatures was unfit to lie on the drawing-room table of the most scrupulous. He was passionately fond of animals, and his favorite dog was his master rather than his slave. In taking an apartment, he always secured a garden, not for himself, but for his pet. 'Cham' was a universal favorite—every one loved him, and he will be widely and deeply regretted."

FATE.

...knocked; I barred the door. But ere long from every room ... I cried, "and come no more; Vanish'd light and warmth and bloom ... guests who, gay and sweet, Hope and joy and young love went, ... bear thy face to meet." And, late lingering, sweet content.

Then my door I opened wide:
"Sorrow, haste to come," I cried;
"Welcome now, no more to roam:
Make henceforth my heart thy home."

HAWAIIAN RECIPROCITY.

The "San Francisco Merchant" of the 10th inst. publishes elaborate statistics, compiled by the Hawaiian Consul, H. W. Severance, Esq., almost entirely from official, and, consequently, reliable sources. Mr. Severance states that, in any case where estimates are made of the profits to California of this trade, the figures are under rather than over the mark. The survey comprises a period of thirty-two months, from October, 1876, to May, 1879, inclusive, and the recapitulation is as follows: 1. Average annual value of ship and steamer freights, inward and outward, $210,500. 2. Average annual value of passenger traffic, $87,200. 3. Average annual commissions (including guarantee) 5 per cent. on $457,960, imports from Islands, $122,898. 4. Average annual profits on imports to Islands, say 10 per cent. on $1,339,968, $133,996. 5. Average annual value of vessels built in California for Island account, $15,2,500. Total annual profit to San Francisco, average, $666,497. In the three years before the treaty, our domestic exports amounted to $1,461,839; in the three years since the treaty they have risen to $4,702,029, showing an increase in our favor during that time of $3,230,190. From September, 1876 to September, 1879, we imported from the Islands 100,548,536 pounds of brown sugar, worth $6,810,627, as against 39,450,040 pounds, worth $2,004,640, in the previous three years. It is noticed that China has been the chief loser by this treaty, because, while she furnished us with 32,-[illegible],668 pounds of brown sugar in 1873-76, we purchased of her in 1876-79 only 300,761 pounds, but whereas we are compelled to settle our balances with China in coin, we settle with the Hawaiians in the products of American or Californian labor, and our Capitalists are rapidly extending their influence in the Islands. These figures, which are a very brief summary of the Merchant's tables, prove conclusively that the treaty is of great benefit to the contracting Powers. It is silly for Eastern refiners to imagine their interests are endangered by any possible production of the Hawaiian Islands. Their capacity for production is limited, while that of Louisiana, Texas, and other Southern States, is practically unlimited, notwithstanding which the United States annually import between forty and fifty million dollars' worth of foreign sugar—in spite of protective duty. This Eastern idea of keeping our commercial wings clipped, or extracting our pin feathers, is about used up. We may stand the protective bundle on iron and cotton manufactures, but the line must be drawn somewhere, and we draw it at sugar. Meanwhile, as the treaty has yet [illegible] years to run, we suggest to Eastern refiners the wisdom of taking it kindly. Their purpose is altogether too transparent.

THE BEACONSFIELD TESTIMONIAL.

A writer in the "Manchester Guardian" ventures some assertions in regard to the Beaconsfield testimonial, which emanated from this city, that are entirely imaginary. The testimonial fund was contributed by British residents in San Francisco, the testimonal was designed and manufactured here, and its presentation was entrusted to gentlemen in London, more or less associated with California. It was a souvenir intended to express the high admiration in which the noble Lord's services to his country are held by British residents of California. Contributions were given freely, and with great spontaniety. Every Britisher gave something, and gave it cheerfully and heartily, the warmest approval of the movement being expressed by all. Emanating from this distant quarter of the globe, there is no possible room for questioning the motive of the subscribers. It was truly what it purported to be, i. e. a heartily outlowed token of respect to Lord Beaconsfield from his countrymen [illegible]bouts. The truth is Lord Beaconsfield's services are better appreciated abroad than at home. His idea of a homogenous empire comes closer home to the hearts of Britishers who have traveled, than it does to those who have not. It is a notable fact that colonists are more British than the Britishers themselves. They are in entire accord with the sentiments that would bind the various parts of the empire closer together. It is because they believe the present English cabinet cherishes those sentiments, that the existing government is popular in the colonies. We know whereof we speak. We come into contact with Englishmen from many parts of the world, and we find that they feel on this point just as the British residents of California do. England has yet to derive the greatest benefits from her colonies. She has gone through her last trying days with them. They have been nurtured through their infancy, and in their manhood propose to help their parent. They now are England's best markets, and in times, not far ahead, they will contribute money and men to fight for every right of their common empire. They believe that Lord Beaconsfield grasps their idea better than any other public man at home. Hence his popularity abroad.

Sir Frederick Hughes has announced his intention of becoming a candidate for Wexford. In his address he says: "I don't care three rows of pins whether you return me or not, but should you think proper to do so, I believe I can represent your interests without discredit, and peradventure with some credit to myself. I am a gentleman, I trust, with a sprinkling of housety."

Sandy, delighted with his countrymen for having won the Elcho Shield, was boasting of it to an Irish friend, who replied: "An' sure an' we'd bate you clean if we had volunteers in Ireland an' got practice." Sandy thus responded: "I'm share ye needna' complain o' want o' practice; ye got plenty o' that, shooting landlords."

A telephone has been placed in a Presbyterian church, the wires leading to the houses of several aged and invalid persons. The first communication from the minister was: "The Word is nigh unto thee. His word runneth swiftly."—Court Journal.

"PLEASURE'S WAND."

"We Obey no Wand but Pleasure's."--Tom Moore.

Baldwin Theater.—A comparatively large house assembled on Monday evening for the the first performance of The Girls. This piece is supposed to he a companion play to Our Boys—H. J. Byron's great success. It is said to have run in London one hundred and fifty nights. This run is simply inexplicable, if based upon the merit of the play itself, and can only he accounted for through the great excellence of the acting. The plot commences very naturally, with indications of clever possihilities as regards development and elaboration. It is the old story of the contest hetween refined poverty and vulgar wealth, rather neatly and humorously pictured. The characters all seem fresh and natural in their plausihility. The lines are in Byron's usual style—short, sharp and facetious—full of puns and innocent double-entendres. At times these sayings possess depth and power, and assume the shape of pungent truisms and witty aphorisms. It is true that in real life people do not generally conduct conversation on Mr. Byron's basis of funny things, but then it may he said that real life could stand this improvement. It may also he noticed that the working up of these jokes is too apparent, and the humor thus hecomes forced instead of spontaueous. The play has three acts. The first and the opening scenes of the second are entertaining and amusing, but from thence on the play is idiotic and absurd. The thread of the story, which so far has heen cleverly and delicately woven, seems, at the little episode of the baby, to change to thrum, for it hecomes coarser and coarser, ending in a tangle of ridiculous improhahikty. The last act is so tedious and mentally dispiriting in its primitive dramatic action, that the amusing effect of the earlier scenes is totally ohliterated, and the parting impression is one of ennui. The principal character is that of "Plantagenet G. Potter," a rich cad. It is played in Loudon hy Henry James, an actor of merit. He is said to represent this specimen of the largely extant class of vulgar, ill-educated, over-dressed city men, to perfection. This talented impersonation must he the cause of the play's success. Mr. Bishop fails totally in carrying out the author's purpose. In manner, dress and make-up, as well as in speech, there is nothing to indicate the nationality, and much less the local and class idiocyncrasies. It is evident that to the average democratic mind the line between the gentleman and the snob is imperceptihle. These strictures may be considered hypercritical, for, in the character under review, Mr. Bishop is received with shouts of laughter. But these are solely due to the gentleman's physical peculiarities, which constitute most of his stock in trade. It is a pity that the condition of the drama in this country does not permit Mr. Bisbop to confine himself to Shakesperean comedy, for in that line he shows dramatic ahility of a high order, founded upon intelligent research and study. Miss Carey's welcome was a warm aud cordial one. She was as graceful and pleasing as ever, and will prove a valuable acquisition to the company. Miss Lewis did her share satisfactorily, although displaying a want of taste in dress and coiffure. Her handling of the haby seemed natural to all the males, hut failed to he orthodox in some peculiar respect, for a matronly-looking lady seated hehind me, on Monday night, ohserved: "Dear, dear! how she holds it! One can see that she never was a mother." This criticism was, perhaps, correct, from the nursery point of view; hut as I, too, never was a mother, I viewed the scene with that naif hliss which is the offspring of ignorance. The apparent artificiality of the haby was a slightly awkward matter, and I wondered that the juvenile member of the company, who appeared so satisfactorily in Chums, was not included in the cast. But perhaps it was also one of Herne & Belasco's "original" works, and has gone with the Millionaire's Daughter, etc. Messrs. O'Neill and Bradley, particularly, and the rest of the cast, generally, were in "good form." Forget-Me-Not, a late London novelty, is in preparation. The same mysterious, inexplicahle forces that governed the London public seem to he at work here, for the audiences during the week have heen large, and The Girls is up for another week. If left to me, I should say: Six months!

California Theater.—The apathy our public is showing toward Miss Cavendish's acting is another evidence of its lack of artistic appreciation. That public patronage should he withheld from artists, whose talents run to delicate portraitures, or finely traced sketches of character requiring for thorough mental digestion the exercise of intelligence and intellectuality, is something that is not very surprising in this peculiar community. Miss Cavendish appeals, though, to all classes, for she possesses all possihle gifts of attraction. Besides the thorough knowledge of all stage business, guided hy intelligence, her mental and physical individuality is of that character that charms and pleases; her style of acting is of the same school as Miss Coghlan—vigorous, fresh and natural in manner, and healthy in tone. It must he that our poeple prefer the namhy-pamhy, milk-and-water actresses, for they neglect the others and favor these—Miss Varian, etc., for instances. I consider Miss Cavendish's "Lady Clancarty" a most admirahle piece of acting. It is an impersonation thoroughly artistic iu form, and elahorated with a wealth of detail that maintains a continuous interest. The strong characteristics of Miss Cavendish are well suited to the representation of the high-spirited "Lady Clancarty." There is an ardent impetuosity and a fascinating quickness about her every word and gesture. In the scene where her husband takes refuge in her chamher, and discloses his identity, her acting was delightful. The womanly modesty and tenderness, with the suhsequent transition to poignant despair at her futile attempts to save her lord, Miss Cavendish depicted with wonderful passion and truth. To the few who have witnessed her performances, Miss Cavendish's acting has been a rare treat, and the same regrets expressed at Miss Coghlan's departure are in order. The efforts of the stock company in support call for no particular mention, except in the case of Miss Stauhope. This actress played "Lady Betty Noel" with charming grace and verve, and was a delightful second to her sister artist. A word must he said about the elegant costumes displayed, particularly hy Misses Cavendish and Stanhope; these, besides heing gorgeous, were also chronologically correct.

Standard Theater.—Considering the universal depression in theatrical matters, the houses that Mr. Owens succeeds in drawing are remarkably large. The hill this week, consisted of "The Victims" and "Forty Winks." His assumptions of Butterhy and Spriggins are hoth jolly and laughter provokiug. They are full of Owens' innate humor, and characterized by his nice individuality. In Joshua Butterhy, his free, huoyaut style is shown at its best. His fun is unceasing and vivacious in the extreme. I wouder whether it has ever heen noticed that many of W. H. Crane's characteristics are ohservahle in Owens. A certain outward curvature of the legs, a species of hlowing and puffing, and particularly a peculiar strangled laugh. In Mr. Owens' these peculiarities are not ohtrusive. They fit in with a lot of other humorous traits. Mr. Crane, who must evideutly have studied Owens, makes these hits too prominent hy ever-recurring repetitions, and sbould also have studied Owens' moderation. With due deference to the star's high position on the stage, it may be said that he is too prone to indulge in private amusement. Mr. Kennedy's stock company contains some good actors, and if there is bere and there an inexperienced novice, or a wildly stage-struck amateur, this fact does not warrant Mr. Owens in audihly reproving any of the cast. "Dot," "Paul Pry," "Toodles" and "The Live Indian," are in rehearsal.

Herold's Concerts.—There was a good attendance at the second concert of the series. Lachner's Suite No. 1, Op. 113, was well played in all respects. Gade's overture, "In the Highlands," a beautiful work, was rather indifferently performed. The third and fourth French horns made some awkward hreaks, and in the accelerando passages the strings lacked unanimity. Schuhert's Am Meere was given as a concert solo. It is far grander, and more in keeping with the subject, to give the air to the tromhone, especially with such a soloist as Moore. Ruhenstein's Ballet music, from the Opera Feramors, is decidedly picturesque. The opening hars were sadly marred hy the hrass instruments. What this orchestra lacks is simply a sufficient amount of rehearsals. The conductor is excellent, and the material of the hest, hut pecuniary agencies prevent the members from coming together often enough to insure a perfect ensemble.

Authors' Carnival.—On Thursday next, at the Pavilion, will be given the first of the evenings in this grand display of literary and inventive talent. The hooths, designed under the direction of Jules Tavernier, embrace studies from Dickens, Cervantes, Bulwer, Longfellow, Irving, Tennyson, Goethe, Shakespeare, "The Arabian Knights," Moore, and many famous historical and poetical characters. The tableaux and groupings, in the midst of the fairy gardens and wonderful effects of light, will be rendered hy 600 ladies, 400 gentlemen and 300 girls and hoys, in heautiful costumes. The proceeds of this most intellectual entertainment will he divided among six charitable institutions. Tickets for sale at Gray's, Sherman & Hyde's and Kohler & Chase's music stores.

At Platt's Hall, on Tuesday next, at 10 A. M., E. S. Spear & Co. will sell a full assortment of magnificent Paris and New York made furniture, embracing parlor and chamher sets, dining-tahles and chairs, sideboards, armoires, library furniture, writing-desks, card-tahles—in short, every elegant and useful article that could find a place in refined and cultivated homes. There is also a vast variety of goods suitahle for Christmas and New Year's gifts, in ebony, satinwood, rosewood, walnut and other material. No such opportunity has heen presented, and, taking into consideration the rapid advance iu prices at the East, this will he the last for some time to come.

Chit-Chat.—Teresa Singer, Strakosch's new prima donna, is said to have a wonderful voice.——Scott Siddons has resumed readings.——Lizzie Harold will prohahly travel during the winter with Rohson and Crane.——Ada Cavendish is playing on a certainty.——As it is impossible for managers to expect a successful competition with the Authors' Carnival, some of them will close during the week of its existence.——Pinafore has heen translated into Russian.——Max Maretzek's opera, Sleepy Hollow, will be produced in Paris, and the libretto is undergoing translation into French.——In Kansas they call fifty cents for theater tickets "war prices," and won't pay it.——"Tell me," whispered Miss Prude, hehind her fan, at the London Gaiety; "tell me, Charles, which of the girls is naughty?" And Charles replied, under his voice: "I'll tell you, dear, when we come to one that is not."——The different theaters have been very liheral in the matter of loaning costumes, properties, etc., to the Authors' Carnival. This a clear case of self-destruction.——Cavendish is a very handsome woman, and her appearance causes many an eye to glisten, and many heart to heat.

The Fall styles of gents' furnishing goods are coming on the market and J. M. Litchfield & Co., 415 Montgomery street, have just received a choice assortment of the latest patterns. This well-known firm make suits to order and guarantee a perfect fit.

SPORTING ITEMS.

Pedestrianism.—The result of the six days' walk for ladies was a genuine surprise to every one, although we know many would-be wiseacres who say they expected Belle Sherman to win. That lady is as shrewd as an old jockey. She started out with a fast gait, but walked in such poor style that no one thought she could last, and thereby enabled her friends to make a fortune in bets. Von Berg's sickness was genuine, and was the only thing that prevented her making good the expectations of her friends. She has been confined to her bed ever since the race, and is not expected to recover for some time. Of course, people who bet must expect to lose; but we think that Belle Sherman's trick of telling inquirers she would make 340 miles, and then, after they had backed the distance, refusing to do it, was a mean trick, and one that should cause her to be ruled out of any future competitions. Following is the score: Sherman, 337 miles; J. Donley, 321 miles; C. Maynard, 308 miles; A. Donley, 286 miles; M. Greenleaf, 233 miles; M. Tourtelotte, 249 miles; S. Wiley, 203 miles; A. A. Santos, 177 miles.——King Hedley and an Apache Indian ran a half-mile race Wednesday. Hedley made a false start and winded himself. The Indian won; time, 2 min. 20½ sec.——The race between men and horses is hardly a thorough test of their relative merits, as no really first-class pedestrians compete. We believe that in a fair contest a good man could easily beat any horse; but the result of this race is an impenetrable mystery. The betting is about even—Brodie being the favorite man, and Controller the favorite horse. But the ways of horsemen and professional pedestrians are sometimes very devious.——All the talk about Howell coming here was unfounded, but we expect some first-class pedestrians from the East will come and try conclusions with McIntyre and Platt.——We hear that all the winners in the six-days' walks are perfectly satisfied that they had their fair share of the gate receipts when they investigated the accounts. It seems that they had confounded receipts with profits, and forgotten that advertising and printing cost money. Mr. Lawton's reputation as an honorable man is of itself sufficient answer to the groundless talk of disreputable hangers-on to pedestrians.

Baseball.—San Francisco must be regarded as a Paradise by Eastern clubs, of which three are in town and two on the road.——The Chicago Club arrived here last Tuesday. They are in charge of Mr. Spalding, who stables his team at the Palace.——The Hop Bitters play the Cincinnattis at the Recreation Grounds Sunday. The former Club have telegraphed East for permission to stop here another month.——The Chicagos open their hall at Oakland with the California Club Sunday. Betting 100 to 1 on Chicago.——Ed. Williamson, of the Chicagos, can throw the ball 130 yards. He will give exhibitions during his stay.——The Recreation Grounds are being much improved. A new fence is being built, and a much-needed stand for reporters and scorers erected.——Charles Locke has secured the lease of the new grounds corner Seventh and Townsend streets. They will be the finest in the State.——The Chicagos and Cincinnattis will play together before they leave. Their game will be a rare treat.——The rumor about the Hop Bitters selling the game, last Sunday, started through one of their team being seen in company with a notorious black-leg sporting man. Visiting clubs must keep out of bad company if they desire to retain their reputation for honesty.——The Hop Bitters beat the Californias, last Sunday, at the Recreation Grounds; score, 9 to 5.——The Cincinnattis beat the Californias, at Oakland, last Sunday; score, 5 to 0.

Rowing.—Elliott is out in a card, in which he states that should Boyd consent to row him, he is willing for the winner to meet Hanlan. Should Elliott win, or Boyd refuse to row him, he will try and make a match with Hanlan, and should Hanlan return the cup to England, he will go to Canada and row him on Toronto Bay for a stake. In order to settle the question as to which is the best man, he will meet Boyd on the Tyne, and has already drawn and signed articles, which he has sent to Newcastle for approval.——The winning crews in the St. George Regatta have received their medals, all of which are very handsome trophies.——The rumor about a challenge cup for barges is authentic, but the donor desires his name suppressed for the present.——The Dolphin Club have agreed to purchase Griffin's new barge. It is in order for the Pioneers to get one as good or better.——The Hanlan-Courtney race did not come off as fixed. Courtney's boats were sawed up by some ruffian, who broke into the boathouse during the night.

Coursing.—Why did the Pacific Club fix their meet for the same date as the Pioneer Club?——The meeting of the Pioneer Club at Merced, November 5th and 6th, will be a grand affair. Sixteen entries for old dogs and eight for pups guarantees splendid sport.——There is a great deal of talk about a wonderful pup by "Speculation," out of Queen's "Messenger." It is looked upon as a sure thing for the puppy stakes at Merced.——It looks as if "Bulldozer's" friends will be disappointed, as the dog does not come into condition well.——We don't think "Tunstead's nomination will be heaten, bar accidents.——Following are the principal nominations for the old-dog stakes up to date: "Minnehaha," "Thornhill," "Speculation," "California Boy," "Lady Alice," "Branch," "Lady Anne," "Bulldozer," "Master Joe," "Tamalpais."——The Club will hold a special meeting on Tuesday evening next, at 539 California street.

Yachting.—The season will close with a performance of Pinafore, October 25th, on board the Azaline, which will he moored off the Club house at Saucelito. The fleet will he arranged round her hows out, so that the spectacle can be viewed from the quarter decks of the different yachts. After the opera, the yachts will take a trip to Vallejo.——The Chispa is proving a very fast yacht. Last week she made Vallejo in 1 hr. 45 m.; distance, 28 miles. Mr. Bowie wants to give the Clara a race with his new yacht, but the Clara declines.——A model yacht race is talked of, to come off next week on Oakland Creek.——The Lively has just made a trip to Sacramento, with a hunting party on board.——Collins is building a new sloop.——Will the Chispa ever meet the O'Connor?

Shooting.—We are thankful to our readers who have complimented us for our exposure of the miserable quality of Winchester cartridges. It is our pride as well as our duty to expose fraud in sport whenever brought under our notice.——T. Tunstead, I. Duffy and another shooter bagged nine dozen quail last week in the gulches north of San Rafael; they only shot for five hours.——Snipe and duck bunters are looking anxiously for rain, to drive the birds to their regular Winter haunts.——Messrs. Liddle and Kaeding are supplying their frieuds with Greener's work on choke boring. It contains lots of information of great value to sportsmen.

Archery. The rage for this sport seems on the increase, and the practice of our local clubs shows great improvement. As telegraphic matches are fashionable East, why not try conclusions with some clubs like the Merry Bowman or the Highland Park Archers'——Mr. Spalding, the Eastern Archery and Base Ball authority is in town, he says California scores are regarded as remarkably good where he comes from.——San Francisco and Oakland clubs talk of trying conclusions at the double American round, to fix the positions of the different clubs.

Swimming. The monthly contests for the Neptune Club badges came off last Sunday. Dean won the swimming race for the third time, and is now entitled to hold the badge. He had a close shave for it, beating S. Williams by a bare six inches, in the excellent time of 12 min. by 55 sec., the best on record for that course, which is reckoned a little over half a mile. J. Taylor won the diving match, with a score of 21¾ out of a possible 25. S. Williams and Melrose will swim over the club course, Tuesday, Oct. 21st, 6:30 A.M., for a handsome gold medal.

THE HEALTH OFFICER'S REPORT.

When the public shall come to put a proper value on sanitary administration the annual report of the Officer of Health will he read with as much avidity as the last murder or divorce. The gain of so many lives or the diminution of so much sickness will be considered as important as a political victory or a reduction of taxation. The annual report just issued by the medical officer of health presents features of unusual interest and affords positive proof of a marked and steady improvement of the public health and of the great value of good sanitary organization. Never in the history of this city has the death rate been so low as it was during the year ending in June last. On the estimated population of 305,000 the mortality was 14.75 per thousand. In 1877-78 the mortality was 16.59 per thousand, and in 1876-77 it was 20.56 per thousand. Last year there was a saving of 484 lives, as compared with the previous year, and of 1,677 as compared with 1876-77. Nor is it less remarkable that nearly this whole gain of human life is due to the diminution of diseases which have always been described as preventable, that is, diseases of the zymotic class. As compared with 1876-77 there is, in this class alone, a diminution of 1,677 deaths, or considerable more than 100 per cent.; and the Officer of Health fairly claims that this saving of life and health is undoubtedly due to the greater efficiency of the sanitary laws, which have enabled the Board of Health to remove some of the most dangerous sources of disease.

For example, Mission Creek, which gave forth, unchecked, its filthy germs of zymotic disease, has been filled in and rendered comparatively harmless. Old sewers have been cleansed and new ones constructed. During the past year alone 2,661 nuisances have been reported by the Inspectors, and nearly all remedied. Many thousands of new drains have been constructed or re-made, and the cost of the entire administration, something less than $20,000, has been repaid fivefold by the saving of doctors' bills, nurses, and those other expenses which follow in a sickly household. These facts should encourage the completion of the sanitary works still remaining to be done. The first and great want of the city is an intercepting system of drainage, whereby the present clogging of the lower level sewers may be put an end to. These sewers would remove the sewage away from the water frontage, and to this end it is necessary to employ a skillful engineer. House drains ought to he under his control. No sewer should be constructed except in accordance with the general plan and with the best materials. Let us have no more wooden culverts, no more soft bricks, no more sand in place of mortar. Let the Officer of Health be permitted to ventilate the sewers, which, he says, will do more toward preventing disease and reducing our death-rate than many thousands expended in any other direction. We most cordially recommend the perusal of this most satisfactory report.

"The World," the Flesh, and the Devil.

[By a Truthful Penman.]

A tragedy has been brought to light in Paris. A woman named Levy, in walking along the Boulevard de la Chapelle, observed a man in a hlouse, with waxed mustaches, emptying out of a hasket pieces of what appeared to her to he fresh meat, and kicking them into a sewer. When he observed that her curiosity was aroused, he took to flight, throwing down the basket. She approached the sewer's mouth, when, perceiving a human arm, she fainted. A crowd immediately gatbered, and a commissary of police was fetched. The pieces were collected and put together hy a surgeon, who pronouuced the contents of the hasket to he a human corpse. The head alone of all the membors was missing. An inquiry was set on foot, and the woman Levy was sent for hy the commissary. On entering his office she knocked against an agent in uniform, which led her to turn round to look at him in order to apologize. She suddenly cried out, "There's the assassin." The persons who were with her thought her mad from emotion, but were astounded, when she repeated the accusation, to see the policeman grow pale, tremble, and rush out of the room. He was arrested on the stairs and brought hack, when, falling on his knees, he avowed the crime. The murdered man was a traveler for a Paris jeweller, and had several hoxes of jewels which he was to have taken to the provinces as specimens. The murderer, one Prevost, inveigled him, under the pretext of wanting to buy a watch chain, to his lodging. There he offered him a glass of wine, and, while the two were hohnobhing, suddenly struck him with a hammer on the forehead and killed him instantaneously. He proceeded to cut up the hody on the spot, and next morning be went to the La Chapelle sewer to hide the evidences of tbe murder. It was his intention by hoiling the head to render identification impossible.——Twelve sets of telephones have been sent out to Sir Garnet Wolseley for use at the seat of war in South Africa. The advantage of the telephone over the telegraph is that the General can carry on confidential talk with the officer at the district station, or a soldier can creep out towards the enemy's lines and whisper hack the information as to position. A fine wire—the thinner the hetter—is all that is needed. This the soldier carried on a reel upon his hack, a mile weighing only a few pounds. This will he the first time the telephone has been used as an instrument of warfare.——Never have we seen a more painful performance than that which is now to be witnessed in the old Exhibition building in Vienna, where Blondin daily risks his life on a rope stretched across the vast dome at a giddy hight. Blondin has expressly requested that no net be placed under the rope to break his fall should an accident occur. He says that he has found hy experience that the public do not care half so much for his performance when the possibility of a terrible accident is not present to lend a zest to the show. He receives a large sum of money for every exhihition; and the more daring his feats the higher are his wages. He now traverses the rope without the halancing bar, walking hackwards hlindfolded. Blondin is followed everywhere hy a Mr. Thompson, who has made a bet of ten thousand pounds that the Hero of Niagara will fall from the rope and he killed ere he attains the age of sixty. Five years more and the cruel wager will he decided one way or the other, for Blondin is already fifty-five.—The World.——A servant girl, who had just heen admonished hy her mistress to he very careful in "washing up" the hest tea-things, was overheard, shortly afterwards, in the back kitchen, indulging in the following soliloquy, while in the act of wiping the sugar basin: "If I was to drop this ere hasin, and was to catch it, I s'pose I shouldn't catch it; hut if I was to drop it, and wasn't to catch it, I reckon I should catch it."——The following is the latest sample of Nihilist prose: "The annibilation of the Throne is the fundamental doctrine of the emancipation of the people. Only when that has been achieved can the people think of self-reorganization—not from the high to the low, or in accordance with the ideal plan of any philosopher, but solely, absolutely, by the people and for the people. The future social organization must proceed hy the association and federation of all working people. Always and everywhere the Popes and the Czars have wittingly, systematically, hlood-thirstily, and cruelly persecuted the people. Politics and religion have been but instruments in their hands. Therefore, down with the Popes and the Czar! Do they not corrupt our children? Do they not trample justice and truth underfoot? Are they not the cause of the ignorance, poverty, and demoralization of the people? Then, if yeu wish to he free, put an end to hoth Popes and Czar."——The editors of the Rappel and the Marseillaise, the two organs of advanced Radicalism, advertise for adhesions to the 'Propagation de la Foi Civile,' of which they are the prophets. The principal tenets of this Civil Faith are the rejection of baptism and of religious ceremonies for marriage, deathbeds, or funerals. The Marseillaise has received nearly two thousand, some of which are couched in peculiar language. Two young ladies, Clemence and Pauline C., declare that they 'perceive how they have been duped in the clericalism in which they have been brought up. That word serves as a veil for many to rally their infamies.' 'To-day,' they continue, 'we possess a sentiment which till now was unknown to us—that of batred.' A married couple, Monsieur B. Cherdet and his wife, send their adhesion, with the following rider: 'We offer our corpses to scieuce; and if the project of law relatiug to the incineration of the body should he adopted, we desire that our ashes should be thrown to the wind, so that the clerical party can never touch them.'——It is worth noticing how many of the names that are now on every man's tongue are Irish. Poor Cavagnari was horn of an Irish mother, and passed his youth in Leitrim; 'Redan' Massy and Sir Garnet are hoth Irish; so is Lord Beresford, V.C.; so were Lieut. Hamilton and Dr. Kelly, both of whom were murdered in the Cahul massacre. Hamilton was quite a youth; his eldest brother has only recently joined the har,—World.

THE SING-AWAY BIRD.

O say, have you heard of the sing-away bird,
That sings where the Runaway River
Runs down with its rills from the bald-headed hills
That staud in the sunshine and shiver?
"O sing! sing-away! sing-away!"
How the pines and the hirches are stirred
By the trill of the sing-away bird!

And the bald-headed hills, with their rocks and their rills,
To the tune of his rapture are ringing,
And their faces grow young, all their gray mists among,
While the forests break forth into singing,
"O sing! sing-away! sing-away!"
And the river runs singing along;
And the flying winds catch up the song.

It was nothing but—husb! a wild white-throated thrush,
That emptied his musical quiver
With a charm and a spell over valley and dell
On the banks of the Runaway River.
"O sing! sing-away! sing a-way!"
Yet the song of the wild singer had
The sound of a soul that is glad.

And, beneath the glad sun, may a glad-hearted one
Set the world to the tune of his gladness.
The rivers shall sing it, the breezes shall wing it,
Till life shall forget its long sadness.
"O sing! sing-away! sing-away?"
Sing, spirit, who knowest joy's Giver—
Sing on, hy time's Runaway River!

VICTOR HUGO.

Seventy-seven years ago Victor Hugo was horn a poet, and a poet he has solely remained despite his efforts to make of himself a politician. He has written many extensive dramas which "play" well, notwithstanding their inordinate lengtb; he has written some of the most magnificent poetry that France has to show, and the most terrihle political satire in any language came from his pen. His novels are masterly, and were perfect until he was induced to write hy the line. He is purely a man of sentiment, yet of so strong and winning a nature that he has always found followers even in politica, and still finds them now when he has come in his old age to believe in tbe near approach of an era of universal peace and concord in the world, and in the establishment of the United States of Europe. He was a great master, and is a man of kindly and humane disposition.

[We have enshrined this admirable colored portrait of Victor Hugo (from Vanity Fair), on a board in our office entitled "Pictures of News." Come and see it without charge.]

A Kentucky sportsman, who has been in Africa lion-hunting, contributes the following to the local sporting paper on his return:—How to catch lions. The desert is composed of sand and lions. Take a sieve and sift the desert; the lions will remain. These you place in a bag you carry for the purpose.

An American paper observes that England may he "mistress of the C.'s," but she has never heen ahle to master the H. The remark is severe, and we may meet it with the suggestion that America makes too great use of ber N.O.'s.

HOTEL LIFE.

Hotels, or inns, have departed very widely from their original idea. Formerly, they were merely houses of accommodation for travelers; now, they are that, and much more. In American cities they are homes for the hest people. When they were exclusively used hy transient visitors, they were subject to very close police supervision, and were amenable to strict legislative enactments. An immense hody of common law, providing for their good management and protective of the rights of guests, has come down to us from past times. The old laws, however, have fallen into desuetnde. Another power has practically replaced the onerous laws of other days. The force of puhlic opinion now compels respectful attention. That opinion receives its direction and its momentum from the press. Hence, it has come to pass that among all liherty-loving people the press has rights as well as duties. Its duty is to inform people of those things of which they have a right to he informed, and in performing that duty firmly, truly, and without private malice, acting from good motives, and pursuing justifiable ends, it is very properly sustained and protected hy the law. Having thus protected the press, the people expect from it a faithful performance of its duties; and if they do not get that, they dismiss the recreant newspaper as they would an unfaithful servant. That is the power the people retain over the press. If it fears to do right, they suppress it hy failing to support it. If it fails to do the work rightly expected of it, they refuse to subscribe to it, and it dies of want of sustenance. In this respect the people are exacting task masters. They seek information, know they have a right to it, pay for it, and insist upon having what they pay for. We have shown how they have come to depend upon the press to help them form an opinion as to what hotels are well managed. We have seen how the severe laws of the past have been allowed to fall into disuse, hecanse they are replaced by the hetter law of puhlic opinion. Formerly, hotels were subjected to a most severe police surveillance; they could not conduct their husiness without a license, which was liable to he revoked at the dictum of a common constable. They were put on their good hehavior. Their husiness was exceptional, and needed exceptional treatment. The stranger within them might he swindled by indirection, or rohbed hy force. It was possihle for them to he either traps for the unwary, or decent resting places for respectahle people. Hence came the strict supervision of which we have spoken. If that were necessary when hotels, or inns, were only used hy travelers, how much more essential is it now that they are the permanent homes of virtuous wives, pure daughters, and of moral, cultured, refined, and respectahle people generally? The prejudice of the times is against the rude hand of the common policeman, hut for all that the determination is none the less great to insist upon irreproachahle management of large caravansaries. Hotel life, as it exists in this country, has often been severely criticised, especially hy intelligent foreigners. It undoubtedly has its drawbacks, yet withal it is suited to the necessities of our people. Hotels have come to he esteemed fair substitutes for private homes. In order to he that they must discriminate as to the class of customers they will serve. They must draw a broad line hetween worthy people and those who are known to be unworthy. They must he homelike in their quiet, their decorum, and in their freedom from objectionahle surroundings. It is customary for persons advertising for a home in a private family to intimate that "references will he given and required." Why should not the principle of requiring references as to good character he applied to homes on a large scale, as well as on a small one; to hotels as well as to private houses? The hest, and perhaps the only practical way, and certainly the only way now known to the puhlic, hy which hotels can supply evidence of character, is to merit and obtain a good repute with the puhlic, that may he read and known of all men. The same inquiries which people make when in search of a private home, ought to he made when seeking one in a hotel. They should hesitate to entrust their social life to a household, who are not reputable guardians of their own social lives. They should strictly inquire if the master of the house is cleanly in his morals, and decent and orderly in his hahits, tastes, and surroundings. If he is not these, then the reasonable presumption is raised that he is not the man to make either a small, or a large house, the respectable home of respectable people. If he lacks aught in these particulars, he is pretty sure to fail to realize the just requirements of numerous guests, whose instincts rise to a plane that he knows not of. In short, you might as well attempt (to use a homely, hut expressive phrase) to make "a silk purse out of a sow's ear" as to endeavor to make a disreputable rue into a respectable and high-toned hotel proprietor. Oil and water won't mix. A fast man cannot, if he would, make a safe provider for the moral surroundings of pure people. He may he rich, and guild his house with fine gold, hut heneath the veneering there is sure to be had material nevertheless. These are ohvious truisms that are not susceptihle of successful contradiction. Take them, and apply them to each aud every hotel within our city. They are the aquafortis that will destroy all alloy, and leave only the pure gold behind. If there is any hotel that will not hear this test, then it is a shame and snare that should he avoided by all who desire to find a respectable abiding place for themselves or their families. How far certain hotels fall short in these particulars we expect to demonstrate ere long.

DEATH OF MR. THOS. LYTTLETON HOLT.

Mr. Holt is thus mentioned hy our friend, Geo. Augustus Sala, in the Illustrated London News, of Septemher 20, 1879:

I first knew Mr. Thomas Lyttleton Holt in the year 1846, just after the collapse of the railway mania and the Iron Times. Even as Napoleon migrated from the Tuileries to St. Helena, and Manager Elliston from Drury Lane to the Surrey, so did Mr. Holt ahdicate a splendid position and an income (at the rate) of twenty thousand a year to accept the editorship of a modest little weekly called Chat, which was published at 304, Strand, at the south-west corner of Holywellstreet, and the price of which was one half penny. The proprietor of Chat was Mr. Frederick Marriott, who is yet alive, and owns and edits with great success a well-known Californian journal, the San Francisco News Letter. Mr. Holt, as editor of Chat, was my literary father. I had published in the year 1845 a crude little story in the Family Herald, hut Mr. Holt (in concert with Mr. Marriott) first gave me regular employment, taught me my earliest lessons in the trade of journalism, and introduced me to the "gentlemen of the press." I ultimately became editor of Chat, myself, at the magnificent salary of a pound a week. Ah! those were my happy days.

ENGLAND.

Greatest and fairest and hest,
England, my heautiful mother,
Words cannot picture the love
And the yearning my heart hath for thee;

Far have I roamed, hut thy place
Can never he filled hy another—
Thou, and thou only, art home—
Art home and a parent to me.

They talk of thy fogs and thy rain,
But they who speak thus do not know thee;
They see hut thy smoke-laden cities,
They touch hut thy horders at most;

Old Ocean may rage on thy cliffs,
But his waves strive in vain to o'erthrow thee—
As the lace on a fair woman's skirt
Are the mist and the surf on thy coast.

But thy heart, O dear England, they know not—
Thy towns—nay, thy hamlets—all hoary
With fame that was old when their country
Was still a blank desert unknown.

They feel not the glamour that rests
On thy hanners so ancient in story,
They heed not the struggles that gave thee
Thy freedom, yet left thee thy Throne.

THE JUDICIARY UNDER THE NEW CONSTITUTION.

It would be well if every part of the New Constitution were likely to work as well as that which deals with the Judiciary. Undoubted reforms have been made in that direction, and not one moment hefore they were needed. The delays of the law are proverbial, hnt in this State they have become a scandal and a shame. They amounted to a virtual denial of justice. No man could depend on collecting his own, hy means of a suit, under two or three years. Legal interest was hut seven per cent. per annum, whilst money was worth from one to one-and-a-half per cent. per month. A premium was therefore offered men to resist payment as long as possible, and it has been possihle, under our Judicial system, to resist it for an unconscionably long time. Cases could not hs got through our District Courts under a year, and when at last they reached the Supreme Court they frequently dragged their slow length along for years. Justice, to he effective, should be speedy. Finality ought to be reached in the hriefest possible period. Long continued delays encourage litigation. Decisions that are quick, sharp and effective, are the hest provocatives to settlement without resort to law. When men can evade their just obligations for indefinite periods, hy means of legal quihhles, they are very prone to resort to them. Speedy law has always worked well. Cheap law, however, is another thing, and we are not quite sure it is as desirable. When the costs against the losing party are likely to he heavy, unjust claims are rarely carried into court, and just ones are as seldom resisted. In this State the unsuccessful litigant is not made to pay for the luxury of going to law as dearly as he ought. All ths expenses which his opponent has necessarily incurred in resisting an unjust claim, or, in promoting a just one, ought to he fully repaid. That is the practice elsewhere. It is an equitable practice, moreover it lessens litigation. If a man knows that he will have to pay all the costs to which he needlessly puts his opponent, he will be very careful to see that he has a good complaint, or a good defense, as the case may be. We should he glad to see the Legislature take this matter in hand, and provide that the losing litigant shall foot his opponent's hill of costs. The New Constitution increases the number of District Courts, or, as they are hereafter to be called, "Superior Courts," to twelve. Seeing that, in addition to these, we are to have a Police Court, and four Justice's Courts, it must he admitted that our machinery for grinding out judgments is pretty extensive. San Francisco will have more courts than suffice to do the husiness of all London. Yet it cannot he denied that they were needed, if we are to judge of the fact hy the inahility of existing courts to overtake the work presented to them. After the first of January next the Supreme will he divided iuto two parts, and its capacity to accomplish results increased twofold. Calendars that are now crowded, ought soon to be cleared, and thereafter the appelate court ought to keep fully up with its work. Heretofore it has fallen far hehind, and in consequence has suffered in the puhlic estimation. There are not wanting close observers who believe that it might have done better. Judges now will have to make affidavit that no case remains undecided that has been suhmitted longer than ninety days, upon pain of having their salaries withheld until they can truly make that declaration. The judiciary under the New Constitution will undoubtedly he a great reform upon the existing order of things.

DEATH OF WM. B JOHNSTON.

The death of Colonel Wm. B. Johnston, for many years resident Secretary of the Liverpool and London aud Globe Insurance Company, cast a gloom, not only over the insurance fraternity this week, but which also pervaded the whole mercantile community. The unfortunate gentleman was thrown out of his carriage as he returned to his residence from the San Rafael depot on Friday evening, 10th inst., his skull being fractured, causing his death at four o'clock on Saturday morning. His funeral, which took place on Monday, was attended by all the fire underwriters and their employees, who marched in a body to the Church of the Advent, afterward accompanying the cortege to Laurel Hill Cemetery. On Monday, the 6th inst., Colonel Johnson presided at a gathering of the insurance men of this city, for the purpose of hidding farewell to one of their associates, Mr. W. N. Olmsted, who had resigned the agency of his Insurance Company, and was ahout leaving this coast to engage in business in New York. The occasion was a very hearty and genial compliment to that gentleman, and the felicitous manner in which Colonel Johnson conducted the proceedings will long he remembered by those present. Mr. George Mel has been appointed by the local Board of Directors, resident Secretary pro tem. of the Liverpool and London and Globe Insurance Company, and his numerous friends, especially the insurance community, hope to see him permanently occupy the position, for which his long service as second in rank, has so eminently fitted him.

THE TOWN CRIER.

"Hear the Crier!" "What the devil art thou?
"One that will play the devil, sir with you."

"He'd a sting in his tail as long as a flail,
Which made him grow bolder and bolder."

Chas. Warren Stoddard is not an habitual joker, and whenever he does anything in that line it has at least the merit of unexpectedness, which is more than can be said of the attempts of Sam Davis and other quack humorists who follow joking as a profession. In Sunday's Chronicle Stoddard writes an interesting letter, telling of his travels in the Orient and of an interview with Abd-el-Kader. A fac-simile is given of what Stoddard claims the Algerine chief wrote in his album, with this translation: "Praise be to God alone. Mr. Stoddard, in Damascus, has this day called on me. Abd-el-Kader." Any of our readers familiar with Chinese characters will perceive at a glance, by reference to the letter we speak of, that Mr. Stoddard has substituted a Chinese wash receipt for the warrior's writing. For the benefit of those who don't read Chinese, we translate: "Thanks be to Josh. We have this day received one pair socks, one handkerchief, one collar, one shirt, all in very bad condition. They have not been washed for years, and they must have been all round the world. He will have to pay fifteen cents for them. Sam Kee."

Did it ever occur to any one that the intended honor to General Grant at the Pavilion, known as the "Camp Fire," looked very pretty on paper, with the description of the tin cups, hard-tack, coffee, and other impedimenta of war, while in reality it was a useless farce, a senseless piece of buffoonery, and, if we may believe the daily papers, eventually a beastly hoodlum orgie, with beer as a basis of attack? If the ship-biscuits had been real war hard-tack, that could have traveled of their own accord and beaten McIntyre in a six-days' walking match; if the coffee had been mouldy and supplied by an army contractor, and maggots had been as omnipresent as bummers, even then there could have been no excuse for the shoddy reunion. But the patriot loves it, and the ex-Confederate cleaned up his lachrymal glands to exchange beery tears with his late antagonists, and, anyhow, it was a crowd, and what more can any hero want?

A gentleman has been hauled up before the courts for disposing of his infant offspring by dumping it into the hay; and yet this is called a free country! Things have come to a pretty pass when an indulgent father is to be hindered from giving his child a salt-water bath. The Health-Primer on bathing expressly declares that salt water has a most beneficial effect upon the system; and it may be taken for granted that, in this particular case, the child enjoyed the dipping, since it stayed in rather longer than the Faculty approve. When we remember how many youngsters, as they grow older and pass into the fourth grade at school, become effectually weaned from water, salt or fresh, it seems intolerable that the law should interfere with a parent, bent upon making his progeny feel perfectly at home in the pure element.

The stories about Commodore Nutt's arrest this week are all very funny, but none of them true. The facts are, that when the police entered his saloon to arrest him for keeping a disorderly house, he ran down a rat-hole in the rear of the bar and was only dislodged by the aid of a ferret. In locking him up it was useless to put him behind the bars, and, as there was not enough air in a basket, Captain Short confined him in an old boot, tying a string tightly round the ankle. He made two attempts to escape in court, by crawling up the prosecuting attorney's pants, under the supposition that he might be mistaken for a flea, but he came down on hearing the motion granted relative to his trial by a jury of his peers, being confident that no amount of sparrows that they can catch will find him guilty.

The thoughtless way in which the infidel press of this city handles religious matters is a source of sincere pain to all fervent Christians, including, of course, the T. C. Here is the way a daily contemporary speaks, this week, of a convention held in this city: "The delegates adjourned for lunch at 1 P.M., and at 3 P.M. partook freely of the communion." Such items as these convey very wrong ideas to the rising generation, and we rebuke them in the same spirit as Paul did the Corinthians.

A fresh Eastern man bought out a good live country paper in Napa county some two months ago, with the intention of showing the entire community how to run a journal up to the top rung of the ladder of success. On the morning when the Sheriff claimed it as his own, and was disposing of the type at wholesale lead rates, a rival contemporary came out in a sympathetic editorial, remarking that the last proprietor had improved the journal to the limit of his ability.

It is rumored officially that the number of officers in the United States Army so far exceeds the total of rank and file that a British traveler, on witnessing a review the other day, remarked: "Aw, by Jove, this is weally, twuly wepublican simplicity; the pwivates capawisoned weally elegantly, and their supewior officers dwessed in the ordinawy homespun cloth I've wed about. Fact, pon honor!"

On dit, that one of the Workingmen's successful candidates on the Judicial ticket is already in treaty with the management of the California Theater, for the purchase of a red velvet robe, with a white ermine border, and a full gray wig. These men are not so ignorant as might be supposed; they all go to the theater and know how a judge ought to be dressed.

These Eastern Baseball Professionals are worse than gatling guns. Just as we are going to press the news comes from Oakland that McCormick, the Chicago pitcher, hit the only Nolan in the chest with the ball, and that two surgeons have been probing all the afternoon for the ball, which was found lodged in the muscles of the back. If it does not gravitate he'll take a benefit and run for Mayor next time.

The Los Angeles Herald, with admirable and thoughtful sympathy, heads its obituary column with "Died," and then, between that ominous word and the hitter announcements which tell of the loss of father, mother, brother or sister, comes a touching tribute to the sorrow of the bereaved ones. It is very short, but speaks volumes in four words: "Funeral notices one dollar."

The Hitching ordinance is generally disregarded in Oakland, for the simple reason that the hitch comes in when a man just misses the boat.

Dr. H. W. Bellows says he never knew "one man or woman who steadily evaded the house of prayer and public worship on the Lord's Day, who habitually neglected it and had a theory on which it was neglected, that did not come to grief and bring other people to grief." Of course not. Post hoc, ergo propter hoc; and we never knew a man with a nose on his face or a squint in his eye, who did not come to grief or bring grief to others. We never knew a man like Dr. Bellows who did not bring infinite grief to all sensible men, that he should be left free to talk his weary fetichism in the face of day.

The Freemasons having adopted a small boy, who was forwarded free of charge from New Orleans to this place, and taken up a collection of money for his use, the Central Pacific Railroad has ingeniously cut off the threatened glut of Eastern urchins by raising the rates of passage from nothing to full-grown prices. This is bad for the benevolent men of the Bergh stripe, but we all breathe more freely; and the Masons themselves, we are told, have held a secret session, and passed a vote of thanks to the Railroad Company for getting them out of their awkward fix.

The reason that Mexicans, in the lower walks of life, rarely attain eminence is that, in nine cases out of ten, as soon as they have acquired a few hundred dollars as a starter, one of their bosom friends, brothers or cousins, immediately stabs them and disappears with the coin, which he spends cheerfully on aguadiente and Chili pepper stews. The latest returns, with several precincts to hear from, are from Elko, where a gentleman named Lopez battered in the skull of his dearest friend with an axe. The provocation was seven $20 pieces.

A curious feature of California, both in the past and present, is, that while it is legal to lie about anybody with perfect impunity, the moment any one unguardedly tells the truth he is immediately arrested for libel. You may stigmatize a courtesan as a lady and denounce a blackguard as a gentleman, but if you should ever be insane enough to imagine that "truth is mighty and will prevail" look out for squalls. However, our own particular ship can weather them all right.

The Present Contest between horses and asses is drawing large crowds to the Pavilion. Now, if the horses win, what in thunder will they do with the money? A novel idea strikes us, however, that, as it has been the custom to present walkists with bouquets, so this is the time for the admirers of the horses to purchase garlands of carrots, bouquets of bran mash or other acceptable offerings to the poor brutes that are being speeded against their will in the champion farce of the age.

The vile spirit of monopoly asserts itself in every direction. Its latest form is the movement in Eastern churches to put down what is called extravagance at funerals, meaning by this the natural right of a dead man to a decent burial. Surely, after a poor devil has toiled through a grimy existence he may be allowed to enjoy a quiet turn-out with his friends before he becomes unpleasant. Selfishness is at the bottom of this business.

The advertising business is being smoked. The public may be a dunce and a blockhead, but the public will learn by and by; and when, hereafter, a smart Chinaman tries to get up a run of custom by marrying a Cincinnati girl and opening a roast-pig shop, people will cock their eyes and say: "Too thin!" That's what it means—Chinaman all same 'Melican man, only more so.

There were a good many hard things said about the School Department last year; but it was reserved for the Board of Education itself to call a spade a spade, by heading its report of the examination into the old scandal, "Moore Perjury." We should like to compliment them, if we were perfectly sure where frankness ended and shamelessness began.

A case of sudden death is reported by one of the dailies as the result of "inanition," as many as four hours having passed since the last hearty meal eaten by the deceased. Between inanition like this and the intellectual plethora of the reporter, one stands irresolute; each seeming to be more deadly than the other.

The Oakland papers say that John Ruth, of that city, is the champion shot of the world, because he made a score of 990 out of 1,000, last Tuesday. There are two little errors to be corrected. The marksman's name is Genuine Truth, and his score was 999 out of 1,000.

Mary Ann has not been seen
Since early Monday morning;
She lit the stove with kerosene,
And mizzled without warning.

A horse-car conductor recently found a letter containing money, which, instead of appropriating, he foolishly forwarded to its designated address. We presume the maniac was discharged by the company, if not prosecuted by the driver for failing to divvy.

Strange, that with so much study on the Descent of Man, Darwin should have overlooked one decisive point in the life of the Chimpanzee, which settles his blood relationship to man: "They grow ugly and foolish as they grow old."

The mysteries of language are past finding out. Fredk. Douglass calls Grant a "granite-faced" hero, and Cooper Institute thunders applause. If he had only said "stony-faced," they would have given him Hail Columbia.

By private letters from Kentucky we learn that a number of jackasses, each with four legs, will arrive here within ten days, to walk for the championship of the Pacific Coast against the other fellow that wins the prize.

General Grant tells the Oregon people that foreign nations appear to respect us more than we respect ourselves. There may be a reason for this. Perhaps we know ourselves better than foreigners know us.

Bismarck is suffering with neuralgia, and his physicians prescribe entire rest. This always happens when the Chancellor is going to disturb the rest of other people, and so there are squalls ahead.

Oaklanders have the mumps, but the affliction is lightened for them by the fact that they always go home in the dumps at leaving the city. A desperately monotonous home has its advantages, after all.

The Christian Union asks whether the world is growing worse. Really, we hardly feel competent to answer. Ask Mr. Beecher.

It does not follow that every time you hit a greaser you invariably strike oil.

NOTABILIA.

THE PEDDLER'S SONG.

Lawn as white as driven snow;
Cypress black as e'er was crow;
Gloves as sweet as damask roses;
Masks for faces and for noses;
Bugle-bracelet, necklace, amber;
Perfume for a lady's chamber;
Gold quoins and stomachers,
For my lads to give their dears;
Pins and poking-sticks of steel.
What maids lack from head to heel:
Come buy of me, come; come buy, come buy,
Buy, lads, or else your lasses cry.

WILLIAM SHAKSPEARE.

Senator Blaine is said to possess a wonderful memory, and every good Maine man has his pocket full of anecdotes about him; how he recognized the cook who pinned a dishcloth to his jacket when, as a small boy, he visited the kitchen in search of surreptitious doughnuts; and knew the identical rattan which stimulated the budding genius, after a separation of seventy-five years; and other like incredible things. But not even a fanatical Maine man dares to assert that Blaine remembers a better restaurant than Swain's, 213 Sutter street, and for a good reason. They all know it to be the best, most elegant, most comfortable in the country.

Turkey now exports to England alone one hundred thousand dollars' worth of hazel nuts every year, and in this fact there is more hope for the future of the Ottoman than in protocols or Tauzimats. Every civilized man knows the intimate and indissoluble connection between nuts and wine. One hundred thousand dollars' worth of nuts exported means a million dollars' worth consumed at home; and, accordingly, we find that the orders for Landsberger's Private Cuvée are constautly coming in from Smyrna and Constantinople.

There is going to be a row in musical circles. Patti has imported a baritone by the name of Ciampicellaj with a final j, and if Wilhelmj doesn't snatch that man's nomenclature bald-headed, he is not the man we take him for.—Puck.

Cabul, now happily in the power of the British, is a most ill-built, badly-arranged city, and yet it lies in a terrestrial paradise, with fruit gardens about it, whose renown fills all Asia. It is in the East as in the West; God sends meat but the devil sends cooks. Now that the English have the place, they will undoubtedly begin to import Montanya's Union Ranges, the very best cooking apparatus in the known world, and life in Cabul will be a dream of bliss.

The London World mentions that the Empress Eugénie finds distraction from her sorrow in compiling the memoirs of her son; and this suggests the fitness of a new edition of Walpole's Royal and Noble Authors, with additions. What the World did not know we are able to state with authority, that the Empress is collecting photographs of the Prince from all countries, and has assigned the place of houor to Bradley & Rulofson's magnificent portrait.

Fashionable people will soon be opening their front-window blinds, and reporting themselves as at home.—N. O. Picayune.

The London papers come down on the gymnastic Talmage. Truth says of him: "He was a dead failure, as he deserves to be, for his lectures were wretched, and generally in very bad taste;" and it might have been added that he never was dressed as a divine ought to be. How should he, when he did not buy his outfit and neck-gear at Carmany & Crosett's, 25 Kearny street? All the clergymen in the city patronize this elegant establisbment.

No man can guess what force and vitality his frame possesses until he goes through a course of sea-bathing at the Neptune and Mermaid Baths, foot of Hyde street, North Beach. This brings out all the vigor of nerve and muscle, and revivifies the blood to such a degree that life becomes a perpetual joy. The water is fresh from the ocean, the beach natural, the air full of ozone, and Prof. Mohor, an accomplished master, is at hand to give instructions in swimming.

Gen. Grant has figured up the cost of his trip, and finds he is out just two dollars and sixty-five cents.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

It is well known that President Hayes is almost as much of a temperance man as Father Matthew or John B. Gough; and very naturally, therefore, he is critical with regard to the water he drinks, and prefers so decidedly the Napa Soda that he never is without a supply of it.

Drowsiness, biliousness, pains and aches, and ague, Hop Bitters always cures. Read advertisement.

The days of Cod Liver Oil are numbered, and we say it with full recognition of all that has been done for suffering mankind by that beneficent and nauseous tonic. No more shuddering disgust for the weak ones; henceforth they will look gladly for the hour to come round, now that F. & P. J. Cassin have tamed consumption and all its kindred by their wonderful cordial, compused of Old Rye Whisky and Pure Rock Candy.

If your throat feels sore or uncomfortable, use promptly Dr. Jayne's Expectorant. It will relieve the air passages of all phlegm or mucous, allay inflammation, and so give the affected parts a chance to heal. No safer remedy can be had for all Coughs and Colds, or any complaint of the Throat or Lungs, and a brief trial will prove its efficacy.

Those Eastern people are horribly slow. A man named Clark has committed suicide in Cleveland, O., because he was accused of unfaithfulness to his wife. Why don't these young men go West?

On the 8th September extraordinary darkness prevailed in London from 11 A.M. till sunset and after. The heat was also very great. Similar darkness may be justly said to fill the minds of those dull mortals who do not buy their hats at White's, 614 Commercial street, and it is greatly to be feared that they may experience hereafter even a greater degree of heat.

"BIZ."

We remark continued activity in commercial circles, nor is this activity confined to Imports alone, but Exports are alike booming. The Freight market is also active, and is quite inspiriting to ship owners. The shipping interest of the port has been looming up considerably of late, after a long period of loss and depression. It is very seldom that our fleet of disengaged ships in port become reduced to some six or eight in number, and not more than three of them will be in readiness to take freight for a fortnight to come. The present nominal freight rate for Wheat to the United Kingdom, in American wooden ships, is 70s. asked, possibly an offer of 65s. short lay days might be accepted. There is not a disengaged iron ship in port, which is something very unusual. The Grain fleet on the berth is having quick dispatch. There are at this writing 41 vessels on the European herth, of some 63,000 registered tons. The Grain fleet sailing hence since July 1st now foots up 100, against 112 vessels same date last year. These ships carried of Wheat, 3,733,206 ctls., of the value of $6,695,700, this season, against 4,106,013 ctls., $7,082,614 last year at same date. Our receipts of Wheat for the two seasons stand thus: 1879, 4,824,385 ctls.; 1878, 4,688,539 ctls. Flour receipts from interior mills, dating from July 1, 1879, 494,987 qr. sks.; from July 1, 1878, 603,911 qr. sks.

Our combined exports for the two past seasons stand thus: Flour, 1879, 125,795 hbls.; 1878, 151,538 hhls. Wheat, 1879, 3,799,136 ctls.; 1878, 4,157,980 ctls. There yet remains a large quantity of Wheat exposed to the elements, unprotected along the river hanks, tbat is heing hurried to market as fast as vessels aud the low state of the water will permit. There is also an unusually large stock of Wheat and Barley stored in warehouses, in Stockton and other interior towns, that is covered hy cash advances and held on storage for the season, and will not be immediately placed upon the market. Nevertheless, there seems to be a general willingness, upon the part of farmers and large holders, to follow the market, rising as it is, both here and in Liverpool—quite satisfied in obtainiug the present rate of $1 90@$2 ₱ ctl. for their Wheat.

Quite a mistaken notion prevails. on 'Change and elsewhere, as to the profitable results to our own shippers of the late rise ir. Wheat and freights. The fact is that John Bull, as usual, got the lion's share. The "bloody Britishers" are 'cnte in their management of their granaries—they keep down home prices until the latest possible moment, and get large shipments of Breadstuffs afloat, and en route to the United Kingdom, aud then, at a favorable moment, step in and buy every grain cargo loading or on passage, that they can get hold of, and, when this is secured. buying long, as it is called; then the ball soon becomes inflated, and up she goes. This is an old trick of London and Liverpool merchants, and has been so ever sence we were first made to feel its bitterness, as long ago as 1846 and 1847. In September, Wheat, with us, was $1 85. and freights £2 5s.@£2 10s. But, early in October, a change became visible, and many Wheat cargoes were sold short by some of our largest shipping houses, at 46s. 6d.—47s.@47s. 6d. At these figures many purchases were made in England by cablegram; and, when secured, English prices soon rose to 50@52s. 6d., freights to 60s., and then some of these shrewd sellers were obliged to enter the home market at $1 90@$1 95 for Wheat, and pay 60s. freight therefor, and at this date Wheat is $2 ₱ ctl., and freights 65@70s., while to-day's Liverpool quotation is 55s. ₱ quarter. At the present Spot price of 2c. for Wheat, and 65@70s. freight, shippers do not seem inclined to act rashly over any new engagements, but prefer to await further developments, or, it may be, concessions.

Barley.—Prices rule low for ally kinds, there being very little demand for export, although there is some going East overland. The present spot price for Feed is 70@75c ₱ ctl; Brewing, 80@85c. Chevalier is scarce, and the price nominal. This season's exports by sea 315,000 ctls, against same time last year of 212,000 ctls. Shippments East by rail not yet compiled.

Corn.—The supply of old is yet large, and the new crop now coming in. Demand light. Price, 80@90c ₱ ctl.

Rye.—It is said that some 750 tons have been bought lately for export to France. Since then the price has been advanced to $1@1 25 ₱ ctl.

Oats.—Receipts from the North are liheral. Market dull at $1@1 37½ ₱ ctl.

Beans.—Stocks of old Colored are large, hut Whites are more called for than those of Bayos, Pintes or Reds. It is said that none but White are consumed in Great Britain.

Hops.—The receipts from the north are more free, and prices steady at 23@32c, with no great movement.

Wool.—The demand is active and prices are decidedly higher. Large purchases for Eastern account are reported, including a large line of Oregon Valley. Prices of California rule from 12½ to 20c; Oregon Valley, 25 to 32c.

Hides.—Dry Hides are in active request at 18c for selections.

Tallow is dull of sale at 5@5½c for Crude; Refined, 7@7½c.

Leather.—Stocks are very light, and tanners now have the whip hand and are getting good prices.

Butter and Cheese.—Fresh Roll Table is scarce at 32½@37½. Point Reyes 38@40c for gilt-edged. Cheese has risen to 10@15c for fair to good dairies.

Honey.—This season's crop a failure. Stock light. We quote Strained 9@10c; White Comb, 12½@15c ₱ lb.

Bags and Bagging.—The combination price is 12c and holders firm, as advices received from Calcutta are such that high drices of Burlap goods, Jute Gunnies, etc., all promise to rule high for the year to come. Those of our merchants who ordered Bags in Calcutta early, for next year's trade, have a good prospect before them.

Candles.—We note sales of 5,000 boxes Rope's Improved, 11 and 14 ounces, private. Quotable at 10c@14c.

Case Goods.—Apricots and other canned fruits are all the turn dearer. Salmon is also held with more firmness—1-lh tins, $1 10@$1 12½ from Columbia River standards.

Coffee.—The market continues strong at 16½c@17½c for Costa Rica, 16c@17c for Guatemala, 15@15½c for Rio.

Coal.—Cumberland is said to be higher, but all other kinds remain as long quoted. The British Columbia and Coast supply is quite sufficient to keep prices of Sydney and other kinds in check.

Chemicals—Are more called for, out of sympathy for all other goods.

Cement.—Tbe demand is light, and low prices continue to rnle.

Fish.—Pacific Cod are plentiful. This season's catch, 1,144,000, which is rather more than last year. Prices rule low.

French Goods.—The market is sluggish for all kinds. Prices nominal.

Hardware.—The market is excited, booming, and prices hard to quote. The advance very considerable.

Malt Liquors.—We have nothing encouraging to say to Scotch or English malters. Their Ales and Porters are now measurahly supplanted by the home Pacific product.

Oils.—Kerosene is the turn dearer, with sales of 3,000 cases Pratt's Oleophene; present rate, 17c; Astral, high test, in cases, 25c.

Provisions.—The market for Bacon, Hams aud Lard is quite active, at hardening prices.

Quicksilver.—Last week we noted sales at 34@34½c., but later sales were made at 35c., and on Monday last 500 flasks sold at 36c. On the 9th inst. London quotation was £6, and on the 10th £6 5s., and on the 14th inst. £7 per bottle was given as the London price, witb sales here at 39@40c. Some of our largest producers have sold short, not believing in the permanency of this rise without an export demand from Hongkong. The stock in China is said to be very large, and at present there is no demand from that quarter. Recent purchases are said to he for New York account. As our people are not fully posted as yet as to the immediate cause of this sudden and unexpected rise of nearly 10c. per pound, and, being temporarily out of stock, they now refuse to sell under 42½@45c. It is said that tbe Bonanza mines are carrying a heavy stock, and are not buyers.

Rice.—The market for China is dull at 4¾c@5¼c, with a big stock. Hawaiian Table is in light supply at 6¼c@6½c.

Sugar.—We note a sale of 1,000 bags Hawaiian at 7¼c@8¼c. White and Yellow refined remain unchanged at 10¾c@8¾c as extremes.

Salt.—We have no sales to record.

Tobacco.—The market is strong, but jobbers as yet make no cbange in their rates.

Teas.—The market is strong for Japan, at very full auction rates.

Wines.—We have exported by sea since January 1st, 1,600,000 gallons and 2,100 cases; same time last year, 1,400,000 gallons and 2,700 cases. These figures do not include overland shipments. Native Wines of all kinds are steadily growing in public favor.

Metals.—Pig Iron, Tin Plate, Sydney Tin, Pig Lead, Copper, Zinc, etc., are all higher, the advanced rates very considerable, and every day's quotations so varied that it is difficult to give correct figures. It looks to us as though the trade would boom over and collapse suddenly.

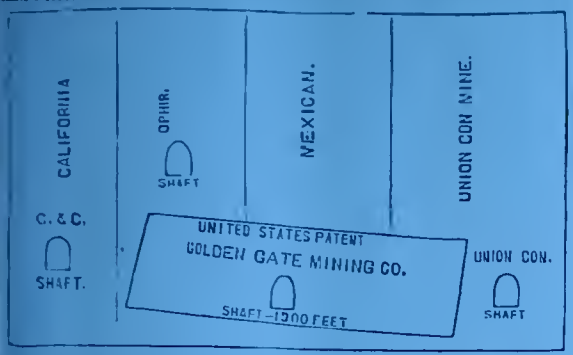
GOLDEN GATE--DIAGRAM SHOWING LOCATION OF THIS NEW MINE.

The machinery at the new working shaft of this mine is about being overhauled and put in order, ready to resume sinking at an early date. The shaft is already 850 feet deep, well timbered throughout, and the machinery is of ample capacity for sinking 1,000 feet deeper. This shaft is one of the largest size, and is on a direct line between the C. & C. and Sierra Nevada shafts, therefore is sure to intersect valuable ground and participate in the rich bonanza developments now being made in Union and Sierra Nevada.



The Golden Gate location is of special interest and importance at this time, as it adjoins the California on the north and extends to the south line of the Sierra Nevada, across the eastern portion of the Ophir, Mexican and Union mines. The ground is of great interest and value, and becoming daily more so, the more especially as its title is one of the oldest, and made perfect and secure by United States patent. Good ore was found in streaks and bunches in the former workings of the mine, but too near the surface for any large concentration. This shaft, however, will develop it at a proper depth and eventually place it on a par with its aristocratic neighbors.—Gold Hill News, October 13th.

CUMBERLAND MINE.

Captain Hanlon Pronounces Shaft No. 2 as Rich as Shaft No. 1. In fact, the Finest Looking Body of Ore He has Ever Seen.

Captain Daniel Hanlon, the new Superintendent of the Cumberland Mine, in his letter of last week, confirmed all the glowing accounts made by previous Superintendents relating to this wonderfully-rich and extensive bonanza of Arizona. We gladly published extracts from the same, as it fully corroborated private information of a very positive character which we had long possessed. The Cumberland Mine has three shafts in ore. Captain Hanlon's report last week was upon Shaft No. 1. This week he alludes to Shaft No. 2, and unequivocally pronounces it the finest looking ore body he has ever seen. Every preparation at the mine is being made to receive the 10-stamp mill, which, it is expected, will be shipped from here in November. This will place the Cumberland property, in a very short time, on a bullion-producing and dividend-paying basis.

The officers of this company have struggled hard against many adverse circumstances to bring the mine to this condition, and deserve all the credit that can be bestowed upon them. With all the developments to date, there has been no assessment upon the stockholders, and none will be necessary, from the present outlook.

Captain Hanlon writes: "The Cumberland Mine is a perfect ledge, unbroken at any point on the mine, and in this particular stands unequaled by comparison with any other mine in Arizona. The ore is twice as rich as that of the famous Vulture Mine, and promises to be more extensive."

The Vulture is twenty-five miles from the Cumberland, and supposed to be a chimney of ore from the great Cumberland lode. It has been a dividend-paying property for over twenty-eight years. It has given up millions of dollars in the past, and is still being worked successfully in a quiet way. Yet we see how much greater are the prospects of the Cumberland, situated, as it is, on the true mother lode. Next to it is the Martinez mine, with very rich ore in its shaft; also, the Gnome mine, which will be worked next Spring. We also hear of two more discoveries on the same lode, so that when the Cumberland mill gets fully to work, crushing ore, a very lively time can be anticipated in the neighborhood of Cumberland City. In our judgment, it was very wise on the part of the company not to place the Cumberland mine on the stock-boards until the time of paying dividends arrives. Then the stock will certainly rise to its true value, depending entirely upon the number of dollars paid as a monthly dividend upon each share of stock. The President, at the Company's office, 417 California street, furnishes willingly all information regarding the mine.

OCTOBER 1st, 1879.

F. E. Luty, Esq., Secretary: The Boston Con. and Last Chance joint shaft has been sunk and heavily timbered to the depth of 110 feet. The shaft is being continued down at an angle of sixty-one degrees, as originally started. The better and richer portion of the ledge has dipped east out of the shaft, but we still have two feet of quartz in sight, most of which is fine milling ore. The ground is soft and the work is progressing satisfactorily. Yours truly, J. G. McCLINTON, Supt.

BOOK NOTICE.

Moondyne. A Story from the Under-World. By John Boyle O'Reilly. Boston: Roberts Brothers. 1879.

Apart from the thrilling incidents of a novel, this hook has merits of its own. It treats with prison discipline, as carried out in the convict settlement at Freemantle, Western Australia, under the old regime, when the prisoner was treated as simply a heast, and under the new, when the idea of his humanity was admitted; that some among convicts are capahle of reformation; that among the numher are many who never really helonged to the criminal class, and a few who are suffering for the crimes of others. Belonging to the two last classes, for example, were the Irish gentlemen who were concerned in the "Manchester riots," most of whom, it will he remembered, were rescued a few years ago hy an American captain.

There are harrowing details of the four months voyage in a transport-ship—fire and fever and nameless wickedness making a hell afloat! Yet, rough as are the details, they are only too truthful; while the horrors of convict life, as depicted, fall far short of what the writer knows about them at Hohart Town (Tasmania) and Norfolk Island.

For the rest the story has within its 315 pages more real pathos and less mawkish sentiment than is customarily met with in works of this kind, while some of the facts on which it is built were related to the writer hy the aged nun, now, if living still, at the convent of the Sisters of Mercy, in Melhourne. Where the scenery of the country is the author's theme, it is treated with a master's hand, familiar hy long acquaintance with its outlines, lights and shadows. Of course, the story of the gold mine is wild romance. Gold has not heen found in the country. The heroes of the story are three young gentlemen, and the heroine a simple, pure Lancashire Lass, who has heen ruined hy a higamist sailor, whose real wife murders the infant of the second, and escapes detection, while the mother is convicted and sentenced for life for the murder; and when we meet with her she has heen in Milhauk Jail already five years. Attached to the staff of the Prison is a "Scripture-reader," one of those nondescript ministers, neither exactly cleric nor lay. This worthy had passed hy the door of "Numher Four," our heroine, though he knew she was a Protestant, for those five long years without once calling in to pray with her, till on one of his visits to the prison he noticed the white head-dress of a nun in the cell; and then his zeal hlazed forth. Here is a full-length portrait of him, and a good sample of the author's descriptive powers:

"Sister Cecelia had a great many prayers to say every day, and she made a rule of saying the whole of them in Alice's cell. The change in Alice's life hecame known to all the officials in the prison, and a general interest was awakened in the visits of the good Sister to her cell. From the governor down to the lowest female warder, the incident was a source of pleasure and a suhject of every-day comment. But there was one official who heheld all this with displeasure and daily increasing distrust. This was Mr. Haggett, the Scripture-reader of the prison. Into the hands of Mr. Haggett had heen given the spiritual welfare of all the convicts in Millhank, of every creed—Christian, Turk and Jew. It was a heavy responsihility; hut Mr. Hagget felt himself equal to the task. It would he wrong to lay hlame for the choice of such a teacher on any particular creed. He had heen selected and appointed hy Sir Joshua Hohh, whose special views of religious influence he was to carry out. Mr. Haggett was a tall man, with a highly respectable air. He had side-whiskers, hrushed outward till they stood from his lank cheeks like paint-hrushes; and he wore a long square-cut hrown coat. He had au air of formal superiority. His voice was cavernous and sonorous. If he only said "Good-morning," he said it with a patronizing smile, as if conscious of a superior moral nature, and his voice sounded solemnly deep. One would have known him in the street as a man of immense religious weight and godly assumption, hy the very compression of his lips. These were his strong features, even more forcihle than the rigid respectahility of his whiskers, or the grave sanctity of his voice. His lips were not exactly coarse or thick; they were large, even to hagginess. His mouth was wide, and his teeth were long; hut there was enough lip to cover up the whole, and still more—enough left to fold afterward into consciously pious lines around the mouth. When Mr. Haggett was praying he closed his eyes, and in a solemnly-sonorous key hegan a personal interview with the Almighty. While he was informing God, with many deep "Thou knowests," his lips were in full play; every reef was shaken out, so to speak. But when Mr. Haggett was instructing a prisoner, he moved only the slightest portion of labial tissue that could serve to impress the unfortunate with his own unworthiness and Mr. Haggett's exalted virtue and importance."

INFLATION IN NEW YORK.

The gradual advance of Wall-street stock since last May is ominous of future disaster. Since the memorahle Black Friday, many years ago, nothing like the preseut excitement has heen approached, and when the reaction sets in it must he violent indeed. It is true that the grain exports and treasure imports, at New York, certainly justify a healthy merchandise and stock market, but it must also he remembered that the "watering" process has so often been indulged in that capital stocks no longer represent intrinsic values; and when, taking advantage of a husiness revival, the manipulators concoct a boom, in which they are aided and ahetted hy the metropolitan press, and all the agencies that money and unlimited influence can command, it is only a question of time when the poor silly moths, who are eddying round the candle of inflation, will be either destroyed or crippled for life. In order to support this wicked deal, Vanderbilt, Scott and Gould have lately agreed upon an advance of from 5 to 20 per cent. in railroad freights, so that an apparent iucrease of earnings may bolster up the deal. In other words, the producers of the West are compelled to furnish the means whereby the people of the East are to be deluded, ciuched and impoverished. The lesson of Black Friday is forgotten until a new crop of victims shall pay as dearly for their experience as dupes and fools must ever expect. With real values this sheet never fights, hut with fraudulent figures it ever will. Now, it is a known fact that, with most of the Granger and southwestern railways, flimsy construction was the rule, and even then many of them went to the mortgagees. Their tracks and rolling-stock will require large outlays within the next twelvemonth—made more costly by the large advance in iron and steel. Moreover, the chances all favor a good average European crop in 1880, so that with an increase of expenses there will in all probahility he a diminution in receipts. Of course, all is now couleur de rose, and every little wildcat that has heen watered and inflated to the utmost has its liars and cappers on the street and on the press, talking knowingly of stock and "regular" dividends. We have heard that sort of gahhle here, hut the divideuds were usually "Irish," and the "stock divs." such that the more one receives the poorer he hecame, unless he made a fire of them. In our mind's eye, we see those unwise men of Gotham drifting in the tuh of inflation toward the Hell Gate of Panic and Ruin. It is to hs regretted that the legitimate husiness interests of the country must periodically suffer from these stock leeches. Just whenever a good solid time appears to he upon us, these gentlemen of Wall street get together and hatch plots wherehy the puhlic orange is to he sucked when it is ripe. Whatever use there may he in predicting these facts, there is none in moralizing over them. Human nature is naturally grasping—yea, hoggish—and there is not one of the masses, who coudemns manipulation, who wouldn't do it himself had he a chance. And finally, considering the large amount of California capital represented on that wicked Wall street—we trust our friends will come out at the top of the heap and bring their winnings hack to 'Frisco. If otherwise, otherwise; hut the greatest sense is in keeping our money invested at home, so that it may permanently increase the wealth of the State, and not he suhject to fine and imprisonment in Gotham.

JACK, THE BLACKFELLOW.

Stand out you rascal! Let me take
Your measure from the top to toe,
Including that old "wide awake"
Which time and you have battered so!

Your're hardly handsome, and your rig
Would scarcely suit a fancy ball;
In fact you are a shabby "nig"
Without a saving point at all.

You sport, I see, a swallow-tail
That once was black, that now is brown.
Your pie-bald pants are somewhat stale—
Your legs are naked halfway down.

From Fashion's wiles you keep aloof;
And hence it happens that you wear
A blucher on your dexter hoof,
Through which the five toes boldly stare.

It doesn't match the patent boot
That decorates your larboard heel;
And yet it's plain, O man of soot,
A tip-top gentleman you feel.

"Me gib it bacca." O, no, no—
That little method will not do:
'Twas played out, neighbor, long ago—
I am too old a bird for you.

Where do you live? and tell me how?
You needn't answer bread and beef
That we must earn by sweat of brow,
And yours by begging, mighty chief!

Much dearer than a dozen whites
Are three of you at any toil:
You'd eat a loaf in seven bites—
You would not earn a pint of oil!

Perhaps you're right—at all events
You're fat enough, and pretty strong;
And, what with theft and cadging pence,
You somehow seem to "rub along."

A small addition to your legs,
My neighbor, in the shape of calf,
Would make them less like spindle pegs;
They are too portable by half.

I've had my say about the bad
Condition of your face and toes;
And therefore I will merely add
You've not an Apollonian nose.

Indeed, it strikes me by degrees,
You're scarcely one that would inspire
The soul of—say, Praxiteles,
With any extra burst of fire.

Now let us part! The glow-worm's lamp
Begins to shine—your comrades call:
Here, take this 'possum to the camp,
And roast it, Jackey, skin and all.

LONDON CORRESPONDENTS.

The daily papers of this city, and, indeed, of most other American cities, are very fond of "Letters from London," which they generally print in their Sunday issues under enormous headings and over signatures scarcely less ostentatiously displayed. The object of these "screeds," as their authors love to call them, is, apparently, to decry everything English, and to tickle the great American heart by comparing the manners, morals and institutions of the old country with those of the United States—the comparison, of course, being all in favor of the latter. The statements made by these correspondents are so puerile, prejudiced and untruthful that none but the utterly untraveled and ignorant would actually believe them; but a great many who read these precious epistles are untraveled and ignorant, and, besides that, the average American seems to find a positive pleasure in hearing his betters maligned; so that between these two classes the "London Letter" is quite a popular feature and a really "live paper." A San Francisco journal, which lays especial claim to this title, has for years been noticeably addicted to publishing this sort of trash. Its letters written—or said to be written—in London by a person who signs herself "Eve's Granddaughter," and pretends to be an English woman while she befouls her own nest, we have had occasion to mention before. What she does not steal bodily from two weeklies, called Truth and The World, she seems to pick out of Reynold's—a vile sheet, devoted to the abuse of the English Government and aristocracy. The same local journal, Charles Warren Stoddard driveled for several successive weeks, some time ago, about the evils of the monarchical system, the foibles of the British nobility, and the corruption of London society. And now, still in the same paper, one Prentice Mulford (whose chief claim to distinction, we believe, lies in the fact that he used to begin his first name with two p's) comes to the front with what he is pleased to call a criticism of the English people. He saw, or says he saw, some brown poke a servant girl in the back with his umbrella to draw her attention to a remark made by him. Hence, he infers that this is the ordinary way in which English gentlemen accost the other sex, and consequently English people are impolite. This fact established, he proceeds to show that the English are by nature immoral, by pointing to what is certainly an indisputable truth, namely, that young ladies, while "sparking," are not allowed to sit on their lover's laps in the drawing-room till midnight, after the parents have gone to bed, as is the custom in this free and glorious Republic. With such stuff as this our "critic" manages to fill nearly two printed columns.

And yet, after all, what can one expect from a pig but a grunt? A man cannot write intelligently about a country and a people of which he knows nothing; and this is the predicament of most of these so-called correspondents. When they write about the aristocracy, or even the upper middle-class, they pretend to give information about a society to which they are not admitted. They could describe fairyland as easily, and with a smaller tax on their imagination.

DARK DAYS FOR RUSSIA.

Russia's evil star seems to be in the ascendant. It began to rise when that Power declared war against Turkey—a war which resulted in a truly Cadmean victory, as inglorious as it was empty and ruinous. In that war Russia showed herself to he nothing hut a gigantic military hugbear. Her available army, great as it was, was a mere shadow to what it had been represented to he on paper; her Generals, with a few notable exceptions, were incompetent and corrupt. In conquering the Turks she had to strain every nerve to accomplisb a task which the world had previously believed would he mere child's play to her. By a display of pluck and ironclads England overawed her. Even in diplomatic suhtlety—always a strong point with the Muscovite—she was ignominiously worsted. Next, Austria hluffed her, and when she sought to resist, she found Germany patting Kaiser Joseph on the back—the uncle of her Czar countenancing the encroachment of another Power upon her Pan-Slavic preserves. She looked toward France as a counterhalance, and found herself distrusted. Italy scowled at her. It is hut yesterday that she was sorely exercised over what was an unmistakahle design to isolate her from the rest of Europe. She had to yield to the Cbinese on the Kuldja question. Her armies in Central Asia bave just been repulsed, if not routed, hy tbe Turcomans. Internally, she is in the throes of embryotic revolution, and in spite of all her unspeakahly cruel methods of repression, her throne and iron government are in hourly peril of annihilation. But the climax of Russia's humiliation is now reached in Afghanistan. After betraying the late Ameer hy false promises, she abandoned him to the fate which she herself was mainly instrumental in bringing upon him; and, after shrinking from a conflict with England, she now has the astonishing assurance to propose a division of the spoils. How tbis proposition has been received is best seen in the following telegram:

NEW YORK, October 16.—A special to tbe Herald, dated London, the 15th, says: On Mouday last Schouvaloff, the Russian Embassador, had an interview with Salisbury, when he was instructed to broach the question as to an arrangement respecting Afghanistan. Schouvaloff proposed that Russia shall have jurisdiction of the eastern part of Afghanistan, while England shall take possession of the western part as far as the Hindoo Koosh. Salisbury declined, in the most emphatic, even barsb terms, saying that England would not allow Russia to meddle, in any way whatsoever, in the matter. He said the future of Afghanistan had to be settled by England exclusively. Schouvaloff persisted in advocating the plans suggested by his Government, and, seeing Salishnry's stubborness, proposed various other plans for the settlement of the Central Asiatic difficulty, but Salisbury refused to consider these propositions. Thus the interview terminated. Count Munster, German Embassador at the Court of St. James, has had several interviews with Salisbury during the past two weeks, and it is believed that bis explanations respecting the present political situation on the Contiuent influenced Salisbury in bis unusually emphatic language to Count Schouvaloff. It is also rumored that the Englisb Government has lately succeeded in obtaining certain assurances from the Shah of Persia of such a nature as to satisfy Beaconsfield that, in the event of complications arising between England and Russia, Persia will not side with the latter power.

ARE WE TO HAVE A NEW BONANZA?

A new bonanza in the Union Consolidated and Sierra Nevada mines, like unto that which was unearthed in Con. Virginia and Californuia, would he a hig thing just now for this State. We all know what the effect of paying two milbons per month in dividends was. The city was all life and activity, huilding went on apace, and San Francisco made marvelously rapid progress. Nothing inspires the average Californian with confidence and good spirits as does the discovery of a bonanza. A booming stock market is the realization of his ideas of paradise. Forthwith dull times vanish as a dream of the past. The future looms up with a roseate view. The Queen City of the Pacific becomes more queenly than ever. Lately, our people have felt overmuch depressed. Money has not been as plentiful as they would like. Workingmen have had to submit to a reduction of wages. But give us a bonanza, and all this would he speedily changed. Real estate would appreciate in value, immigration would he resumed, the services of the workingmen would he in request, the soured grumhlings of the Sand-lots would cease, and Sunday crowds would be more congenially employed in spendiug their redundant savings. Are we, theu, to have a great bonanza? The experts tell us that we are. They say that it is already discovered, and is in process of being opened up. Col. Fair says "the child that has been horn is to grow to he a bigger man than his father," which, being interpreted, means that the ore-body in Union Consolidated and Sierra Nevada is to exceed that found in Con. Virginia and California. The appearances are certainly flattering. The assays indicate an immensely rich ore-body, far richer, indeed, than that which constituted the last bonanza. It remains yet to determine its proportions. That is necessarily a slow process. It will be remembered that it took fully twelve months from the date of the first strike to determine the size and value of the Con. Virginia bonanza. We may therefore he content to watch the developments now in progress with cheertul expectations. If it is another big bonanza, its opening up will be a great event for California.

HONOR TO WHOM HONOR IS DUE.

It may be true, as Byron says somewhere, that perhaps all nature and art could not furnish us a new idea; but there are new ways of using the old ideas, and the way adopted by the Hop Bitters Company, of Rochester, N. Y., is worthy of a passing glance of admiration. This Company has engaged the services of a number of excellent baseball players, paid each of tbem salaries ranging from $1,000 to $1,500 a year, to travel through the land and play against the local clubs, wherever organized. These players travel as the "Hop Bitters Baseball Club;" they are accompanied hy an experienced manager, and each member agrees to canvass the towns and cities in the interest of the Bitters manufacture. This they do very thoroughly; and their skill is so great and their play so attractive that the receipts of gate money meet all expenses, and the Company is advertised as never company was, almost literally without spending a dollar. This scheme shows originality, nerve and enterprise, together with a perfect knowledge of the mental conditiou and needs of the public. The public wants to be amused, and runs to look on at every form of sport. In what has been called the American national game of haseball, this far-sighted Company saw the possibility of an unlimited future for Hop Bitters. They came, they saw, they conquered; and it is with genuine regard we drink to tbeir health. May they bop on, hop ever!

SERIOUS CHARGE AGAINST A SURGEON.

Francis James Hammond, described as a surgeon, was tried at the Central Criminal Court on Tuesday, on an indictment charging bim with feloniously assaulting Ellen Saunders, and causing her bodily injury witb an unlawful intent. The jury found the prisoner guilty, and Mr. Justice Lopes sentenced bim to ten years' penal servitude.

The Daily Telegraph (September 25th) thinks there will hardly he two opinions as to the gravity of the offense of which the surgeon, Mr. Francis James Hanmond, was convicted, nor, crushing as the sentence was to a person in his position, could the claims of justice have heen satisfied with a milder one. The evidence, which sufficed for the jury, was, as the learned Judge afterward pointed out, as clear as possihle to the effect that a douhle offense had heen committed—one that might have led to the death of the woman, and to the trial of Hammond for murder. Such crimes cannot he allowed to go unpunished, particularly when, as in Hammond's case, the relation of the doctor to his patient is something more than a merely unprejudiced professional adviser. In attempting to procure abortion, Hammond was, if the wituesses—including the woman herself—spoke the truth, really seeking the destruction of her own offspring hy an agency which endangered the life of the mother. For such conduct the punishment should be exemplary, and it will he admitted that ten years' penal servitude is a penalty of that character, tending to check what, it is to he feared, is a practice more common than the law reports of themselves would indicate. Douhtless the crime is one in which unscrupulous quacks are more likely to indulge than men of education and of any professional skill, hut this fact does not lessen the need of a striking example; for, while a regular medical man should know better, unlicensed charlatans of either sex, witnessing his impunity, would be apt to think the practice as safe in a legal sense as defensihle on moral grounds. To all such, Mr. Hammond's fate will convey useful warning.

Death of William Hayes.—This highly respected gentleman, of the well-known law-firm, Stanley & Hayes, died suddenly last week, at the drug-store corner of Jackson and Montgomery streets. He had just taken a steam hath, and, feeling faint, entered the drug-store, took a cordial, and lay down upon a sofa in the hack room, and in a few moments expired. Mr. Hayes leaves a wife and family in Sonoma. The funeral services of the Odd Fellows' Order, to which he helonged, were performed ou Saturday last, and the hody was laid to rest in tbe cemetery of the brotherhood.

THE STOCK MARKET.

On Monday a slight reaction set in from the extreme low prices reached during the break, but the advance does not seem to be sustained, and the market generally shows a weakening tendency under a pressure to realize by the disappointed ones, who are willing to discount the developments in Sierra Nevada and Union, so far, at least, as the present level is concerned. While the southwest drift from Sierra Nevada's 2300 level shows a marked falling off in the quality of the ore, the drift still continues in good milling ore and exhibits every appearance of a satisfactory outcome on this level. Preparations are now being made to thoroughly prospect the next level with the drill, which important event will take place within the next week or ten days. Upon the official reports of the drilling the fate of the market depends, and from what we deem reliable authority a favorable showing may be expected. Cross-cutting will also be started within a few days on the Sierra Nevada 2400 level, when the edge will cross-cut west at a point near the incline to ascertain the width of the ore-body at this point. On the whole the situation is extremely favorable for the development of a rich and extensive bonanza at the north end, and the most conclusive evidence in support of this belief is the fact that the largest and best informed operators are firmly holding to their shares on the basis of a proposition of merit. The balance of the market is almost entirely neglected, while outside stocks are very lightly dealt in. The market closed heavy with small business doing.

"An Era of Speculation."—Never was it more clearly demonstrated that gold is not wealth than at the present period—a time when the Bank of England holds as large an amount of bullion as it has ever done, i. e., £35,000,000, and when, as is well known, the country banks have in a large measure refrained from sending up their surplus funds, owing solely to the small rate of interest to be obtained; indeed, we hear of large sums being lent out from day to day upon Consols and other Government Securities at rates yielding little more than "one farthing per cent. per diem." Is it wonderful, then, that on all sides we hear that an era of speculation is about to arise? In France it has for some time been rampant, and signs are not wanting that efforts are being made to inaugurate it on the London market.

The Health of the City.—The deaths were increased to 86, and promised a still higher rate than this. Typhoid fever is on the increase, and four deaths have occurred since Saturday last. The sudden accession of cold wind after unusually warm weather, has caused an increase in catarrh and pneumonia. Choleraic diarrhœa is prevalent and very fatal to young children. There have been seven deaths since Saturday. Pyœmia and septicœmia have been each the cause of death to two persons. The returns of mortality indicate an increasing unwholesomeness of atmosphere, due, most probably, to sewer gases.

The Baldwin libel suit against the News Letter is set for hearing in the Police Court for Monday next. A large number of witnesses have been subpœnaed by the defence, and some curious developments may be expected. It is rumored that the prosecution are seeking to shirk this open and public inquiry, by having the Grand Jury quietly pass upon the matter. We don't think they will succeed, though it must be confessed there is no telling what Lloyd's influence with District Attorney Murphy may accomplish. We incline to think it will, in the end, accomplish results disappointing to their expectations. We know them.

Correction.—A note, dated Oct. 22d, from 706 Post street, and signed by C. F. A. Nichell, as nearly as can be made out, informs us that the announcement in the News Letter of Sept. 20th, concerning a course of instruction in midwifery opened by the State Medical Society, is erroneous and without foundation in fact.

Portsmouth, October 23d.—In view of the impending rupture between China and Japan, and of Russia's attitude, it is rumored here that the Admiralty intend reinforcing the British fleet on the China station.

LIFE'S AFFLUENCE.

Life is so full above,
Life is so full below,
So hathed in light divine,
So sparkling with earth's wine,
So much is interwove,
Of highest joy and low,
The trembling hreast is powerless
To stem its overflow.

Were the beyond less sweet,
Or mortal touch less dear,
Were God's word less enduring,
Or human love less luring,
The heart with measured heat
Would up wild surges fear,
But calmly moving onward
A curveless course might steer.

But O, the hliss heyond!
And O, the rapture here!
Earth's passionate heart-grasping;
And still more tender clasping
Of him, who, tempted, groaned,
Yet bore the sharpened spear;
That in love's crimson current,
Our stains might disappear.

Ah! life indeed is full,
So full its woof must hreak,
If through our wbitest weaving,
The scarlet fihres, heaving,
Know neither check nor rule;
Unless the Saviour take,
And in His hand, restoring,
The feehle thread remake.

Yes, life is very full;
But when the grape is ripe
With purple plenty, hlessed—
'Tis then the wine is pressed!
O Love, the conflict lull!
And hy each hlood-red stripe
Thou hearest, meek, teach us to hear,
And near our Archetype. —London Express.

A BRAVE LITTLE WOMAN.

A man named William Whitten was indicted at the Middlesex Sessions for stealing a purse from the person of Jane Hill. Mr. Mead prosecuted. The prosecutrix is an elderly lady, and on the night of September 10th, at ahout nine o'clock, she was on the platform of the Farringdon-street Station of the Metropolitan Railway, waiting for a train to go to King's-cross. As she was about stepping into a third-class carriage she felt a hand in her dress-pocket, in which was a purse containing 2s. 6d. in silver, two farthings, and three penny postage stamps. She had one foot on the carriage and one on the step, and at this time the prisoner was close behind her. When she felt the prisoner's hand in her pocket, she tried to catch hold of it, but he made off, and rushed into another compartment two doors away. She called out, "That is a pickpocket, stop him;" and Mary Utton, the wife of George Utton, of 32 Collier street, who was in the train with the prosecutrix, seized hold of the prisoner, and pulled him out of the compartment into which he had entered. Immediately afterward she saw the prisoner drop a purse hetween the platform and the carriage, hut a woman who represented herself as the prisoner's wife bad previously endeavored to take something from his hand. The prisoner hung on to the carriage until they got past the signal-hox, where Alfred Boots, station inspector, saw him trying to escape; he was stopped, hrought hack and given into the custody of a police-constahle. The purse and its contents were found on the line. The prisoner cross-examined Mrs. Utton with great pertinacity, hut her ready answers to all his questions were most amusing, showing that, although a woman of small stature, she possessed great determination, and when once she got hold of the prisoner she showed the greatest tenacity in clinging to him to prevent his escape. The prisoner then made an address to the jury, denying that he had committed any rohbery, and that the purse was not dropped hy him, but hy some one else who had stolen it. The jury found the prisoner guilty, and previous convictions having heen proved, the Assistant-Judge sentenced him to he kept in penal servitude for seven years, to he followed by a three years' police supervision, and having called hack Mrs. Utton, warmly commended her for the courage she had displayed in detaining the prisoner, and bringing him to justice, and ordered her to receive a reward of £2.—London Express.

HONEY AND WAX WITHOUT DEATH.

Electricity Applied to Bee-Rearing.—A correspondent of the Deutsche Presse describes a method which he has adopted with success of overcoming the ohstacles frequently presented to the rearer of hees hy the self-will of those interesting and profitable insects. This is no other than giving them an electric shock. Every one interested in hees knows the difficulties and dangers involved in hiving a swarm. One is often seen on a hot day in June in the top branches of a tree not to he climhed, and another in some inaccessihle place seems to he preparing to set out on its wanderings. If the heemaster venture to approach, all his dexterity and experience will often not prevent him from heing seriously stung. There are, indeed, several cases on record of death supervening from the stings inflicted on such occasions. Herr Freiwith, the correspondent referred to, hit upon the idea of employing the electric force to stupify the hees. Trials on large and small clusters, and even on single insects, answered perfectly; the hees coming in contact with the conducting wires fell stunned and motionless to the ground. They were then sorted and marked, according to the strength of the current applied. The time required for their recovery, varying from ten minutes to eight hours, was proportionate to the strength of the shock, but all came out of their trance safe and sound. Encouraged hy the result of this experiment, Herr Freiwith resolved to try it on a larger scale, namely, on hses in the hive. To this end he introduced the ends of two conducting wires into a fully occupied honeycomh, and turned on the current for a moment; the hees soon lay on the greund, and it was half an hour hefore they resumed activity. Herr Freiwith then constructed an apparatus in a small hox, six inches each way, which, similar to a cartridge ponch, he wore with a strap round his body. The two wires of the apparatus were, when required to he used, fastened to rods of a suitahle length, the wires of course always projecting over the ends of the rods. These ends were then applied to the swarm, a knoh similar to that employed for a room telegraph heing attached to the apparatus, that the current might he turned on at the proper time. Every one is, of course, not skillful enough to construct such an apparatus, though none are precluded from doing so, as Herr Freiwith has not patented it.

Evidence Olfactory.—Angelina (scientific): "Do you smell the iodine from the sea, Edwin? Isn't it refreshing?" Old Salt (overhearing): "What you smell ain't the sea, Miss. It's the town-drains as flows out just 'ere!"—Punch.

LOVE'S INFLUENCE

The drooping spirit, pining in distress,
Is oft supported by a dear or word;
True, it may be a maiden's sweet caress,
Or e'en the gentle twittering of a bird.

When, in the depths of such a sorrowing heart,
Feelings and thoughts akin to pain arise,
Even but a flower may relief impart,
And prove a blessing, lasting to the skies.

Could we but know the woes that others feel,
Could we but taste the bitter draught of theirs,
Then would we strive with broken hearts to heal,
And by affection soothe their troubled cares.

O, speak not harshly to the anguished soul,
But strew love-tokens o'er life's rugged steep;
And in that world where years eternal roll,
Spirits will rise and on thee blessings heap.

THE LANGTRY LIBEL.

A week or two ago, a telegram from London announced that Mrs. ...try's husband had entered suit for divorce, on the ground of adultery, ...l that the Prince of Wales was one of the co-respondents. The news... ...pers of the United States greedily devoured this tit-bit of scandal, and, ...thout stopping to inquire about the source of the news, or on what ...thority it was based, proceeded to preach long and vindictive editorial ...milies on the shocking immorality of those in high places at the English ...urt. At that time we expressed our conviction that the statement was ...ply a malicious lie, and later information shows that we were right. ...e statement, it seems, was taken from a scurrilous and obscene weekly ...t, called Town Talk, the proprietor of which has since been impris... ...ed on a charge of libel, and will undoubtedly be punished as he ...serves. On discovering what fools their spite has made of them, the ...tors of our dailies now turn about and eat their own words. True, ...y can scarcely do anything else, and it is fitting enough that they should ...logize for the credulity to which their wish was father; but it would ...ve been better if they had waited for some confirmatory developments ...fore yielding to their passion for maligning the Royal House of England. ...is little incident furnishes a good example of the sort of news which is ...t to this country from Europe. Here is a correspondent who must ...ve known the vile nature of the paper containing the libel; yet because ...at libel is the kind of morsel that most pleases Americans, he cannot ...ist the temptation to "send it across." It is not facts (useful, interest... ...; or instructive,) that these correspondents and their employers are ...er, but lies and calumnies—the more sensational the better, so long as ...ey sell an extra sheet or two.

LOVE AND SUICIDE.

On one of the ...gers deceased had a gold engaged ring chased with two lovers' knots. ...sides some ordinary jewelry, such as watch and chain, bracelets and ...rings, she wore round her neck, suspended from a coral necklet, an ...al locket, with a monogram "S. F. F." engraved on it, which con... ...ned the portrait of a young man in a riding dress, about deceased's own ...e. On being conveyed to the mortuary, some letters were found in de... ...ased's pocketbook, one of which ran as follows:

"Darling Stanley—When you hear I have been found, and that my de... ...ted faith to you has always been my one hopeful star, you will, I en... ...at, pray, as I have done, that I shall be pardoned above for this very ...cked act, in destroying my wretched life; but my love for you was so ...eat, that I could not live but in it and your esteem, and as you deemed ...e unworthy, I had no other course but this. I forgive you for your un... ...rthy suspicion, and pray you will not grieve for me.

Your devoted, CLARA.

An envelope was found addressed to Mr. Stanley F. Francis, Vine ...ttage, Kilburn, and this gentleman, with the mother and father of the ...ceased, who reside in Elgin Crescent, Notting Hill, came and identi... ...d the body as that of their daughter, Clara Letitia Redmond.

"PLEASURE'S WAND."

"We Obey no Wand but Pleasure's."—Tom Moore.

Standard Theater.—John E. Owens is a celebrated actor. He bas attained bis high position on the American stage tbrougb meritorions and artistic work. Fortunately for himself, but unfortunately for tbe public, he bas been a lucky speculator. The possession of wealtb rarely acts as an incentive to activity or painstaking efforts. Owens' riches have rendered bim careless and indifferent, and at the same time imbued him with tbe idea that be is privileged to take certain liberties with the public tbat are extremely reprehensible. Tbe solitary excuse that can be offered for tbe constant introduction of his personality in tbe different characters impersonated, is that it is done in a very amusing way, and finds public favor. As "Henry Dove," in the antediluvian comedy of Married Life, Owens revels in all sorts of comicalities. His "Achille Talma Dufard" was extremely disappointing. This time-worn character, in bis bands, loses all tbe patbos that other actors pnt into it, and is simply a piece of buffoonery. A little of the "Caleb Plummer" business would have served admirably in this connection. Manager Kennedy has gatbered togetber an excellent company, and as several novelties are in preparation, good work may he expected. Miss Stanhope played her little role in Married Life as she does everytbing, neatly and agreeably. Miss Harold is a mystery to me. Sbe bas a good Eastern reputation, heing considered there an excellent soubrette. Her exbibitions of acting out here have all been cbaracterized by a mechanical indifference which is extremely irritating. This causes all tbe more regret, as ber personal appearance is very attractive, and of a cbaracter to favorably predispose the public. Doctor Clyde will shortly he produced.

California Theater.—This theater is at present closed. The advertisements give as tbe reason the Carnival season, and announce a reopening; but it is privately understood tbat the old theater will not re-open nnder tbe present management. Manager Barton deserves all sympathy. He bas tried in every way to attract the public, bas furnished us with amusements of all sorts. The very best of stars bave appeared at the California, with good support. If there have been here and there shortcomings, they bave been amply compensated hy numerous novelties. But all tbe efforts bave been to no purpose. The public has refused its patronage even to the most praiseworthy performances. The last engagement—tbat of Miss Ada Cavendish—ought to bave been rewarded by large audiences of refined and cnltured people, for it was an admirable exhibition of artistic acting hy an actress of rare talent. As compared to tbe attraction existing in Tourtilotte's sylpb-like walk, or Sadie Donley's limp, Miss Cavendisb's glorious acting was nil, and empty bouses were the result. The management finally became tboroughly disgusted and shut up shop. What the future of the old California Theater will be it is hard to tell.

Bush Street Theater.—This place of amusement is undergoing extensive reparations. A new stage is being built and new boxes are being constructed. The nncomfortable benches are to he replaced witb easy opera cbairs. The ceilings and walls will he freshly decorated, and tbe result will be a charming tbeater. All these improvements indicate enterprise on the part of Manager Locke, but be bas overlooked the most important amelioration necessary. The means of exit at this tbeater are dangerously insufficient; besides being inadequate for possible emergencies, they are uncomfortable for ordinary use. It was at first supposed that the entrance was to be enlarged, but this is not to be the case. This is evidently a question of false economy, and ought not to be permitted.

German Theater.—Tbe performance last Sunday evening was for tbe benefit of Julius Witt, the comedian of the troupe, a clever and talented actor. Illness bas attacked him, and tbe probabilities of his ever again appearing on the stage are very remote. The result of this benefit was a nice snug sum, which was heartily given and gratefully received. The programme was in the nature of an olla podrida. Max Freeman gave a splendid exhibition of bis talent as a cbaracter actor in Die Ungtacklichen. Miss Heynold a former soubrette was warmly received, as also were Fabbri, Formes and Muller. On next Sunday Miss Bertha Fiebach, the new soubrette, will make her first appearance. Sbe is preceded by an excellent tbeatrical reputation.

Baldwin Theater.—Byron's play bas been played during tbe week—its second—to fair houses. There is nothing new to say about play or performers. Bishop bas somewhat subdued bis "loudness," and has also introduced certain hits of business suggested by accident, that are very laugbable. On Sunday the Octoroon will he produced, witb a strong cast, for J. O. Barrows' benefit. The Geneva Cross is announced for Monday. With the closing of the California, this theater has tbe legitimate field, as it were, to itself. Tbe stock company is a very strong one, but lacks an important factor towards successful work—a rigid and efficient Stage Manager. Want of tbis is noticeable in every performauce.

Chit-Chat.—The Weathershy-Goodwin people are very successful in New York.——My Partner is still running to good business.——Edward Seguin, the well-known operatic buffo artist, died suddenly of apoplexy in Rochester, October 9th.——Vieuxtemps, whose ill-health has forced bim to resign bis position at the Brussels Conservatory, is to he pensioned by tbe Government.——Hamson Millard, singer and composer, has sev ered his long connection witb the New York Custom-house.——Mlle. Menettre, who has belonged to the dancing corps of tbe National Academy (Grand Opera), Paris, for sixteen years, or from her seventh year to ber twenty-third, has just been dismissed from that establishment for heing virtuous; tbat is, not for any fault as a dancer, but because she has declined to place herself under the protection of some influential subscriber. Sucb is the story with whicb the Paris press is now busy.——At the Front St. Theater, Baltimore, October 14th, in a sceue of a play in whicb there was a discharge of musketry, a young man was fatally shot from the stage, one of the muskets being loaded with a bullet instead of a blank cartridge.——Wilhelmj is said to have expressed his inclination to remain permanently iu this country.——Theodore Thomas says the Spring Festival of 1880 promises the grandest musical affair of the kind ever had in America.

The O. T. H. E. R. Club will give their first anniversary entertainment and social on Wednesday evening, November 19th. It promises to be one of tbe finest ever given at the Westeru Addition Hall. Among those who will participate are Mr. C. B. Bisbop and Lewis Morrison. The entertainment will conclude witb the laughable farce, Boots at the Swan, followed with a dance.

THE AUTRORS' CARNIVAL.

The opening scenes of this festival were extremely brilliant. The Pavilion was filled to repletion, and the verdict of the throng was one of unqualified satisfaction. On Thursday evening bnt few of the booths were completed, and a sbort postponement would have been a judicious move. The artists, Messrs. Moretti, Trezzini, Porter, Seabury, Goddard and others, under the efficient direction of Mr. Tavernier, have done wonders in the scenic line. The costumes of the different participants are both correct and gorgeous. That our girls are beautiful is a well-known fact; but, if any one ever doubted it, tbis gatbering will be convincing. The young ladies are a bevy of the prettiest and sweetest specimens of girlhood and womanhood.

Tbe immense building, lined on botb sides with the picturesqne booths, with a glare of light above and a wealtb of decoration, with tbe floor a mass of human beings moving to and fro, presents a sight tbe like of which has never heen witnessed before. Anticipation bad been roused to tbe bigbest pitcb, but it can he safely said that all expectation was surpassed. The over-crowded state of the building prevented, on the first evening, the carrying out of the programme, both on the large stage and in the different booths. Owing to some slight misunderstanding, the platforms of the booths are too low, and this renders a perfect view of the exercises somewbat difficult. A mistake in the measnrements will also prove regretable, as it makes it impossible to fix in place all the frames of tbe booths. There was, of conrse, a good deal of confnsion, naturally to be expected with such an immense crowd of performers to direct, but a few eveniugs will make things run very smoothly.

The programme for the different booths is an elaborate one. Tableaux, recitations, scenes from different plays, mnsic, in fact everything that ingenuity can suggest as an effective way to present the thoughts and creations of the authors. All those who are engaged in the festival are full of vim and interest, and have spared neither pains nor expense to truthfully and artistically represent their respective characters. It may seem invidious to specially mention any particular display, but there are several that undoubtedly call for particular mention. The Japanese tea garden is a delightful little spot, reallistically constructed, and with its characters in their quaint dresses is a charming spot. Tbe Alhambra booth, with the great possibilities offered in the way of Moorish architecture and costumes, is a beautiful spot. The picture represented is tbat of tbe Court of Lyons. The Bret Harte booth represents a mining camp, with its cabin, its tents and its mining paraphernalia. Several of the characters are extremely life-like in make-up. "Holyrood Castle," the Scott booth, is perhaps tbe most elaborate of all. The Caledonians have entered into the festival with commendable spirit, and their efforts are very creditable. There is an air of truth about this display, for tbe participants are truly Scotcb, and tbe picturesque costnmes are genuine. The Jules Verne booth is a suhmarine grotto, of the orthadox naiad queen style. The costumes are extremely original. The salon of Mme. Recamier is a scenic gem. The artists have here put their best work, and the picture, with its crowd of bandsome women, dressed in the style of the Consulate and First Empire, is one ever to be remembered. The Dickens booth deserves especial mention for tbe number of its characters and their admirable life-likeness.

The Egyptian bootb is principally noticeable by the style of beauty represented—the ladies. It is of the truly sensuous type. The Goethe and Scbiller bootb is, perhaps, the most complete one. The costumes are ricb, and the tableaux, under Mrs. Freeman's direction, truly artistic. The Shakespeare booth is in a separate room. It is in the shape of a theater, and during the week scenes from the different plays will he given by tbe very best of our local amateurs, aided by Mrs. Judah. Up stairs is being constructed the Italian booth. This will be the most elaborate one of the whole. The artists are in this case workiug con amore, and the result will he sometbing exquisite. The Floral Temple and Bonbon booth are filled witb charming young girls, who dispense their wares in the most courteous way possible. The other booths, not mentioned, are as yet in an incomplete condition, but will wben finisbed he as attractive as tbe rest With something that charms every one of our senses, and the nobls object in view, this festival cannot fail to he an immense success.

Herold's Concert.—The third orchestral matinee was fairly attended. Haydn's B Major Symphony No. 12, and Gade's "Hamlet" Overture were tbe principal numbers. Tbe ensemble of the orcbestra is gradually growing more perfect. Mr. Edgar Coursen, a young San Francisco graduate of the Leipsic Conservatory, made his debut as a soloist. He played Vieuxtemps' "Ballade and Polonaise" with considerable merit. His technique and method proved him to bave heen an apt scholar at the world's foremost school. As the young artist was evidently extremely nervous it would hardly show fairness to be too critical. Mr. Coursen will he a valuable acquisition to our local talent. Next Wednesday the fourth matinee will take place.

SPORTING ITEMS.

Pedestrianism. The race between men and horses was very uninter- , as the horses had it all their own way. "Pinafore" won, with a re of 559 miles in 141 hours, and, as both "Nellie" and "Dan Mc- hy" were close to him, we may conclude that, in spite of previous ex- nce, horses have the best of it. It is not true, however, that the were scrubs, and had no special training; on the contrary, they re all at least half bred, and were trained for months before the race. e introduction of the horse element into the Pavilion was very destruct- to the morals of the pedestrians, who were accused of selling out. In case of Brodie, we have proof at hand that he was under contract to ell known sport, and walked under his orders, purposely making a bad rd to enable his backer to win distance bets. Sadie Donley, too, who d a sure thing in the three-hours run for ladies, disgraced herself by owing the race, but in her case it was so palpable that the referee tly declared all pools and bets off. If professional walkers expect to ke a living by their legs, they must be at least honest, and we ask, for ir sake, that Brodie and Sadie Donley be ruled out of any future com- itions. If not, the new life lately infused into athletics will soon die , at least in California.—We hear that San Jose is to have a six-day lk.—Murphy has not yet accepted McIntyre's challenge. In case he s, Scott will enter the race.—The score of the men and horses at the ee was as follows: "Denver Jim," 401 miles 1 lap; "Dan McCarthy," miles; "Pinafore," 559 miles 2 laps; "Hoodlum," 400 miles 4 laps; Nellie," 543 miles 4 laps; "Guerrero," 375 miles 4 laps; Brodie, 262 les 2 laps.

Rowing.—The wretched fizzle of the Hanlan-Courtney match has e much to shake the public confidence in both men. In such cases it enerally correct to lay the blame on the man who refuses to start. The air will teach people a much-needed lesson, that it is unsafe to bet on result of any professional contest.—In reply to Referee Blnikie's gestion that Hanlan should suggest to Courtney that the pair should row for the $6,000 prize, Hanlan says that he is willing, providing that urtney gives a guarantee that he will appear at the starting point when race is called. It is proposed that instead of Chautauqua Lake the race rowed at Washington, D. C. We are of opinion that the Referee has right to ask for another race; his duty was clearly to give the money Hanlan. His conduct, however, is just what the best English sports- n's papers prophesied long ago. Two weeks before the race the London ree called the whole affair a big swindle.—Elliott states that as yd seems to have ignominously retreated, he now only looks forward to match with Hanlan. He is disappointed that no answer from Hanlan yet been received, and claims that he should have a reply at an early e, otherwise he will appeal to the Trustees of the Cup. Elliott will w in Toronto Bay if Hanlan surrenders the trophy. Boyd will row urtney on the Tyne, and will give him £25 expenses.

Baseball.—We visited the new grounds at Seventh and Townsend eets last week, and were disappointed to find them very unlike what we pected from the glowing accounts that appeared in the papers. The ct is that their situation is wretched, and the neighborhood is well nigh t to live in from the smells arising from the hovels, chemical works and t-yards that abound there. The access is bad, and there is no line of s that runs nearer than two blocks.—The Chicago Club have been eating all our local clubs during the week.—The game between the ncinnatis and Hop Bitters last Sunday was not up to much. The mer won; score, 8 to 4.—The Chicagos got a splendid victory over Californias at Oakland last Sunday, without making a single error. re, 13 to 0.—Leary, late pitcher for the Hop Bitters, has joined the y City Club.—We have seen no pitcher amongst the visiting clubs t is ahead of Nolan.—The new managers have greatly improved Recreation Grounds.—The game between the Chicagos and Cincin- is, at the Recreation Grounds to-morrow (Sunday), is expected to be best ever seen on the coast.—The betting is in favor of Chicago, on ount of their practice this week.

Cricket.—Last Saturday the most important match of the season was yed between the Occident Cricket Club and the Hop Bitters Baseball h, at the Oakland cricket grounds. The Occidents won the first in- gs; score, 55 to 52. The second inning was not played out, so the Oc- ent Club are entitled to claim a victory on the first. In the second ing the Hop Bitters scored 77. The Occidents made 49 when time s called, and had two wickets to fall. What the visitors lacked in bat- y they made up by their excellent fielding. Their wicket-keeper, gham, was especially good. In the first inning Johnson bowled three kets and Barrows two for the Occidents. The rest of the H. B.s were ght out on their bowling except Manning, who was run out, and Mc- re, who knocked his own hails off. For the H. B.s, Leonard bowled r wickets. The attendance was very small.

Shooting.—The Santa Rosa Sportsman's Club have arranged for a nd pigeon and rifle shooting tournament, to take place at Mayfield rk, November 28th. Upwards of forty prizes in gold coin, from $150 wn, will be given, and all the crack shots are expected to compete. ere will be plenty of birds, over 200 dozen pigeons being already en- ed. The entrance fee is $10 for the pigeon shooting, and $5 for the e shooting. Entries can be sent to the S. R. S. C., Sonoma county. —Remember that the deer season closes Novemher 1st.—Rail are ntiful in the Alameda marshes.—The lack of rain has made ducks rce in the Northern counties.

Coursing.—At the Pioneer Club's meeting last Tuesday the Committee Cars reported that arrangements had been made with the company to e their tickets received on all trains down from Merced till Tuesday owing the meeting. This gives visitors a chance to lay over for a few s shooting. The drawing of dogs and election of judge and slipper is for Saturday, November 1st. The Club leave San Francisco Tuesday, vember 4th. Tickets—which only cost $7 50—can be obtained from y members.

Swimming.—The race between Williams and Melrose came off at rth Beach last Tuesday morning, from the baths to Black Point and rn. Melrose took the lead, but was passed by Williams before the int was reached, and on the return was unable to come up to Williams, o won in 24 min. 30 sec. Melrose's time was 25 min. This is not fast e, but, as a strong ebb tide was running, nothing good was expected. —Paul Boyton will be here before the middle of November.

Yachting. The performance of Pinafore at Saucelito to-day, and the excursion to Vallejo of the fleet, will make a grand finale to the best yachting season we have ever had. The yachts were all in position yesterday, the arrangements are perfect and reflect great credit on Commodore Harrison.

Bicycling.—The English bicyclists who went to New York are about to engage in a six-day race at Gilmore's Garden, under the management of E. C. Cotton, the gentleman who brought the female pedestrians to San Francisco.

The American Exporter, for October, is a valuable number, filled with facts and figures of great importance to commercial men. The new German tariff is given complete, side by side with the old, besides a list of the new Victorian (N. S. W.) duties, which are certain to discourage American importations, and the text of the new treaty between this country and Japan, besides notices of American trade with India, with Germany, with Brazil, with Irish ports and with Colombia. Consul Studer writes from Singapore to point out some of the obstacles in the way of American trade with foreign countries. The two chief difficulties he finds to be the want of American commercial houses abroad and the backward condition of American shipping, all the steam communications being in the hands of other nations.

Barnum was interviewed in Philadelphia yesterday. He says that the report that Denis Kearney once traveled with his show as the "Wild Man from Borneo" is not founded on fact. Kearney traveled with him one season as the "Boorzhoola Cannibal," but his language was so frightful that he shocked the deaf and dumb Patagonian, and undermined the morals of the learned pig and educated mules. Even the elephants threatened to pack up their trunks and leave; so Kearney was discharged. —Norr. Herald.

Man and Wife (More than) One.—An old maiden aunt, from whom there were decidedly good expectations, was telling an engaging and engaged blue-eyed maiden that she must remember man and wife are one; whereupon the maiden remarked that if the maiden aunt occupied the bedroom next that of her father and mother, when they were quarreling, she would be disposed to believe they were at least a dozen.—Weekly Irish Times.

"The World," the Flesh, and the Devil.

[By a Truthful Penman.]

We take the following from the Iowa Normal Monthly: "If we wish tn know where the profession of teaching is most honored and best provided for, we must go to Brazil. The teacher in Brazil, having once passed a satisfactory examination, becomes a government official for life, aud is promoted, not as vacancies occur, hut according to his term of service. After five years' service, during which he has a comfortable salary with house-rent, he receives a small pension, and for every scholar above thirty, which is supposed to he the average numher in country schools, he gets, as addition to his salary, an equivalent equal to one-third of the estimated cost of each pupil's tuition. When sick, or disahled, a small extra pension is provided. After ten years' service, the salary, pension, and perquisites are douhled. After twenty years it is again increased, and a life-insurance policy is then hestowed upon him by the Government, sufficient to keep his family from want in case of his death. After thirty years he is put upon the retired list, and receives the same pay as army or navy officers of a certain rank, hut he may even then continue to teach and to receive a regular salary."——In England the season for country-house parties is just heginning. When people have well drunk of their foreign waters, and well washed themselves in the salt waves, or sufficiently hardened themselves on the Scotch moors, they return to the ancestral homes, and then quickly gather round them the waifs and strays, the good shots and the good fellows, and the pretty faces, who, comhined, make country-house life in England the jolliest thing. Even if there are no partridges to shoot, there are generally rabhits, and always lawn-tennis and riding to fall hack on. Who could wish for a pleasanter occupation than a ride on a long Septemher afternoon through the heautiful corn-fields and winding lanes which ahound in almost every corner of this country, whereof the home scenery, if not the finest or grandest, is certainly the prettiest and most refressing to he found in the world? Then whist, nap, billiards, music, or dancing, come to finish up the evenings, which have hegun to close up so fast.——The tales continually "wired" to England from France are certainly the most sensational and romantic that go to fill up the London papers. Here is the latest from Paris. A young man, aged 26, who has heen married only three months, made an appointment to dine with his wife at a restaurant in the Palais Royal. The young wife was punctual, hut the hushand came not. Alarmed, she went home and found the door of the apartment locked. She received no answer on ringing. She had the door forced open, and discovered her husband dead in hed. Beside him was a heautiful girl, also dead. Both had taken poison. The young wife thus suddenly and cruelly made a widow was carried from the scene a raving maniac.——The Pictorial World has passed into the possession of the Brothers Dalziel, who intend to make it a very light periodical, illustrated by the hest known draughtsmen. They already own Fun and Judy.——In Oroville, California, a placer mining region once famous, there are thousands of prosperous Chinamen, who hought its mines several years since for almost nothing at all. Oroville is quite a lively place still, in consequence of the thriftiness of the Mongolians. They have a city of their own there, resplendent in gaudy, hright colors, large stores, a theater, and many other "attractions," including gambling houses. All the way thence up the coast the Chinamen are in almost every nook and corner mining, and some of their placer operations are quite extensive. They are also in goodly nnmhers in the city of Portland, Oregon, and one block in particular looks as if it might have heen erected in Peking and brought over hodily.——A correspondent of a scientific contemporary claims to have discovered a new application of magnetic electricity, by which the mind of a patient has acquired the power of apparently releasing itself from the trammels of matter, and of transporting itself to places distant from the hody, which remains in a condition of repose, resemhling the effect produced by anæsthetics. Whilst under this electric influence (the manner of which is not disclosed) the mind can he directed to any spot or scene, and is susceptible of the same impressions and conditions as would he experienced in the person of the patient himself. Scenes thus visited and impressions thus received are not only quite accurate, hut the patient, when released from the electric influence, is said to retain a perfect remembrance of information so acquired.——Vanity Fair says: The Princess of Wales is adored in her own country, as elsewhere. The enthusiasm which greets her wherever she appears in puhlic is most remarkahle. She is thought to he looking as young and pretty as when she left her home, now many years ago. The little Princesses also come in for their share of admiration; the eldest, Princess Louise, hears a strong remembIance to her annt of that name, Princess Victoria to the Queen, and Princess Maud to her mother. They all ride wonderfully well, and are said to be very accomplished.——It is no use whatever for a lady to have a good figure in these days of improvement. You now huy your figure as you huy anything else, and send it hack to he changed if you don't like it when it comes home. It is a well-known London tailor who has hrought tbe system to perfection, and a lady goes to him and gets fitted with a figure to her taste. This figure being finally adjusted, she puts it on, fastens it with a bolt in front, and straightway goes forth to delight the world in a tight-fitting dress. Everyhody must have observed the great improvement in figures that has taken place lately; many have noticed how hard some of our heauties are to hold when you are dancing with them. I have often wondered at it, until the other day I discovered the cause. The new figure has this advantage—that a lady may now have a pin run into ber or he pinched with impunity.—Vanity Fair.——An entirely new pastime has heen invented for country-houses in the shape of tea-tray tohoggining. The way of it is this. You take a tea-tray to the top of a good flight of stars, sit in it, hold on to the sides of the tray with hoth hands—and let yourself go! If you manage well you slide down the whole flight of stars quickly and easily, and hring up on the landing at the hottom; if you don't manage it properly, you turn round when part of the way down, and get a good crumpler. The advantage of this game is that ladies can play it, and in the house where I saw it played they tohoggined far hetter than the men, who generally lost their tray and themselves half-way down the stairs.—Ibid.

SKELETON SKETCHES.--No. 10.

[BY T. A. HARCOURT.]

The History of a Portrait.

[A tradition with which I have been familiar from childhood is my authority for this story. The portrait, I believe, still exists.]

"We are born, we laugh, we weep!
We love, we droop, we die!
Ah! wherefore do we laugh or weep?
Why do we live or die?
Who knows that secret deep?
Alas! not I."

I.

In the reign of Louis Quinze, the Duchesse d'Ilfroy was one of the most beautiful women at the French Court—a court, be it remembered, where, in those days, beauty ruled paramount, and where nothing unbeautiful could hope for favor. It might be added that nothing virtuous, however rare, could retain a place in that magnificently dissolute circle; but the Duchesse was a notable exception to this rule, for neither King nor courtier could truly utter a word against her honor, and still she remained the favorite, the leader, the brightest star of all. It may have been that, in a society where virtue was so rare, the presumed possessor of it acquired additional value in the eyes of her worshipers—and their name was legion—but an additional zest was given to the chase by the fact that the lady's conduct seemed to imply that the citadel of her chastity must capitulate sooner or later. She never shunned the company of the most dissolute or refused an invitation to festivities where decorum was unknown. On the contrary, her own mansion was the scene of entertainments as riotously splendid as those given at the Palace itself. But for all this not a breath of scandal had ever touched Gabrielle d'Ilfroy. She had married the old Duc d'Ilfroy when she was barely sixteen; at seventeen she had found herself a widow, and the mistress of incalculable wealth; now, at twenty, at the very hight of her beauty and power, she was still without a husband, and, what was far more incomprehensible, without a lover among the glittering and titled throng that paid her homage.

II.

"At what hour did you say I was to sit for the artist?" yawned Gabrielle to her favorite tire-woman, as she sat at her morning, or rather noon-day toilet.

"I think Madame la Duchesse knows that the Englishman is awaiting her pleasure now," answered the ancient and privileged Abigail rather tartly.

Gabrielle shot a glance from her soft brown eyes into the mirror before which she sat, but the face of the old woman behind her told no tales.

"Very well," she said; "hasten, Marie, the time of these people is valuable."

"I am sure you more than pay for his time," retorted the other testily, and then added more kindly, as she put the last touch to the silky tresses of her mistress: "but, after all, this young Englishman is very handsome and noble."

When Gabrielle d'Ilfroy entered the room where she had sat daily for a portrait for a week past, Edgar Heathfield, the artist, was busily working at his canvas. It had been the whim of Madame to have her portrait painted, and she had conceived the whim immediately after meeting the Englishman at the house of her old friend, the Marquis d'Henricourt, who was so famous for discovering and fostering genius wherever he found, or thought he found, it. There were few people to whom the Duchesse deigned to give a reason for anything she did, but to those few she said that she was disgusted with the effeminate flattery of French art, and wished to see how her face would fare under the less tender but more truthful mercies of an English brush. The young foreign student's good luck in getting such a potent and munificent patroness was on everybody's tongue. His fortune was made, they said, and so thought he; and his heart was glad, for in old England there was one waiting for him who might now be his wife in a few months, possibly, instead of in several years, which was the best either of them had dared to hope for.

III.

Gabrielle, then, as I have said, entered to find the artist bowed over his work, for he was anxious to complete it, and there was much that could be done without her before him. As to the face, this sitting would finish it. He neither heard nor saw her when she entered, and she stood looking at him for several seconds before he felt her presence. It is needless to describe the man. His type was strongly English, and his face was rather manly than handsome. His frame was large and muscular, all this, together with the full, but closely clipped chestnut beard, his dark eye and his healthy complexion, formed very decided points of contrast to the French courtier of that day. When at length he felt her eyes on him he looked up, rose, and bowed low, as was then the custom even in his own country, but by no means so low as those whom the Duchesse d'Ilfroy was accustomed to see at her feet. Her eyes had dropped in an instant, and with a haughty inclination of her beautiful head she seated herself before him. For nearly an hour the work went steadily on. Those who knew Gabrielle would have been surprised at her patience, if they had not seen her eyes as they rested on the painter during the intervals between the swift glances with which he now and then took in a detail. But all men would have been still more surprised at the impassive-ness with which he worked on in the dazzling glory of her superb beauty—if they had not known the loyal dreams of an English maiden which filled his sight and his heart to the radiant vision before him.

"You work well," she said, when he told her the portrait was finished. "You work marvelously well." But as she stood by his side, gazing silently at the picture, she hardly seemed to see it. As he put away his colors, he replied that he was glad she was pleased, and his matter-of-fact tone roused her.

"Here," she said coldly, taking a handful of gold from the velvet purse that hung at her girdle, "let me add this to what I have already given you, as a proof of my pleasure."

"No," he answered, looking her in the face suddenly; "I asked for no work neither more nor less than I thought it worth. Besides that, your patronage will bring others ——"

"Others?" she interrupted, and into her great soft brown eyes stole a look that he had never seen there before. "All the ladies of France will then worship you because I have stooped to do so."

He stared at her in wonder. She stood transfigured before him. Pride, passion, pique, anger, were blended in her expression, but through them all gleamed love.

IV.

There was an indescribable commotion in the Court of Louis Quinze when it became known that Gabrielle d'Ilfroy had been found dead in her bed. Those were not suicidal days or suicidal people. Life with them was too sweet and unshackled to be lightly lost, even by the most improvident and unfortunate butterfly of them all. But for her to voluntarily relinquish the pleasures that she tasted, and still more the pleasures that she might have tasted but would not, was more than her companions could understand.

But astonishment itself was dumbfounded when it became known that by will (she had no legal heirs) she left everything to the English artist, Edgar Heathfield. Then the lip of scorn curled, and, regardless of their own infamy, Gabrielle's friends conscientiously declared that they had always known still waters to run deep.

But, after all, the immense estates of Madame la Duchesse reverted to the Crown, for the legatee utterly renounced and abjured all claim to them. Two things, however, he kept in his English home. One his wife saw and was half jealous of. It was a portrait, painted by her husband, of a woman supremely beautiful, and it had come from France, but who it was he never told her, and she never asked. The other thing was a letter, and that the sweet little wife never saw. It was in French, and, being translated, read thus:

"You were loyal to her whom you loved, and I honor you for it. I would have told you this in person, at any cost to myself, if you had not left France at once. During my life I had never known love till I saw you; after sealing this my life will not be long enough for me ever to know love again.

GABRIELLE D'ILFROY."

A GOOD PLAN.

Anybody can learn to make money rapidly operating in Stocks, by the "Two Unerring Rules for Success," in Messrs. Lawrence & Co.'s new circular. The combination method, which this firm has made so successful, enables people with large or small means to reap all the benefits of largest capital and best skill. Thousands of orders, in various sums, are pooled into one vast amount and co-operated as a mighty whole, thus securing to each shareholder all the advantages of the largest operator. Immense profits are divided monthly. Any amount, from $5 to $5,000, or more, can be used successfully. N. Y. Baptist Weekly, September 26th, 1878, says: "By the combination system $15 would make $75, or 5 per cent.; $50 pays $350, or 7 per cent.; $100 makes $1,000, or 10 per cent. on the stock, during the month, according to the market." Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, June 29th: "The combination method of operating stocks is the most successful ever adopted." New York Independent, Sept. 12th: "The combination system is founded upon correct business principles, and no person need be without an income while it is kept working by Messrs. Lawrence & Co. Brooklyn Journal, April 29th: "Our editor made a net profit of $101.25 from $20 in one of Messrs. Lawrence & Co.'s combinations." New circular (mailed free) explains everything. Stocks and bonds wanted. Government bonds supplied.

BALDWIN'S LAWYERS.

It is not our custom to find fault with attorneys engaged in litigation against us. They have their obligations to their clients, which we understand and respect. But then we have never until now had occasion to complain of a District Attorney being dragged perforce into a Police Court to conduct a preliminary inquiry, the result of which he may afterward have to pass upon with judicial fairness as between the people on the one hand and the accused on the other. District Attorney Murphy has much to do, and is not credited with doing it over well. Just now he ought to be specially busy, as the Grand Jury is in session. Yet he goes out of his way to serve his friend Lloyd, passes upon a complaint for libel against the NEWS LETTER, causes a warrant to issue, and goes down to the Police Court and conducts an examination which is to determine whether or not the case is to be sent to be passed upon by him in another and totally different capacity. The Police Court has its proper prosecuting officer, who, it is needless to say, is not D. J. Murphy. Mr. Baldwin has his private attorney, and that attorney is not Murphy, though he may be Murphy's owner. Why was not Prosecuting Attorney Flood, or Baldwin's private attorney Lloyd, permitted to conduct this case? We know that Murphy did not go into it from any love of it; moreover, we are very sure he would not have gone into it at all if he could have avoided it. Then why could he not have avoided it? Ah! Thereby hangs a tale! We shall, perhaps, before we are through, tell that little story, especially as the telling of it may let in a flood of light as to the influences that astute attorneys sometimes get over prosecuting officers. Mr. Murphy is soon to retire from office; he is being allowed to leave it pleasantly, and if his paths are made as pleasant as his friends expect to make them, he will have no reason to regret having experienced a change of employers. It may be, therefore, that he thinks he is now above and beyond criticism. If he does so think, all we can say is that he never made a greater mistake in his life, and he has made some considerable ones. In the proper discharge of his duty, even though that duty be the prosecution of the News Letter, we find no fault with him. But it is not his duty to prosecute a preliminary inquiry in the Police Court. On the contrary, such a prosecution conflicts with his real duty of afterward advising and assisting the Grand Jury upon the case. Moreover, he treated us most unfairly in the Police Court; he, in a violent harangue, insisted that the case should be gone on with then and there. We had only received notice of the suit the evening previous, and it was monstrously unreasonable to expect us to be ready then. We asked that a future, but early, day should be set for the hearing, and our customary and proper request was acceded to by the Court, despite the loud-mouthed protests of a vituperative but expiring District Attorney. We complain that he made a most monstrous demand, and made it with over-zealous language. We tell him that, if he can stand the outcome of it, we can. As to Mr. Lloyd, we have nothing to say against his zeal for his employer, but when he uses influences, which we may yet have to describe, with an official to cause him to perform functions that are inconsistent with his office, he (Lloyd) renders himself amenable to criticism, because what is our case to-day may be somebody else's to-morrow. We know no man who has been treated with greater forbearance, but forbearance may cease to be a virtue. If by this time we have not made it perfectly apparent that we do not intend to submit to be bulldozed by either Baldwin or his oversmart lawyers, we have been read to little purpose.

INVESTIGATING THE BALDWIN.

Baldwin demands an investigation of himself, his hotel and its surroundings, and most assuredly he shall have it. In an ill-advised hour he caused a charge of libel to be preferred against the News Letter, and, while we are the nominal defendants, it is he and his that are really on trial. That is the real issue, and as such we accept it with cheerful alacrity. Not, of course, that we mean to say that we have any special liking for defending libel suits. When, however, they are forced upon us, in the discharge of an undoubted public duty, we shrink not from the obligation that is upon us to make clear the good motives from which we have acted, and the justifiable ends we desired to promote. Our readers, who have followed our course, are aware that we have been commenting upon hotel life as it is in this city, with a view to the public good. We have shown how our large hotels have come to be the homes of some of the best families. We pointed out that, as those institutions are no longer licensed or subject to strict police surveillance, it is essential, in the public interest, that their management should be freely, yet always fairly, criticised. The duty of saying some plain things about the Baldwin was upon us, and we said them, with malice toward none and with entire confidence in their truthfulness. Whether that confidence was well founded or not will be best determined by the Police Court investigation to which we are challenged. We are ready for that inquiry, and propose to make it thorough, searching and conclusive. If it results in disaster to those who have invited it, the fault will be theirs and not ours. If the atmosphere of the house receives a healthy fumigation in the process, that will be its advantage and the public's good. It was part of the libel, with which we are charged, that we alleged that Baldwin was "not a man of such experience, moral elevation or gentlemanly instincts as to constitute him the kind of person best fitted to run such an institution." Mr. Baldwin challenges us to the proof of that allegation. He shall have it, though of a certainty the supplying of it is a work of supererogation, for there does not live a well informed man in our city who does not, of his own knowledge, know that we have simply stated the truth. But we went further, and stated many facts very circumstantially. The proof will have to be equally circumstantial, and we are well assured that it will be. In short, we mean to make this case somewhat of a caution. We know whereof we speak, we know Baldwin, we know his lawyers and their methods, and, before we are through, it will not be our fault if the public is not as well informed about them as we are. If we were to offer advice, it would be that the parties concerned should take our well meant criticisms in good part, and proceed to so improve the management of the Baldwin as that we may hereafter praise where we are now compelled to condemn. We shall be glad to change our tone when the facts justify us. We have no desire to send evil reports abroad, and would not if the demands of truth were not imperative.

THE CROCKER RECEPTION.

Memorable among the many memorable incidents of Gen. Grant's visit to San Francisco, the reception of the hero by Mr. Charles Crocker will remain one of the great events in our social history. Only the largest spirit of hospitality and State pride, disposing of boundless wealth, could imagine and carry through an entertainment so stately, so glowing with color and splendor, so lordly in its scale and scope. The mansion, famous wherever the name of California is known, is one of the grandest on the Continent, and is furnished throughout in a style of imperial luxury. All that the genius and the cunning hands of art can accomplish of marvelous and rare on the canvas or in marble, in the chased metal or the elaborate bronze, in the wonderful carved woods and the exquisite, costly fabrics of the finest art centers of Europe, or the wonderful works of the deft Japanese and Chinese, all are here brought together and arrayed with a subtle charm of taste and refinement, which fill the visitor with an ever-growing amazement. Who could imagine that treasures like these would be found in a city, barely thirty years old, and in a land but yesterday beyond the reach of the civilized world? Surprises like this are the delight of our California magnates; and none has yet been imagined to compare with the fairy festival of last Tuesday night, at the Crocker Mansion. The grand halls blazed with light and the air was balmy with the breath of the rarest and most delicious flowers; from room to room the guests moved through a succession of enchanting scenes, each a picture one would have been glad to fix forever; and the walls flashed back from their polished wood-work and costly mirrors and rare marbles the light and sparkle of diamond and ruby and emerald, and the glances of eyes that outflashed the gems, and the poise of heads more lovely than the dreams of art.

The beauty and the distinction of San Francisco were gathered to greet the renowned guest, and surely not in all his wanderings had the observant eye of the great soldier rested on a statelier assemblage of fair women and brave men. Here were the women, beautiful, refined, accomplished, who have made California a synonym throughout the land for the highest type of womanly grace and culture; here were the men, the thinkers and the workers famous in the fields of enterprise, the great statesmen, the railroad kings, who have grasped a continent, the profound lawyers, whose names are quoted with respect abroad, the divines, who have shed light on the sacred mysteries, the merchants, whose ships are on every sea, and the manufacturers, who make the land hum with the sound of industry. Through the enchanted night went on the song, the sound of happy voices, the musical laughter of women; the rapture of music, and the tinkle of the silvery fountain's fall; and when the silent stars were setting, and the still glory of the coming day began to fill the east with light, slowly and regretfully the farewells were spoken, and the brilliant company separated, with lingering looks and sighs but half repressed.

SPECIAL COMMISSIONS.

Nothing in the new Constitution seems plainer than that special commissions are abolished, and forever prohibited. The words are emphatic that special commissioners shall not be capable of performing any municipal functions whatever. That legislates the police, water, fire, new City Hall, sheet widening, golden gate park, and all similar commissions out of existence. Existing commissioners do not seem to realize the fact, but it is a fact nevertheless. The newly elected officials who are ex officio members of commissioners are filing bonds as such, but they may well spare themselves the trouble. The nice little plums, in the shape of additional salaries for these extra duties, will now remain in the city Treasury. The Board of Supervisors must now perform all these duties. It was always proper that they should. It was an anomaly in representative government, that the principle functions of city supervisors should be taken away from the elected authorities, and placed in the hands of nominated irresponsibles. It was said that commissioners, who were generally named by persons who lobbied hills through the Legislature, could be more safely trusted than the popularly elected Supervisors. If this were true, then the truth of it is a terrible commentary upon government by the people. The sooner the Board of Supervisors is made to discharge its full duties to the city, the sooner will the people realize the necessity of electing the most honest and capable men for Supervisors.

RUSSIA AND GERMANY.

The pretended quarrel between Russia and Germany, which has so exercised the editors of newspapers, is the greatest piece of moonshine ever yet presented to the world in the guise of a fact. The mere circumstance of Prince Gortschakoff having pretended to make a confidant of all Europe through a French newspaper is enough to prove this. It is all a piece of acting, clumsy and transparent enough (yet neither too transparent nor too clumsy, as would appear, to deceive the newspaper critics), intended to throw dust in the eyes of England and France, and, above all, to lead Austria to her ruin and dismemberment. The notion of Russia making an alliance with France, after the telegram of the Emperor William thanking the Czar for preventing France from getting allies and attributing to him the main influence in the triumph of Prussia—this notion is too absurd for any but a leader-writer. The notions which every man must get into his head who wishes to understand European politics are these: 1. Russia and Germany are closely allied. 2. The victims of this alliance are intended to be Turkey, Austria, France and England. 3. A real alliance between England, France, Turkey and the smaller States will upset the whole conspiracy.—From European papers received this morning.

A MEMORABLE OCCASION.

On the evening of Friday, October 17th, a select company of old and tried friends assembled at the mansion of Mr. and Mrs. Fredk. L. Castle, Sutter and Van Ness Avenue, to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of their wedding. The spacious drawing-rooms and halls of the stately residence were exquisitely decorated with a profusion of native and exotic flowers, wrought into festoons and wreaths. The genial spirit of the time shone in the faces of all, and it was with subdued emotion that the solemn vows were once more plighted in the presence of a company which included the seven children of the accomplished host and hostess. The evening wore on in the interchange of congratulations and memories, sunny and sombre, of the quarter-century, through whose shifting scenes the faithful pair had passed into the broad and mellow light of the now westering sun of life. It was after midnight when the party broke up, uttering, as with one heart, the sincerest wishes for continued health and happiness to those who bear so lightly the burden of their riper years.

THE TOWN CRIER.

"Hear the Crier" "What the devil art thou?
"One that will play the devil, sir with you."

"He'd a sting in his tail as long as a flail,
Which made him grow bolder and bolder."

Suit has been commenced by the family of Mr. Charles Blithers, now in the Napa Lunatic Asylum, against the firm that furnished the hundred and odd clocks at the New City Hall. The complaint alleges that, being of sound mind and rationally disposed, Mr. Blithers went to the Tax Collector's office to pay his dues, and found out that in that office it was twenty minutes past eleven, while he (Mr. Blithers) supposed it was a quarter to three. He noted the fact as a curious circumstance, and passed down stairs to get a license for his dog, when he ascertained by the clock there that it was just half-past nine, while the clocks in the corridors insisted respectively that it was three minutes past one, eleven minutes of five, half-past seven, and sixteen minutes past nine. At this point his intellect weakened, but he climbed up to the third story, where a very handsome dial was moving with remarkable regularity, and pointing to four o'clock. As he was trying to gather his scattered brain into cohesive particles, he heard a gentleman behind him remark: "Dear me, that clock can't be right; it's never a quarter to six, surely." And then he swooned on the cold marble steps, and was taken before the Insanity Commissioners, who no sooner saw him gaze wildly at the clock and shriek, "It cannot be forty minutes past ten," than they consigned him to the Black Maria and committed him to Napa. He may recover, being perfectly gentle except when he sees a clock, but the family expect to recover $40,000 damages.

There is an attempt to get up a boom against the Napa Insane Asylum, because it is reported that an inmate of that costly palace sat too long under the hot-water faucet, and was taken out boiled. If this were true, it would be hard to say too much against the management of the place, for, without taking into account the cost of heating the water, which was kept running an unconscionable time, there was a lamentable waste of raw material in cooking what could not be utilized for food. Nevertheless, this was certainly a cleaner and more agreeable method of suppressing an obnoxious patient than the Wisconsin practice of dropping him into a dirty basement. The obvious weak point in both these stories is, that we are not told what was done with the product of the industry in either case. Is it not barely possible that a cooked lunatic is found to be more profitable, when fairly planted, than a raw one?

The hurry in which daily newspapers are necessarily prepared excuses the following paragraph in a usually accurate evening contemporary, although, in some sense, it is scarcely pardonable unless the hasty report was handed in without the supervision of the city editor. It reads: "The steamer General Grant, with St. Paul and party on board, arrived this morning from Astoria." Immediately after the publication of the above item, the Rev. Dr. Cox, D.D.D., ran down to the Palace Hotel to try and get the rough notes of a Third Epistle to the Corinthians, which he confidently expected to find ready for the printer. His disgust at discovering St. Paul nursing a pug puppy and smoking a clear Havana is not easily illustrated, but as we go to press he wasn't writing any epistles to speak of.

Sacramento has had her grand reception, which went off very successfully. By great care, and assiduous treatment with ice bags, the authorities were able to keep the thermometer down to 85°, and Grant was heard to say he had found it warmer in the Red Sea. This brought smiles to every face, and when, taking his seat at the banquet-table, he picked up the menu and remarked: "Thank God! I can see my way through this; quail on toast and honed turkey," thunders of applause shook the building, and a salute of 100 guns was fired from the Capitol grounds. Workmen have been busy ever since, propping up the dome, and it is thought it may be saved. But Grant is still puzzled about that new-fangled word menu. He says they used to call it grub when he was a boy.

A thoughtful patriot, who saw 30,000 children march around Gen. Grant at Woodward's Gardens, three weeks ago, has been distressed in mind ever since to know what those children are going to do, in view of the Mongolian hordes now pouring into our beloved country. It is hard to satisfy everybody, but perhaps it may have some bearing on the case if we invite this patriot to look out for his own share of the 30,000, and try to induce his friends to do likewise. And it is just possible that the whole 30,000 might have been better employed that day in attending school, and fitting themselves so far to hold their own against the Mongolian hordes.

Mr. Herbst, of the South Cosmopolitan Grammar School, considers that the study of French and German aids scholarship in the English language, and since the amount paid for teachers in the two Continental tongues is only $11,700, there ought to be no objection to the Cosmopolitan Schools. Mr. Herbst may make himself easy. There might be a war upon French, if French alone were taught; but there will be no war upon the German language in the Public Schools. There are quite too many German voters in the city for any party to think of offending them.

Oakland is clearly ahead. It is announced that her public schools are crowded, but that the system of the Superintendent affords ample accommodation for all. Whether the Superintendent is in any way related to the ingenious Sir Boyle Roche does not appear; but he ought to be, since he has found the way to make two bodies occupy the same space at once. There is something elastic in Oakland; either the air, or the school buildings, or the Superintendent of Schools, or perhaps even the truth itself.

Our best citizens are all on their knees. Men who have not knelt in prayer for a quarter of a century are earnestly beseeching the Creator to send a thunder-storm, a heavy rain, an earthquake; in fact, anything which will stop the threatened marine performance of Pinafore to-day. There is every prospect of the petition being granted, but, failing that, a heroic "Curtius," as it were, has been found, who, at the sacrifice of his own life, has sworn to scuttle the yacht with the whole company on board.

A small boy, named McCarthy, was sent to the Industrial School this week for six months for delivering Mark Antony's oration to a Chinawoman. He invariably commenced, "Lend me your ear-rings, I come to——" at which point he was in the habit of doing a mile in 5:25. His last effort introduced him to Judge Lounderback, with the above result.

It was unfortunate for one of our most hoary pioneers that the last day of the man and horse contest should also have been the date fixed for the Crocker reception, for about noon a boy emerged from a florist's on Post street, carrying the mammoth horse-shoe of flowers of welcome which was hung at the head of the stairs, and was typical of good luck to the General and the guests. But the old Forty-niner saw the floral trophy, and, turning to a friend, with a shake of his head, muttered: "Well, I've been here thirty years, and seen a heap of durned nonsense, but when it comes to carrying a horse-shoe of flowers out to the Pavilion, and presenting it to a weary old plug like "Pinafore," its time to look out for earthquakes. Why in thunder didn't the blamed fool spend the money for oats?" and he walked sadly away and got outside of about four fingers of old rye as a temporary immersion of his grief.

Mr. Ruth and Dr. Carver are not going to have it all their own way forever and ever as champion glass-ball shooters. That lively village, Petaluma, will shortly bring out a dark horse who can break eleven hundred balls out of a thousand, and simultaneously kill two pigeons out of three from a trap spring behind him at two yards' rise. By a patent adjustment he will also score seventy-five consecutive hulls'-eyes at fifty yards, on a target placed at right angles to the pigeons and the glass balls; and the appearance of this new candidate for powder and shot honors is merely delayed while he is arranging a little scheme to do the whole business blindfold.

General Grant is a man of few words; so few, indeed, that he has made the same little remark about feeling that his reception in America is a personal compliment just 153 times, on 153 different occasions, since he landed. There is a movement going on among the able writers of the city to get up a new phrase for the hero's use—no writer to be allowed to contribute more than one word—and the sentence, when completed, will be elegantly engrossed and bound in embossed blue velvet for presentation. It is thought that Grant will feel particularly good when he gets it, and his hearers more so, when they pick up his words, rightly described by the daily press as "filled with food for thought."

Hector A. Stuart has written the libretto of a comic opera called the "Jolly Quacker." As a burlesque it is scarcely equal to this renowned writer's now celebrated poem on the reception of Grant, in which occurs the immortal line:

"His voice, deep as thunder, rose over commotion."

Like Shakespeare, Hugo, Dickens and other masters of literature, Stuart possesses the power of moving us to smiles or tears—his tragedies excite our laughter, his comedies make us weep.

"I like Gen. Grant first-rate," said a Chronicle reporter sadly the other day, "but his coming 's been a little rough on me. I was detailed for the banquet business, and I've been writing columns of slush about 'Charlotte Russe a la Chantilly,' and chicken liver brochettes,' 'salmon a la Chambord,' and 'English snipe.' You don't know how hard it is on a fellow after a day's work of this sort to sit down and worry through three dishes for a quarter or to take a light fifteen-cent meal. It seems terribly incongruous, don't it?"

A discharged employee, in the usual spirit of gentlemen in a similar fix, recently brought serious charges against Mr. Sinton, the License Collector. And thus out of evil comes good. The quasi-defendant in the case insists on an immediate examination by experts, and nothing remains of the original daub of mud flung at him except the flingee, who retires into his shell with the celerity of a perrywinkle, and, like a defeated snail, withdraws his horns into the well slimed walls of his own interior.

One of the most repulsive features about modern life is the ubiquitous reporter. A man cannot even hide the amount of his income from these prying fellows; and ever since the newspapers published the fact that W. H. Vanderbilt and J. C. Flood hold each $5,000,000 in U. S. Bonds, we have been expecting to find our own large investment in that line revealed. Thus far we have escaped, but the end is not yet.

The wind blows the other way in Herzegovina at present. Before the war the Turks took what they pleased from Christians in that happy land, and shot the proprietor who objected to having his goods conveyed. Now the Christians pay no rent, and shoot the Turkish landlord if he tries to collect his dues. Some philologists hold that the Irish is the native speech of Herzegovina Christians.

Mr. Chas. Alpers proposes to the Board of Supervisors to contract for the removal of dead animals from the city limits for thirty years, the Board to spend $100,000 in clearing the decks for action. It would save money to the taxpayers and purify the atmosphere far more to give Mr. Alpers $5,000, on condition of removing himself beyond the city limits for the term specified.

The poor Indian is again being imposed upon in Texas and New Mexico, as well as in Colorado. The moment he goes out, like the sentimental butcher on that beautiful moonlight night, to do a little quiet killing, the white man raises a hue and cry, and objects to the child of nature. This is mean. "Live and let live" is a good motto.

The telegraph incorrectly reports the name of the Irish M.P. who declared that the people of Ireland had more cause for resorting to violence than the French had in 1789. It was not Major O'Gorman who made this reasonable statement, but Major Goliah O'Grady Gahagan, whose exploits have been recorded by Thackeray.

On Thursday the Alta published a story headed the "Mutilation of a Grave," and some excitement was caused before it was found out that the grave in question was that of the English language, which had suffered mutilation at the hands of the great journal till it could bear no more.

The Chicago papers promise themselves to give Grant the "grandest military spectacle" seen in the country since the war. Naturally, St. Louis is all on fire to give him a pair of spectacles, and we believe in anything to beat Grant.

An Oregon paper says that a married lady of that State saw a town for the first time in her life when she attended the Grant jubilee at Portland, but the cruel editor carefully abstains from telling us what town it was she saw.

Los Angeles complains of not being lively. What the fallen angel do you mean? They don't have a jolly time in heaven; that's not what folks go there for. It's only what is naughty that is nice, good angels.

THE PEDDLER'S SONG.

Lawn as white as driven snow;
Cypress black as e'er was crow;
Gloves as sweet as damask roses;
Masks for faces and for uoses;
Bugle-bracelet, necklace, amber;
Perfume for a lady's chamber;
Gold quelps and stomachers,
For my lads to give their dears;
Pins and poking-sticks of steel.
What maids lack from head to heel:
Come buy of me, come; come buy, come buy,
Buy, lads, or else your lasses cry.

WILLIAM SHAKSPEARE.

It does one good to look at the smiling faces in the streets, and note the signs of revived activity in almost every department of business. It is certain that stirring times are ahead, and that we have fairly left depression behind us. But when we speak of depression, it is to be remembered that, through all the gloomy period of the past three years, there was one place which never ceased for a moment its astonishing hustle and life. Every hour of every day Swain's, 213 Sutter street, has been and is as full of business as a place can be, and all the energies of the force are needed to keep up with its incessant flow of custom.

Perhaps women nowadays do not sufficiently appreciate their emancipation from many of the toils they were forced to go through less than a hundred years ago, when the spinning-wheel was in every house, and the clothing of the family had to be made into cloth at home before it could be cut out. Even when this first necessity was done away with, wives had still to make their husbands' underclothing; but now these indispensable garments are furnished by Carmany & Crosett, 25 Kearny street, superior in style and cheapness to any ever seen before.

Seasoned!—Lady Tourist: "Are the sheets well aired?" Irish Chambermaid: "Troth, and they are, m'am; for the sayson is three months begun, and they've been well-used since!"—Punch.

Periodically, an excitement is stirred up about Capt. Kidd's treasure, buried, as men say, on some one of the islands or on the beach of the mainland, almost anywhere from Cape Hatteras to Mount Desert Island. Many expeditions have wasted means and time and even lives in the vain search for the pirate's wealth; and all the while practically unbounded riches were within the reach of the adventurers, in the saving of fuel and economy of material effected by the use of Montanya's Union Range, the best friend of the housekeeper.

A woman in Maine followed a tramp four miles, knocked him down with a club, and recovered the property he had stolen. She was able to perform this tremendous feat because she was in the habit of taking salt-water baths, which brace up the nerves to any required pitch. At the Neptune and Mermaid Baths, foot of Hyde street, North Beach, under the instruction of Prof. Mohor, one acquires the courage of Bayard and the nerve of Hercules.

A line we have missed in "Allan's Anti-Fat" advertisement: A great reduction on taking a quantity.—Punch.

The spelling reform which now exercises the minds of many scholars in Great Britain and this country, has been practically illustrated for some time in the columns of the Library Journal by this form of the familiar word: Catalog. A lady, with misty notions of the letter R, proposes the form Pawpus for Porpoise. Whether this is to meet with general acceptance may be doubted, but it is certain that Bradley & Rulofson will always remain at the head of the world's photographers.

The Rev. Dr. Stebbins, of the Boston Christian Register, has no faith in the story of Balaam's ass. He says that there is no evidence other than that of Balaam himself that the interesting dialogue reported by him ever took place. This seems to be a little hard on the prophet, who is just now absent from town; but one thing is beyond cavil: there is a steadily growing demand for the Gerke Wine, and Landsberger is kept busy filling orders.

Fact not so generally known as it ought to be: Those who sow wild oats sometimes reap hemp.—Judy.

The director of the Zoological Gardens at Marseilles has discovered rhinitis in a young hippopotamus from Egypt. This dashes to the ground the hopes which had been cherished of hippopotamus steaks and roasts to vary the eternal litany of beef and mutton and veal: but it is at least a consolation to reflect that the very best hats in the world are still to be had at White's, 614 Commercial street.

Cetewayo, the Zulu King, has been melancholy and taciturn since his capture, and seems to be in a deep decline. This is greatly to be regretted, for the noble savage might do better than eat himself up. If he comes to California, he will revive at once under a course of F. & P. J. Cassin's wonderful cordial of Old Rye Whisky and Pure Rock Candy, the acknowledged conqueror of consumption.

A Dry, Rasping Cough, irritates and endangers the Lungs, and greatly debilitates and annoys the patient. Dr. Jayne's Expectorant removes constriction of the bronchial tubes, promotes easy expectoration, heals all inflamed parts, and brings about a speedy cure of the most stubborn Cough or Cold.

"BIZ."

The excitement of the week's traffic upon Front street began early on Monday morning, when Sir Claus Spreckles, President of the California Sugar Refinery, took a walk around among the wholesals jobbing houses, and notified them all of an advance of ¼c ₱ lb on Sugar, and 10c ₱ gallon on Golden Syrup. This was good news for those carrying stocks, but notably so to Castle Brothers, who have 1,000 hhls en route from New York, via Cape Horn, bought at a low price, and Mau & Co., of California street; the latter alone continues to buy all his Refined Sugars in New York and transports them every week hy rail. On the afternoon of Wednesday, ths 22d instant, Mr. Spreckles announced still another rise of ¼c ₱ lb on all grades of Sugar, which, with a ¼c rise, already noted in the News Letter, makes the advance in Sugar in this market, since the heginning of October, 1¼c ₱ lb. This is occasioned, in part, hy the rise of Sugar in Manila and elsewhere, accompanied by an important rise in freight hy ship the world over. The New York Sugar market has also risen, and tbsre was no other alternative for our refiners than to follow suit, especially as the price to hs paid for the incoming Hawaiian crop, contracted for a twelvemonth hy our refiners, is regulated, upon its arrival, by the cabled price at Manila; the same regulated by polarization tests made here. There is one other point here tbat may he stated to the credit of Mr. Spreckles—that when hs advanced ths price of Sugar ¼c ₱ lb, he advanced the wages of his employees at the California Sugar Refinery $5 per month. Now, the query is—will he go still further, and pay $5 more to tally with the second ¼c rise? Ws rather think not, although it is said that the unexpected rise of wages to the men called out kindly expressions of gratitude from all the participants at the Refinery, which were received hy Sir Claus with his accustomed suavity of manner.

The present scheduls price of Sugars to the trade, less 2½ per cent. for cash, is as follows:

(A) Patent Cuhe Sugar in bbls	12c.
(A) Crushed Sugar	12c.
Extra Powdered Sugar, in hbls	12¼c.
Fine Crushed Sugar, in bbls	12c.
Dry Granulated Sugar, in hbls	11¾c.
Extra Granulated Sugar, in bhls	11¼c.
Golden C Sugar, in hhls	10½c.
D Sugar, in hhls. or S. I. kegs	10c.
D Sugar	10¾c.

Half harrels, ¼c. more; boxes, ½c. more—for all kinds.

Sugar imports from the Sandwich Islands during the week embrace the following, which seems to he ahout the fag-end of last year's crop, the new Cane heing now gathered at the Sugar Mills: Bark Discovery, from Honolulu, hrought 4,527 hags and mats; hark D. C. Murray, 1,458 hags, and the ship Gov'r Goodwin only 972 hags—a very much less quantity than was expected by her. Nowadays there is very little Hawaiian Sugar sold in the open market, as nearly the entire crop of 35,000 tons has been contracted for hy our local refiners.

Coffee is now hecoming quite scarce in this market, while the stock of Rio at New York is placed in first hands at the very inconsiderahle amount of 1,000 hags. The present spot price of Prime No. 1 Green Costa Rica is 18@19c.; all other Central American, 15@18c. During the week we received from Central America only 464 bags. The statistical position of our market is very favorahle for a continuation of high prices for the halance of the year. There is, however, a small cargo of Ceylon now en route to Parrott & Co. Sales from first hands during the past fortnight have been very much restricted, owing to the higher views of importers, who have heen holding firmly their small stock of Guatemala at 17½c. for good, and at 18½c. for superior. Considerable quantities, however, have changed hands among dealers at a small advance on prices lately ruling.

Teas.—Stocks are light, and prices both here and in Japan are higher than they have heen for a long time past. Diamond L Japans in papers 40c, and for M. & Co. M., 38½c to the trade. "Comet" Oolongs—this favorite brand of China Black sympathizes fully with the rise in all other kinds.

Rice.—The market is very quiet for all kinds. The stock of China is large, but of Hawaiian Tahle the supplies are light, with sales at 6c@6¼c. China mixed is dull at 4⅝c@4¾c; China, 5¼c@6c for No. 2 and 1 respectively.

Salmon.—There have been during the month large speculative purchases of Case Salmon at prices beginning at $1 10@$1 20 per doz. for 1-lh tins, and so running up to $1 30@$1 35 for best hrands. At this latter rate 5,000 cases Columhia River, f. o. h. on the cans, sold for Chicago at $1 37½, and the price advanced to $1 40@$1 45. Salmon in 2-lh cans are very scarce, and are now held at $2 50 per doz. The stock here of this description does not exceed 1,000 cases. A few days since a telegram was puhlished in our daily papers from Victoria, B. C., to the effect that the bark "Princess Royal" would soon sail for London with 300,000 cases. The fact is she carries ahout 30,000 cases only, or about one-half the entire season's catch in the Fraser River.

Borax.—Producers are not inclined to make further sales at rceent going rates, but are holding for a rise somewhat in keeping with the advance in Metals. Late shipments to New York hy rail and via Isthmus, 45,000 lbs.

Quicksilver.—As stated in last week's News Letter, tbe market became excited over London cahles of a rise during the fortnight from £7 to £9 per hottle. The market here jumped from 34@34½c October 9th to 36c on the 13th, on the 14th to 40c, and on the 20th sales were made for New York—say 1,200 flasks—at 45c, and small spot sales at 50c. Since this incoming week the market has been dull and listless, with no special demand, the nominal price 45c. But as the Hongkong price is now below $70 per picul it is not believed that present rates can he sustained, even with our small stock.

Block Tin.—All the Sydney Pig Tin in market was bought up last week at 17½@18c, and the price advanced to 24@25c. in a johhing way.

Pig Iron.—Holders are very firm in their views, hut in the present unsettled state of the market it is idle to give quotations, as at best they are of little value, though they approximate 30@35c as the range.

Tin Plate.—Our stocks are large and the demand light, yet the few sales making exhihit an advance of, perhaps, $2@$3 per box on prices long ruling.

Iron, Steel, Copper, Lead, etc., are all objects of speculation, and prices very uppish, and bolders are now coining money from the sale of old two and three-year-old stocks of Bar Iron, Iron Pipe, etc.

Coal.—The market does not rally to correspond with the advance in all other goods. There was a comhination recently formed here to put up Cumberland, but it was soon hursted, and prices dropped to old figures. The British Columhia, California and Northern Coast mines now control our market for steam coals. Low prices.

Chemicals.—There seems to he more confidence in tbe market, and the prices a turn dearer.

Cement.—We have no sales of English Portland to record. Prices low.

Dry Goods.—There is more tone to the general market, with an activs trads in progress.

Boots and Shoes.—Business is lively, and owing to the advance in leather, prices are ths turn dearer.

Freights and Charters.—There has been littls or nothing done in charters for Wheat for the last two or three weeks, when nearly all the ships here and soon to arrive were secured at 60s. or less. The fsw disengaged ships in port now demand 70s., and we think it will not be many days before there will be a clean sweep of all the Grain ships in port at or about current rates, and then we should not he at all surprised to see ships chartered for ths United Kingdom and orders at £4.

Domestic Produce.—Flour and Wheat ars hoth higher, and on the up-grade. Extra Flour, $6@6 50; Superfine, $4@5, according to brand and quality. Spot Wheat has been sold largely during the week at $2 10@$2 15 ₱ cental, and ons very choice lot for seed at $2 25. Our Wheat receipts to date now exceed those of a corresponding period of last year, being now, in round figures, 5,250,000 ctls against 5,000,000 in 1878. Our exports are ahout in the same ratio, with vsry frss deliveries day by day. Flour is rather dull at the advance noted.

Barley and Oats are hoth without movement, the former at ¾@1c ₱ lb for feed and hrewing; Oats, $1@$1 35 ₱ ctl, as extremes.

Corn and Beans.—There is rather more tone to the market for both grains, the former at 90c@$1 ₱ ctl., the latter for White, at $1 50@$3 50 per ctl., according to kind and quality.

Hops.—Several hundred hales Oregon and Washington Territory first-class have recently heen sold at 28@30c; Russian River choice, 32½c.

Hides.—The market is strong for all kinds, and prices are higher, say 18@18½c for Dry.

Tallow.—The market is quiet at 5½c for ordinary grades.

Wool.—The market is very strong for all kinds, with free sales. The ship David Crockett, for New York, carried 659,331 lbs. Shipments East overland in Septemher aggregated 2,961,150 lbs. The City of Panama, for New York, via Panama, carried hence 439,583 lbs. The market is strong for all grades. We quote choice Northern free at 23@26c.; do. Burry and Seedy, 18@21c.; San Joaquin free, 16@18c.; do. Burry and Seedy, 13@15c.; Southern Coast free, 15@17c.; do. Burry, 13@15c.

Mustard Seed.—The demand is good at 3@3½c. for White and Yellow, and 1½@1¾c. for Brown and Red. The steamer City of Panama, via Isthmus, had en route for New York 17,772 lbs. There was shipped by rail overland in September 43,200 lbs. The ship David Crockett, for New York, had 466,520 lbs.

Fruits.—The market is well supplied with Strawberries, Raspherries, Peaches, Plums, Grapes, etc. Apples are also very plentiful, and some Pears.

CUMBERLAND LODE, ARIZONA.

Capt. Hanlon, the New Superintendent of the Cumberland Mine, Reports the Ore Body as Inexhaustible!

The great Cumberland Lode, the only unbroken ledge yet spoken of in Arizona, is now creating wide-spread attention and interest throughout the world. This lode consists, so far, of the Cumberland, Martinez and Gnome Mines—all very rich and extensive in ore discoveries—but it is of the Cumberland, the greatest in development of these mines, and now re-ferred as the coming bonanza of this Coast, that we shall speak of in this issue. Everything is being done in preparation to receive the 10-stamp mill, which it is expected will be on the ground next month, for the pur-pose of crushing and reducing to bullion the vast quantities of marvelous-ly rich ore reported in sight by Capt. Hanlon. He also says that the ore-body is inexhaustible. This fully confirms the previously expressed opin-ion of the former Superintendent, Robt. Collins, of Australia, (now Assist-ant Superintendent), and therefore has tremendous weight with the stock-holders, who have had, in the past, only a faint idea of the immense value of their property. The men at the mine are actively engaged erecting buildings, preparing for the 10-stamp mill spoken of above. At the mill-site, the living water now discovered under the bed of Martinez Creek consists of four feet, and increases in depth as sinking progresses. This is a large quantity of water for Arizona, and fortunately less than two miles distant. With a great ore-body, abundance of wood and water, and light working expenses, the Cumberland Mine is rapidly attaining posi-tion as a dividend-dishursing proposition.

The appointment of Capt. Hanlon as superintendent has given the mine great strength, and will prove of incalculable value to the company. His strict discipline and economy, added to his well-known honesty and integrity while under Collector Shannon in the U. S. Custom House De-partment of this city, gives the unquestionable stamp of truth to his statements regarding this wonderfully rich property.

The President and officers of the Company deserve much praise for the manner in which everything has been conducted to date. A mine brought to a dividend paying condition without a single assessment, is really a marvel of management in enterprises on this side of the Rocky Moun-tains.

In a few weeks several sacks of specimen ore from shafts No. 1 and No. 2 will be placed on exhibition at the company's office, 417 California street. In the meantime, all information regarding the mine will he fur-nished willingly hy the President.

COLORADO.

Robert E. Lee Mine.—The ore now produced hy this mine is re-markable for its richness. The Leadville Reveille of the 3d. inst. says of this mine, which is on Bryer Hill:

"In ten days, the Robert E. Lee mine has delivered to the sampling works of Eddy & James separate and distinct lots, which have been paid for at assay value as follows:

1,412	ounces per ton.	2,958	ounces per ton.
1,516	" " "	2,825	" " "
2,878	" " "	5,405	" " "
882	" " "	10,306	" " "
520	" " "	3,014	" " "
708	" " "	767	" " "
1,098	" " "

"These lots, as above given, represent a value of one hundred thousand dollars delivered in ten days, but there are also lots of lower grade (none of them being under one hundred ounces to the ton) received during the same period, aggregating twenty-five thousand dollars, or a total of one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars. One-half of this mine was sold on the fifth day of August last, for a less sum than its output for the ten days specified. The ore carries 87 per cent. of silver and 13 per cent. of sulphur. It has the appearance of metallic lead, and can be readily cut with a knife. The owners of the property are very reticent in giving information, and scarcely any one can gain admission to the mine; but the above facts are entirely reliable."

THE LITTLE PITTSBURG.—We are in receipt of the following official letter from this mine under date of September 28th:

"In breast of No. 2 drift, west, we have four feet solid galena and four feet sand carbonate ore, which averages three hundred and fifty ounces silver and sixty per cent. lead to the ton. In breast of drift south from shaft No. 4, we have ten feet of similar ore. Have struck iron ore in drives shaft; indications good. Engine in place at discovery shaft; will have pump working Monday. Remitted from this week's product over $75,000."

This company was paid hy Grant's smelting establishment $221,000 for ore delivered in September.

Mrs. Lewis' fashionable parlors, Thurlow Block, Sutter and Kearny streets, have been thronged the past ten days with the most elegant lead-ers of society, to compare notes and inspect the magnificent dresses pre-pared for the grand Crocker reception offered to General Grant. Not less than eight of the most dazzling toilets at this grand gathering were the product of her matchless taste and skill. Her cutter and fitter are well known to stand at the head of the profession on this coast, and her work excites enthusiasm wherever seen. The Crocker evening was one of Mrs. Lewis' grandest triumphs.

Oriental Consolidated.—The Oriental has made a shipment of bul-lion amounting to $2,323.54, the results of fifteen days' run with their new ten-stamp mill, and will henceforth make regular shipments. The stock-holders may congratulate themselves on the charge of management to Messrs. Milroy, Warren and Benham, who are using their best endeavors to promote its interests and make the Oriental a dividend paying mine.

A Sine Qua Non.—Patient: "Do you mean to say my complaint is dangerous one?" Doctor: "A very dangerous one, my dear friend. Still, people have been known to recover from it; so you must not give up all hope. But recollect one thing: your only chance is to keep in a cheer-ful frame of mind, and avoid anything like depression of spirits."—Punch.

THE NEW TOWN OF SMITHVILLE.

An interesting article under this caption is, unfortunately, too long for our columns, and we condense the facts: Smithvillo is in the Cherry Creek Mining District, about thirty miles southeast from Prescott, Ari-zona, and near the main road to Camp Verde. Quartz veins, containing gold and silver, were discovered and worked by the soldiers encamped in this neighborhood, about five years ago; and when the military were withdrawn, Mr. John J. Gosper took up the matter and located many claims for himself and others, among them Mr. A. M. Smith, formerly of the Chicago, R. I., and Pacific R. R. Mr. Smith interested five other men of means in Chicago, and a syndicate was formed for working the mines. In July last the Syndicate shipped a complete 10-stamp gold-quartz mill, with all appurtenances, including Tullack's self-feeders, Blake ore-crusher and blacksmith outfit, assay office, sawmill attach-ment, etc. The sawmill, besides furnishing lumber for the Company's use, will he a source of revenue; the country abounding in timber. The work of excavating, laying foundations, etc., is now actively going on, and the sawmill is already at work; and ore-crushing, it is thought, will he begun within sixty days. The item of expense is worth noting. The ten-stamp mill complete on the track, in Chicago, cost $5,200; freight to Moricassa, 180 miles from Yuma, $2,800; freight thence, by wagon, to place of erection, $1,700. The weight of the whole was 60,000 pounds, and three cars were required to transport. To put the mill in running order will take $5,000 more. The Syndicate own three promising gold-bearing lodes in close proximity to their mill, the best being situated in the side of a mountain, so that the vein can be worked by running a tun-nel directly in to strike it at 300 feet below the surface. It is proposed to organize new companies as the developments of the many most promising veins seem to warrant the undertaking. So steadily do the ores hold out as far as can be seen, that there is every prospect they will last for very many years with continuous working.

The Terrace Baths, Alameda, grow in popularity with every week. Ample as the accommodations are, the patronage of this superb establish-ment increases so rapidly and so steadily that, on Sundays especially, even that vast sheet of water seems to be crowded. One of the elements of this success is undoubtedly the milder climate with the sunny exposure, which makes the water more genial; but the main cause is the vigilance of the proprietors for the comfort of their visitors. Cleanliness is the first condition for a bathing place; and this is secured at whatever cost of time and trouble. The water is constantly changed, and is always pure; and every bathing suit, as soon as used, is carefully washed before it is delivered to another customer. This is the inflexible rule of the estab-lishment, and the tens of thousands who visit the place on Sunday testify to their appreciation of the fact.

Herrmann has issued for the autumn and winter a special edition of his Illustrated Catalogue, a marvel of art and a repertory of facts relating to man's chief distinction—the covering of his head. Every form and style of head-piece affected hy civilized man is here portrayed as in a his-toric museum, and one is surprised, remembering the diatribes against the stovepipe, to see the elegant shapes and literally capital finish of that well-abused ornament. Herrmann takes his profession seriously. He is a hatter, and he will he nothing less than the best of hatters; and his catalogue is clearly ahead of all attempts in this line, on this side of the Atlantic at least. No man can wear a hat before studying this work.

The only satisfactory anthracite coal for parlor and grate use is the Red Ash, which burns very clear, with a warm, deep glow, and burns away to ashes, leaving no clinker or lumps. It is the most economical of all coal, even at a high price, for it lasts much longer than any kind of bituminous coal, even the Cannel. J. Macdonough, 25 Market street, has a large stock of this, the first imported for the past twenty years. His supply of all other coals is the largest in the city, and he has constantly on hand the best Scotch Splint, West Hartley, and other favorite kinds.

Brown's Patent Gun Cleaner is recommended hy sportsmen and military men as an indispensable part of a gunner's outfit. It is the affair of a minute to clean a breech-loading arm with this apparatus, which is nickel-plated, compact, cheap, and always ready for use. Among those who certify to its superiority, we find the name of the lamented Major Thornhurgh, so long the crack shot of the U. S. Army.

Cunningham, Curtiss & Welch, the well known manufacturers of stationery and blank hooks, 327-331 Sansome street, keep themselves in the very front rauk by energy and enterprise. Their establishment is connected with the Edison telephone, so that orders can he sent to them with perfect ease from any quarter, and their printing and manufacturing departments present a scene of extraordinary activity.

THE FIGHT FOR LIFE.

Shall we Drive Slow Poison from our Breakfast Table? More about the Adulteration of Baking Powders. The Subject Discussed before the American Social Science Association at Saratoga.

A nuisance that troubled Europe fifty years ago is beginning to attract attention here—that is, putting alum in the bread we eat. The bread must be "light" that it may be digested; that is, it must be filled by the well-known cells we are accustomed to see in it. Bicarbonate of soda and cream of tartar, or tartaric acid, are the usual constituents of a good baking powder. Cream of tartar sells at from sixty cents to eighty-five cents a pound. This high price has led "cheap baking powders" to be made of alum, as a substitute for some or all of the cream of tartar. Alum will make bread look whiter, so that bakers can make an inferior flour salable as bread by its use; and they use it, in some places calling it "rock," so that no inadvertent expression may let "outsiders" know that alum is used. Alum is an injurious article to the human constitution in large quantities, or in small quantities often repeated. It is the small quantities, taken every meal, that do the mischief in bread. Alum is cheap—three cents a pound—to the pocket, but it takes what is so saved out of the stomach, and takes it with fearful interest. Alum is an astringent, and is used by dyers and others as such. Taken frequently on the human stomach, it produces heartburn, indigestion, griping, constipation, dyspepsia, and kindred troubles resulting from irritation of the mucous membrane, produced by the astringent properties of alum. All these are nice things to be inflicted by the bread eaten morning, noon and evening. To young children, growing girls, persons of weakly frame and sedentary occupations, this alum bread is poison most especially. If the reader wants to know something of alum let him suck a lump of it, notice its effect upon the mouth, which is something like that of an unripe persimmon; then let him reflect how it acts upon the tender, delicate coats of the stomach. Dr. Henry A. Mott, the celebrated analytical chemist, analyzed twenty-three of the baking powders most in use, and found alum in all but one. It is time we took measures to stop this bread poisoning that kills our little ones and perpetuates dyspepsia and cholera. Dr. Mott, in his review of the subject in The Scientific American, makes special mention of having analyzed the Royal Baking Powder, and found it composed of wholesome materials. He also advises the public to avoid purchasing baking powders as sold loose or in bulk, as he found by analyses of many samples that the worst adulterations are practiced in this form. The label and trade mark of a well known and responsible manufacturer, he adds, is the best protection the public can have. Prof. Angell, in his paper recently read before the Social Science Association at Saratoga, said that much timely alarm is felt on account of the gross adulteration of Baking Powders; that eminent physicians have been consulted, and that it appears that more than 500 alum Baking Powders are manufactured in America; that the price of alum is less than three cents a pound, while cream of tartar costs more than thirty cents; that the makers of these powders substitute alum for cream of tartar in part or altogether, and the result is the numerous disorders of the human system.—New York Tribune.

MORAL DIETETICS.

Dr. Bock, of Leipsic, writes as follows on the moral effect of different articles of food and drink: "The nervousness and peevishness of our times are chiefly attributable to tea and coffee; the digestive organs of confirmed coffee drinkers are in a state of chronic derangement, which reacts on the brain, producing fretful and lachrymose moods. Fine ladies addicted to strong coffee have a characteristic temperament, which I might describe as a mania for acting the persecuted saint. Chocolate is neutral in its physic effects, and is really the most harmless of our fashionable drinks. The snappish, petulant humor of the Chinese can certainly be ascribed to their immoderate fondness for tea. Beer is brutalizing, wine impassions, whisky infuriates, but eventually unmans. Alcoholic drinks, combined with a flesh and fat diet, totally subjugate the moral man, unless their influence be counteracted with violent exercise. But with sedentary habits they produce those unhappy flesh sponges which may be studied in metropolitan bachelor halls, but better yet in wealthy convents. The soul that may still linger in a fat Austrian abbot is functional to his body only as salt is to pork—in preventing imminent putrefaction."

SUMMER AND WINTER.

Just a bouquet of roses, faint pink and deep red;
Just a note from him, saying you guess what it said;
Just a heart for her keeping, a crown for her life;
Just a girl whose sweet eyes read through tears the word "wife."

Just a handful of rose-leaves, brown, scentless and dead;
Just a few faded sheets tied with pale silken thread;
Just a memory left her, a thorn in her breast;
Just a woman who's waiting—just waiting for rest.

TEAS.--INTERESTING INFORMATION FOR TEA-DRINKERS.

Since your analyst has been instructed to turn his attention to the ulteration of Teas supplied to the citizens of this city, nnd while investigations are progressing, it may be worth while to offer some interest- information concerning Teas, their growth, manufncture and adultera- ns. The following, then, has been carefully condensed from such orig- and authentic sources as the travels of the late Mr. Fortune, Sir rd. von Mueller, Government Botanist of Victoria, Mr. Watts, Péligot, ulder and Zoller, in "Liebig's Annalen": The Tea shrub belongs to a tural family which includes the camelias and myrtles, indigenous in ina, Jnpan, India, Southern Himalayas and Western Africa, and will urish in all latitudes from the equator to 40 degrees on either side. nsequently, there must be many localities in California, between Los geles and the Oregon Border, well suited to the plant, nnd fit to nbsorb ite a lot of "Chinese cheap labor." Sir Ferd. von Mueller is urging cultivation of it on the Australians, where lnbor is much dearer than this State. The districts of China which supply the greater portion of Teas exported to Europe and America, lie between the 25th nnd 31st ees of north latitude, nnd the best districts are those between 27 and degrees (Fortune). The plants are raised from seed, kept over winter moist earth nnd planted in March, three or four feet npart, and look e a garden of gooseberry hushes, and they bear from the fourth to the ifth year, both inclusive. The leaves are plucked by hand, chiefly by men; and the season is from earliest spring to the end of June. The t gathering is the best, afterward the leaves become tougher. The de of drying and roasting the leaves generally, and the specific pro- ses, by which the green and hlack teas are severally prepared, have n minutely described hy Mr. Fortune, nnd from his description, some- at condensed, we learn: First, Tbat, in the process of drying, the leaves roasted, in such a way as necessarily to bring about many chemical anges within the substance of the leaves themselves, producing the ied finvors, odors and tastes, which distinguish the different teas. Sec- dly, That the mode of handling, by which tbe leaves are converted re- ctively into green and black teas, is the cause of the different colors of se two main varieties. Thus, for Green Teas.—1. The leaves are roasted almost immediately after tbey gathered. 2. They are dried off quickly after the rolling process. e whole operation is speedy and simple.

Black Teas.—1. They are spread out for some time after tbey are hered, in the air. 2. They are tben further tossed about, till they be- ne soft and flacid. 3. They are now roasted for a few minutes and ed; after which tbey nre exposed to the air for a few hours in a soft moist state. 4. Lastly, they are dried slowly over charcoal fires. It y lengthened exposure to the air, therefore, in the process of drying, ompanied by, perhaps, a slight heating nnd fermentation, that the k color and distinguishing flavor are imparted to black teas of com- rce. The produce of different districts varies in quality and flavor h the climate, the soil and the variety of the plant cultivated, as well with the period at which the leaves are gathered and with the mode of ing them. It may be fresh information for our readers to be told that ugh tea is used only as an infusion, it has been long known that the nt leaves contain the elements of one of the most nutritive of vegeta- substances; and only not used on account of the almost universal ghness of the leaves of the China teas supplied to foreign countries. ut this toughness does not obtain in the case of Japanese tea, whose es may be advantageously eaten either with salt or sugar.

Adulteration of Teas.—For imparting a nice, uniform color, or skin, reen teas, the Chinese use a mixture of Prussian blue and plaster of is (sulphate of lime), the quantity varying slightly with the amount olor required. This they do to please the purchasers, but never use red tea themselves. How far this small quantity may prejndice th is not quite clear, but there is less douht about the peruicious lities of an adulterated tea largely manufactured by the Chinese, un- the name of Lie tea. This consists of the sweepings and dust of the warehouses, cemented together with rice-water and then rolled into ns. It is made either hlack to imitate caper, or green to resemble powder, and is manufactured professedly for the purpose of adulterat- the better sorts of tea. The cleverness exhibited in the manu- ure of the different kinds of lie-tea is something really surpris- nnd so close is the imitation in many cases that much tice and skill are required for its detection. Our investigations herto disclose the fact that the better kinds of lie-tea consist of the of the tea only, mnde up into little masses, or of this dust mixed h that of foreign leaves; but the great hulk of the lie-tea met with is pounded of tea-dust, with sometimes the dust of leaves other tban tea, large quantities of mineral matter, of which silex and magnetic oxide of form a considerable proportion, the masses or pellets being colored the substances nlready mentioned, and some others. That some idea be formed of tbe extent to which ndulteration hy this means is going on 1874 Dr. Hassall reported on 16 samples, which, with one excep- ranged from 6.68 to 48.46 per cent. of lie-tea. This same lie-tea, and simple as such, has been imported into Great Britain in enor- s quantities for adulteration. So notorious had the adulteration of teas me, in 1876, that Mr. Keene, head of the distillntion department of ish Customs, was taken from his usual duties of examining wines and ts, and all his ability and experience devoted to the adulteration of Ere long the public shall know how the adulteration of tea is car- on in this city, nnd who are the adulterators, as well as the class of le who are tbe principal sufferers.

A DEPARTMENT OF STATISTICS.

The United States Bureau of Statistics undouhtedly renders some service to the country, hut not a tithe of what it might do under hetter regulations. Political economy, which is altogether hased upon facts, is now an inexact science, because there are always facts wanting to work upon. Our present bureau is almost, if not altogether, commercial. Now, that is not enough. To he of any use it should comprehend all things. What we mean hy this is, not only commerce, hut inland and marine transportation—the production and consumption of every State; the average numher of employed and unemployed lahorers, and the average numher of days employed; the average of wages in the different hranches; the supply and demand of lahor; the numher of machines and the horse-power used, together with their influence upon lahor; the numher and tonnage of shipping, and such other facts as experience might demonstrate to he necessary. It is useless to deny the fact that machinery is playing the most important part in our civilization. We must prepare to meet that fact and acknowledge the changes it produces. For instance, if we suppose a small community to-day, giving employment to 1,000 people; anon comes your inventor with his machine that displaces thirty, forty or fifty per cent. of these people—what are we to do with them? It is idle to say they can find employment elsewhere, hecause in all other trades the same progress is manifested: more machinery and less men. Is it any wonder, under such circumstances, that the world is trouhled with communism? You must give men work or they will live without it—preying upon the hody politic, and hecome festering sores which eat out the life of a people. On the other hand, if statistics teach us that another course is necessary, we must adopt it, in order to save civilization. It cannot he expected, nor is it in human nature to be endured, that men should stand hy and see the hread taken from their mouths hy machinery. And again, if it shall he proven that there are too many machines, it hecomes the duty of statesmen to regulate them, and, if necessary, the numher of hours per day for lahor. The idea, in a few words, is this: that if we have reached such a point of progress that, with ten or eight hours per day, we can afford suhsistence to the multitude, it is our duty to do so; else we shall see, year hy year, the numher of idle ones growing, and, having naught else to do, they will plot against the commonwealth. We must also recollect that when the masses are employed they are content and happy. It has heen accepted as a truism that the world owes every man a living, hecause as he came into the world he must suhsist upon it. There is only this error in the statement: the world owes a living to those who work for it. But how ahout those who are willing hut unable to get work? That is precisely the point of our argument, and hence the ahsolute necessity of a Department of Statistics. Therehy all these things can he ascertained to a mathematical nicety, and all douhts and fears dissolved. It is the part of wisdom to forestall such matters, and that is our object in this article. Such a Department properly managed can take political economy out of the realm of dubiety and make it exact. It can form the hasis for all future legislation, not only in Congress but in the States. It will harmonize all things, hecause they will be hased upon certainties. And, moreover, it is unmanly, it is unstatesmanlike to shirk impending issues. A danger is half provided for hy meeting it face to face. There is no country on earth so capahle of dealing with this vast suhject as the United States, nor is there any body so capahle as the Congress of the United States to solve the problem. In order to legislate honestly and knowingly we must have facts and figures to work upon, and hence we conclude hy urging upon our Senators and Representatives the necessity of advocating the estahlishment of a Department of Statistics.

SALISBURY'S "UNUSUAL" LANGUAGE.

It is reported that the Russian Government is highly incensed at the speech recently made by Lord Salishury at Manchester, and that the Russian press—which is, of course, the same thing as the Government—thinks it "unusual for a Foreign Minister to speak thus of a friendly nation." It may he unusual, hut in dealing with Russia, England seems to have grown weary of using the diplomatic cant in which her opponent delights, and to have adopted a very plain manner of saying what she means. For it must he remembered that it is the English people, and not Lord Salishury as an individual, that spoke through the mouth of the Foreign Minister at Manchester, and that will shortly speak again through the mouth of the Prime Minister at Guildhall. For this latter speech Russia is said to he waiting with great anxiety, even to the extent of threatening to withdraw her Amhassador at the Court of St. James if it is unsatisfactory. But it is not to he supposed that this threat will have the slightest effect in changing the tenor of Lord Beaconsfield's utterances, and it is highly probahle that those utterances will also be regarded as "unusual" hy the "friendly nation" at whom they are directed. The fact of the matter is that the Asiatic question, so far as Russia and England are concerned, can no longer he kept quiet, much less settled, hy empty phrases and vain promises. The conquered dominions of the two powers are no longer separated hy neutral and independent states, but practically touch each other. Any farther advance from either side must necessarily appear an aggressive encroachment. The time has come, therefore, when one of two things must be done. Either England and Russia must once for all come to a mutual understanding, make a treaty and rigidly adhere to its terms, or they must fight it out and settle their respective claims by force of arms. It looks as if England was willing to adopt either alternative; hut this the whole world may swear to—if she cannot protect her interests with peace she will by war, and that is why she is using language so plain that it is "unusual."

Married.—In this city, Octoher 22d, George H. Hudson to Florence S. Mitchell, of Portlaud, Maine.

AFTER.

After the shower, the tranquil sun; After the knell, the wedding hells;
After the snow, the emerald leaves; After the bud the radiant rose;
Silver stars when the day is done; Joyful greetings from sad farewells;
After tbe barvest, golden sheaves. After our weeping, sweet repose.

After the clouds, the violet sky; After the hurden, the hlissful meed;
After the tempest, the lull of waves; After the flight, the downy nest;
Quiet woods when the winds go hy; After the furrow, the waking seed;
After the hattle, peaceful graves. After the shadowy river—rest!

A TOAST THAT WAS NOT DRUNK.

The two Boards of Education, the old and the new, had a banqnet on Thursday night at the Maison Dorée, necessarily under the presidency of John W. Taylor, memher of tbe present Board, Chairman of Committee on Supplies, friend of most great people, and Superintendent of Schools elect, with a peculiar gift for investigating in the wrong direction. There was much hilarity at this meeting of the men charged with the care of our school children, and satisfaction was expressed hy some that Horticultural Hall was not very far away. Each great man scratched his neighhor's hack, and mutual compliments were interchanged. Mr. Taylor gave a pleasing reminiscence of his first meeting with Ed. Everett, and how the great inventor of Washington had patted him, the hudding Taylor, on the head. "This very head, gentlemen, which I now wear."

Director Leggett proposed the health of the great rememberer, and smiles were on every face. Mr. Taylor was so happy that he forgot to tell the company ahout his connection with the Moore perjury, and did not drink to his own health as the champion coupé-sender. It is a pity, for he missed an extra glass of wine; hut he can take it after reading the following extract from Moore's testimony:

QUESTION.—What kind of a vehicle did you go off in?

ANSWER.—A one-horse coupé. * * * *

QUESTION.—Do you know how it happened to be sent up there to you?

ANSWER.—The man who came to me told me that Mr. Taylor had directed him to come up there. * * * *

QUESTION.—Then you didn't know it was coming?

ANSWER.—Yes, sir; I knew it was coming, for I was informed it was coming. * * *

QUESTION.—Who told you they would send a coupé up there?

ANSWER.—Mr. Taylor. * * * *

QUESTION.—Mr. Taylor, in the afternoon, told you a coupé would come, and yet you didn't tell Mr. Taylor anything ahout going away?

ANSWER.—I told Mr. Taylor I was going away, hut not to Texas. I didn't tell him where I was going.

There could be no hetter Superintendent of Schools than this Mr. Taylor, who has anonymous letters when he wants to get rid of teachers; who says in puhlic that he knows of corruption, but will not give names; who runs away from Ewald; who helps off men accused of grave misconduct and of crime.

Death of G. S. Johnson.—This gentleman, widely known throughout the Pacific Coast, died suddenly, on Tuesday last. He had been suffering for some months from fatty degeneration of the heart and great blood-vessels. Dr. Stallard, his medical attendant, had informed his friends of the danger of sudden death, and had warned Mr. Johnson against violent and sudden movements. On the evening of his decease he had been playing with his child, and felt a painful strain, which was the probable cause of his decease. Mr. Johnson was a native of Stockholm, and had been a resident of our State since 1850, and one of our earliest hotel-proprietors. He began business in the old Oriental, and was connected successively with the Lick House, the Occidental and the Grand, of which he became part owner in 1870. He was in his sixty-third year, and leaves a widow and one child. The funeral services were performed on Wednesday, under the auspices of the Masonic Fraternity, and were attended by a host of friends, genuine mourners for the loss of a good man.

Mr. C. S. Read, M. P., and Mr. A. Pell, M. P., the Commissioners sent to North America to inquire into the agricultural resources of the United States and Canada, reached Winnipeg, the capital of the Canadian prairie province, on Tuesday last. After visiting the Northwest, they intend to proceed to Texas, and also California, and then return to the Eastern States. They hope to be back in England by Christmas. They have made it their special business to ascertain the probable quantity of live stock and dead meat which the United States and Canada will be able to export to the United Kingdom during the next four years, and a public dinner held at Toronto one of them expressed his conviction that that trade, as far as Canada was concerned, was but in its infancy.

[The above, from a recent London paper, has been handed us by Augustus Laver, Esq., of this city, to whom it had been forwarded by a friend, Mr. Clement More, of Metfield Hall, Suffolk, England. The visit of the parliamentary Commissioners to this coast will undoubtedly prove instructive to themselves and beneficial to our people.—Ed. N. L.]

STATE MEDICAL SOCIETY.

706 Post street, San Francisco, Oct. 22, 1879.

Editor News Letter: My attention has been directed to a paragraph in your issue of Sept. 20th, concerning the opening of a course of instruction in Obstetrics, under the auspices of the State Medical Society; and I beg you to correct the statements therein made. The whole thing is a misconception, the Society not having opened such a course, and being without authority to issue certificates.

Respectfully yours, C. F. A. Nichell.

Sacramento, October 28th.—Governor Irwin and Governor-elect Perkins have jointly appointed Thomas P. Stoney, the present County Judge of Napa county; I. S. Belcher, of Marysville, and A. C. Freeman, of Sacramento, as a Commission to draft such laws and amendments to the Codes as in their judgment are necessary to make the system of Codes and Statutes conform to the requirements of the New Constitution.

Dean Stanley was not equal to his opportunities when he performed the marriage ceremony of Professor Tyndall. The Dean should have asked the groom: "Do you take this anthropoid to be your co-ordinate, to love with your nerve centers, to cherish with your whole cellular tissue until a final molecular disturbance shall dissolve its organism into its primitive atoms?"—Cincinnati Commercial.

Poets love the bluebird's twitter, Some adore the concertina,
Whistles please the naughty poy, The best and easiest thing, as yet,
Dutchmen twang the wiry zither. Is the earthern ocarina.
The ocarina's notes for me! [er ; Sweet is heer to thirsty throats,
No screech owl's voice was ever sweet- Dear is Hayes to C. A. Dana,
Now booming like sixteen-foot G, Dear to me the muffled notes
Now buzzing like the Jersey skeeter. Uttered by your vox humana.

O, my ocarina, dear! O, my ocarina, dear,
My howling, growling ocarina! My mnsty, fusty ocarina,
Music's found the whole world round, Fools applaud a well-puffed fraud,
Why not in you, my ocarina? But you're not one, my ocarina?

SKELETON SKETCHES.--No. 11.

[BY T. A. HARCOURT.]

The Miser's Story.

They all believed that I was dead and out of their way; aye, they were sure of it. My plan had been well laid and was completely successful. A very little money sufficed to buy the necessary evidence of my death from those rascally Syrian officials, and when the news reached England that old Hawke, the miser (so they called me, you know), had died of the plague while traveling on some of his usurious business in the East, everyhody, and the expectant heirs particularly, were too delighted with the glad tidings to make further inquiry. But for all that, I reached London as soon as the news.

You are at a loss to understand my conduct. Well, I will explain; but I must go back many years to do so. I once had a sister who was dearer to me than all else in the world—dearer even than money. We became orphans when we were mere cbildren, and we were left without a penny. We had relations, and our father, a widower, who had committed suicide on losing everything in a speculation, had always thought he had plenty of friends. But all these turned their backs upon the penniless little orphans, and we were sent to a charitable institution. But I had a will and a spirit of my own. At ten I could support myself by blacking boots and selling newspapers, and at fourteen I was able to make enough for the scanty support of my sister as well. I will not rehearse the steps hy which, after many years of working and saving, I rose at length to wealth and position. Suffice it to say that I accomplished this; but the struggle was a long and bitter one, and I came out of it a misanthrope and—a miser. But not towards my sister. She was still as dear to me as ever, nay, dearer; for was she not all that I had to love—except my money-hags? Perhaps even to her I was rather stern and austere; but she knew my affection for her, and returned it. True, she stood in some awe of me, and I never knew her to ask me for money; but she never wanted for anything. If she did it was because she stinted herself to give to others; but she never told me so. Still, her life was a lonely and gloouy one—I can see it now when I look back—and there came a day when she left me for another. That other was a captain in a dasbing cavalry regiment, well-born and handsome, but a spendthrift, a gambler and a roue of the worst type. It was my business to lend money to his sort, and one day, when I was absent on a long journey, not finding me at my office, he went to my house. There he saw my sister, and then it was that he conceived the idea of paying off his debts by holding as his hostage the one mortal the usurer loved. How he won the poor girl's heart with his dashing ways and smooth tongue it is not difficult to imagine. When I returned they were married. He thought to act the customary little farce of begging my forgiveness; but before he could screw up his courage to face me, I wrote to him in these words: "Send my sister back to her home, and I will send you a check for ten thousand pounds. Refuse——but I need not say that. You see I know you better than you know me."

I have positive proof tbat he did not refuse; that, on the contrary, he urged upon his wife tbe duty of returning, since her brother objected so strongly to the match. But she clung to her husband, poor, infatuated child; and even he was not quite brute enough then to drive her away. Then, in my fury, I cursed them both, and I ruined him in a month. He sold his commission, and both went to the Continent. There he went utterly to the dogs. From being a gambler, he became a cheat, then a forger, and two years later died in a Prussian prison.

Then I went in search of my sister, but reached her wretcbed lodging only just in time to obtain her forgiveness and close her eyes in death. But I brought back with me her haby-daughter, who was thence forward a living reminder of the great wrong I had done, and, if I may use the expression, a constant altar of atonement. Upon her I lavished money, affection and indulgence; there was no advantage, no care, that wealth could procure that was not hers. The old selfish idea that I had entertained toward my sister—that she should devote herself to me and make my life and hers one—I gave up completely. I was willing that Mabel should marry, but I was anxious that she should marry a man of wealth and standing. Yes, of course you smile as you think you hear the "miser" talk; but, believe me, my knowledge of the world had taught me that if a poor and unknown man sought her hand, it would he for my money and not for true love of her. Her beauty, her accomplishments, and—more than all, as I still believe—my wealth, won her many suitors, both rich and of high degree. Some I would have been glad to see her marry, but she would have none of tbem. Then, on a sudden, she fell in love with a young briefless barrister; a fellow well born, it is true, and of spotless character, so far as I could discover, but utterly penniless. He came to me and urged his suit, but, though I liked his manly ways, I laughed at him and sneeringly told him that my niece was mistress of her own heart, hut not of my coffers. He tried to withe me with scorn, but I was hardened against that, and he left in anger. Then Mabel pleaded with me. I told her the sad history of her mother, and used every argument that my experience of the selfishness of man could furnish. I might as well have talked to a graven image. I considered the affair in the still hours of the night, and I laid a plan. Mabel promised me that until I returned from a journey I was about to make into Asia, to negotiate a national loan, she would leave her love in aheyance. I kissed her good-bye, and she heard no more of me till the news of my death reached England.

When the will was read, all the relations, acquaintances and parasites who, by a vigorous stretch of the imagination could entertain the remotest hope of getting some little pickings from the dead miser's bones, were present. To tbeir infinite astonishment and joy, every one of them got ten times more than he or she had dared to hope for, and the name of my niece, Mabel, whom they had hated and feared as my sole heir, was entirely omitted. They pitied her—O, how loudly they pitied her!—hut not one of tbe heartless crew, by word or deed, strove to save the poor child from destitution. A will can be read in ten minutes, but to execute it and place in grasping palms the gold it bequeaths, may take as many months. My lawyer, old Flintly, was in my secret, and he knew how to tantalize the heirs while I was biding my time.

"Now," said I to myself, "Mabel will learn that her lover is made of common clay. This is the true way to prove that her demi-god is after all a gross mortal."

Old Flintly came to my biding-place one morning to tell me that Basil Markham had told him in confidence that he was glad that old curmudgeon Miser Hawke had not burdened Mabel with a fortune, and that as soon as the dear girl recovered from her bereavement they were to be married.

It is only necessary to add that "Miser Hawke" attended their wedding; that the check he presented them with on the marriage-day was not a small one; that his retirement from usury dates from that auspicious occasion, and that what he can refrain from spending on his dear little grand nephews and nieces, will some day become the property of their parents by virtue of a will that shall not prove to be a case of "mistaken identity on the part of those blundering Syrian officials."

CETEWAYO.

Cetewayo, who is very decently educated for a black, passes his spare time in writing poetry. His love-ballads are famous in the Zulu language, and many a dusky beauty sings them as she sits in the long grass in front of the kraal waiting for the return of her young man, who is washing his hair in somebody's blood in order to qualify for a matrimonial engagement. Cetewayo's English is dicky, but the following poem, which was found in his waistcoat pocket, or rather tied up in the corner of his table-cloth costume, and which had evidently been composed during his hurried flight from Ulundi, shows that he has a fair knowledge of the rules of rhyme:

ODE TO ENGLAND.

[Composed by Cetewayo.]

English nation, great big bully,
Send much man across the sea,
Big commanders, Chelm and Woody,
Come to make an end of me.
English want poor Zulu's cattle,
Want him corn and want him land,
So they give poor Zulu battle—
Well dat game dey understand.

At Ulundi things not rosy!
Gone him sceptre Cetty feels,
Put him thumb unto his nosey,
Show de white man two black heels.
White man say be savo de Zulu
From the grip of tyrant King,
Dat must be one dam big fool who
Could believe such stupid ting.

If dey love de blessed niggers,
Would dey mow 'em down like grass?
Facts is facts, and niggers niggers:
Cetewayo's not an ass.
White man covet neighbors' landmarks,
Much for Zulus' woe he grieves;
Where he touches, blood-red handmarks—
English nation dam big thieves!

A private telegram in cipher from a friend of mine on Garnett's staff, says that they have to black-lead Cetewayo every morning to keep up the deception. The seven-and-sixpenny tablecloth which the captive wears is distinctly remembered by Charles Orton to have disappeared from Wapping about the same time as his brother Arthur.—Dagonet, in London Referee.

GENERAL GRANT.

"I never," said an Englishman to an American, "I never knew an instance of a reformed drunkard." "Oh, don't you?" replied the Yankee; "I do, and it's General Grant"—which shows how a very small fact may be exaggerated into a very big lie. The fact is, the General, in his old free-and-easy days, did not "shirk his liquor" any more than did our own Carterets and Pitts, to say nothing of Addisons and Lambs. But I never heard that he went beyond five or six cocktails in the forenoon, and that is a trifle for an American, so scientifically do our cousins take up their drinks, and so hard-headed are they.

On his first appointment to an important command, in 1861, Grant, who has a high sense of responsibility, resolved to eschew cocktails altogether; what is more, kept his resolution, and went in for green tea instead; also for cigars in greater number and of greater strength than before. In fact, candidates for office and interviewers were wont to tremble when the General offered them a cigar, of such portentous length, thickness, and power were they. One may suspect that Grant occasionally got rid of hores this way.

On the whole, Grant may he described as about the one great gun America has turned out since Washington—Lincoln, perhaps, and certainly Longfellow excepted. He is, moreover, a truer exemplification of his country's genius than either of those eminent men. For the typical Yankee is Jack of all trades, and has proved an old proverb false hy being good at many things.

Grant, for instance, has been tanner, farmer, banker, soldier, politician, and means to end, apparently, as chairman of a canal company. Two things, however, be is not—neither writer nor speaker, which is, perhaps, the one un-American trait in his character. Among the few men who can manage to make him talk is Lord Napier of Magdala. Grant's delight with Gibraltar, of which Lord Napier is Governor, was unbounded. He liked everything and man about it, from "his Excellency" downwards, and said that no spot in the British Empire had made him understand better the secret of England's power. Ths silent warrior, one sees, can occasionally pay a stately and graceful compliment.

Grant likes us on the whole, and is reasonably proud of his Scotch origin. If the Alabama business never ended in a tragic way—which it well might have—the praise is probahly due to him. Motley, the Amsricau Minister to our Court, was all for war, and even threatened it. Grant shuhbed him fearfully, and observed to a friend: "I thought after that, Motley would have heen man enough to resign." But Motley took a different view of the case. Be had made what he fancied, to he a great name as an author, and wanted to bc chronicled as a great diplomatist in the hargain. The man's soul was absoltnely eaten up with vanity. Exempli gratia—and the anecdote is not altogether out of place, for we are dealing with men and things American—Motley's time as United States Minister in London was chiefly employed in "moving heaven and earth," as a friend of his told me, to get himself named "Amhassador." Ambassadors, as every one in society knows, rank immediately after Princes of the Blood. They alone, as the Congress of Vienna put it, have the "representative character." Ministers, or, to give them their full style, "Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary," are accorded, hy the courtesy of Englaud, precedence after Dukes. Motley was once dining at the late Lady Egerton's; so was the Duke of Norfolk. "Shall I take you to dinner?" quoth the Yankee Envoy to Lady E., who, with an imperceptihle shrug of the shoulders, replied: "If you like." How matters were squared with the Premier-Duke is a fact of not much consequence; hut it is worth remembering that tbese are the sort of men Republicans in their own country, aristocrats ahroad—with whom an American President has to deal. And Grant managed them very well. Motley he summarily recalled, when he found that gentleman would not take a hint. As to others, it may he horne in mind that the President came very fairly out of the Civil Service scandals revealed in 1876. I forget who was the principal rogue, hut he and every one after him were hursful to say the President was guiltless.

Yes, a jury would have found Grant not guilty; a jury of honor even would have acquitted him. But—well, the "but" is this. America, as we politely say, is a young country; regards politics as a game, and takes a hoyish view of tbe thing. And it seems as though some venerable Quaker had advised "the boys," and said: "Serve Uncle Jonathan well; but by all means make money out of him."

Of his ability as a captain there can be no doubt. The most characteristic utterance of his I have ever heard while he was winning his country's battles was this. Lee asked for a truce to hury his head. Grant, who had his own reasons for suspicion, refused, saying: "I don't bury mine—I haven't time." —London Truth.

[Every one to his taste; but Truth's easy going acquiescence in results is not precisely the first qualification necessary for reaching a proper estimate of Grant. Motley was vain, no doubt; but he was a man of far higher type than any of the men Grant delighted to honor, far higher than the flunkey who took his place at the English Court, far higher, as a representative of his country, than General Grant, who could so far forget all the decencies of life as to refrain himself, and to withhold Minister Pierrepont, from participating in the funeral honors paid to the dead Motley as a former Minister of the United States. Show me the man you admire, and I will show you who you are.—ED. N. L.]

CLEANLINESS IS NEXT TO GODLINESS.

"I once attended an old French lady, who for many years before her death was confined to her room. She was living near the seashore, and trying to be as cheerful as possible under very discouraging circumstances. One morning, after my usual dip in ths ssa, I called to see her. She had had her breakfast, her room put to rights, and, with open window, shs was enjoying the sea air. The clergy of the adjoining church were very auxious as to her spiritual welfare, and constant in their kind attentions. One of them, a fat, portly old gentleman, had just left. When I had sat for a few moments she sxclaimed: 'I am very glad to ses you, Doctor, you always come in like a flower—fresh and sweet and clean. You cannot imagine how, since I have been sick, I hate the smell of a priest. They never, I believe, wash themselves or change their linen—hence this odor of sanctity!'"—Memoirs of Dr. Smith, page 211.

There is some ground for the old lady's remark, hut Pius IX. set an example which she might havs remembered.

The Detroit Free Press says: "The committee on atmospheric influences announced that they wers ready with a report, and leave heing granted, the chairman submitted a well constructed report regarding the coming winter. The committee had heen guided entirely hy signs, and their reasens for predicting a hard winter were: 1. Tbe thickness of the corn-husks. 2. The unusual number of overcoats in pawn. 3. The anxiety of women to get winter honnets. 4. The way the frogs have gone down for deep water. 5. The hesitancy with which young men climh out of hed in the morning. 6. The unusual numher of dog fights to he observed hy a colored man who keeps his eyes open. The report was accepted and filed, and tbe chairman sat down with a sigh of relief."

An Hospital for Aged Animals.—An asylum for aged domesticated animals has just heen opened by an inhabitant of Gonesse. Thers are already a cow 36 years of age, a pig aged 25, and an 18-year-old goat. The senior member of this happy family is, however, a mule; he is forty years of age. Next comes a sparrow, whoss summers number 31. Twenty-eight years of life have been granted to a goldfinch; while a guinea-fowl and a goose have respectively reached the age of 12 and 37 years.

"PLEASURE'S WAND."

"We Obey no Wand but Pleasure's."—Tom Moore.

Standard Theater.—H. J. Byron is ruling the theatrical roost at this juncture. The revival of Our Boys was a success d'estime, and would have attracted attention at any other time. In some respects it was admirable, in others with a degree of carelessness that was extremely reprehensible. Mr. Owens does not develop the good actor as "Middlewick." The impersonation is comical and laughter-creating, but fails to possess the necessary local flavor. It is a stage cockney and an artificial vulgarian. Frankly speaking, I do not believe that a character can be satisfactorily delineated except by one to the manner born. There are here and there in the part bits which call for the picturing of human emotions and passions, instead of class or local peculiarities, and here Mr. Owens is the thorough actor. I have once before alluded to the outrageous gagging the star sees fit to indulge in. During the week this practice reached its climax, and became unsupportable. It is at times permissible in an actor to elaborate a sketchy character if he does it cleverly and, en rapport, with the subject, but Mr. Owens' little jokes, though amusing, interfere with the dialogue and stage business of the other actors, and are not in keeping with the tenor of the play. It is a pity to find in an actor of such prominence so little regard for the true finish and illusions of the stage. Barton Hill is a capital "Talbot Champneys." He was warmly received on Monday evening. The costume adopted by Mr. Hill is extremely inappropriate, in so far that it is anything but English in character. It is more like the Sunday rig-out of a western barber. Mr. Bassett is an excellent "Sir Geoffrey Champneys," the cold haughtiness and aristocratic bearing being well drawn. Manager Kenuedy does fairly as "Charles Middlewick," and nothing more. As the two cousins, Miss Stanhope and Miss McClellan appear to advantage. The latter is not an extraordinary actress, it is true, but she is always earnest and painstaking. At every new appearance Miss Stanhope strengthens her hold on theater-going people, and is rapidly becoming a most pronounced favorite. She is a brilliant artiste, and, it is to be hoped, will long remain in our midst. Miss Lizzie Harold seems to have become conscious of her past indifference and to have awakened to the necessity of doing something creditable. Her "Belinda" is a neat piece of acting. With the close of the Carnival, public favor will return to the theaters, of which the cosy little Standard will receive its deserved share.

Herold's Concerts.—There were more people, on last Wednesday, at the fourth concert, than at any previous one of the series. This is a most gratifying evidence of an increase in public appreciation of good music. Beethoven's C Major Symphony, No. 1, was the principal number of the programme, and was well played. Lindpainter's Faust Ouverture contains difficult accelerando passages for the string instruments, which, to the credit of the orchestra, were played in admirable time and unison. Neswadba's paraphrase on "How Fair Art Thou," is a tuneful arrangement of a popular ballad. It possesses no particular merits, but is of a style of compositions that please the general public. The gavotte, for strings, erroneously billed as being by Michaelis, is a composition of Padre Martini, a musical ecclesiastic of no little reputation. It cannot be called, in itself, original, as there are several gavottes that are very similar, but it is a neat treatment of that style of composition. The programme closed with selections from Rigoletto. These operatic selections for orchestras are terribly tedious and ineffective. As a rule, they are badly arranged, the changes of key being abrupt and inharmonious. The apportionment of the airs among the different instruments is always the same. A concert habitue always know what tune is coming, and which instrument will play it. Mr. Homeier, one of our best local violinists, has joined the orchestra, and adds considerably to the efficiency of the first violins.

German Theater.—In Miss Bertha Fiebach the German Company possess a soubrette who has all the requirements for a public favorite. She is young in years, prepossessing in appearance, fresh in voice and natural in acting. These qualities would seem to indicate perfection, but there are defects to be considered. Her singing is not always true, and she is afflicted with some strong mannerisms of gesture. As a whole she is a charming little actress, and will become a great favorite. Per contra to most German actresses, she is petite in figure, and without that embonpoint which is one of their chief characteristics. In dress, though it is hardly fair to judge by one opportunity, Miss Fiebach seems to share her countrywomen's lack of taste. The performance on Sunday evening was a most amusing one in all respects. Miss Lindermann and Messrs. Freeman, Urban and Diehl were at their best in support of the new-comer.

Baldwin Theater.—Very fair houses have been the rule at this theater during the past week—the third of The Girls. On last Sunday evening the Octoroon was produced for J. O. Barrows' benefit, with a scratch cast. The beneficiary appeared as "Salem Scudder," and played the part remarkably well. As an eccentric actor, Mr. Barrows possesses considerable talent, and the large house was a deserved one. To-morrow evening Around the World in Eighty Days will be produced for Manager Maguire's benefit. A full house will undoubtedly greet the revival of this great spectacle.

Bush Street Theater.—This theater will re-open on Monday with the Colville Folly Troupe. The opening extravaganza is entitled The Magic Slipper. It proved a success in New York, and will, no doubt, be well received here. The internal improvements have been very extensive, and will be appreciated by all. The seats are cosy and comfortable. The painting is in good taste and pleasing to the eye. Nothing has been done to improve the means of exit, and this is to be regretted. It is said that this is no fault of the management, but that it was actually impossible to procure the necessary room.

California Theater.—All present appearances indicate that the old management will make an effort to re-open the old theater. If pending negotiations with the owners reach a satisfactory conclusion, this will take place on November 17th. Frank Mayo will be the first attraction, and his first appearance will be in a new play. The most sincere wishes of all theater-going people are tendered Messrs. Barton and Hill for the success of this endeavor.

Tivoli.—Gilbert and Sullivan's comic opera, The Sorcerer, is being performed at this place of amusement. It is a very creditable performance, and will be reviewed in our next issue.

THE AUTHORS' CARNIVAL.

Dear News Letter: Everybody goes to the Carnival, comes home, and goes again. And not one in ten who have been there can tell you what he has seen. Take my case: I have not missed an evening, and, while at the Pavilion, not an opportunity to see something or other, and still my mind is barren of any recollections of tableaux or anything else. After several determined efforts, I succeeded on one evening in getting in the front row of the crowd as the procession was passing.

It would have been a beautiful sight if there had been room for a graceful deployment, but, as the participants struggled past in Indian file, the effect was wholly spoiled. Besides that, my personal enjoyment was marred by the antics of a brace of idiots, one in a booth and the other in the crowd, who kept up a running fire of commentaries on the passing characters. These fellows were trying hard to be funny, but it was mostly insulting vulgarity. Fortunately for them, no one thought it worth while to give them their deserved chastisement. With the experience gained at this Carnival, a future one can be made still more attractive. The amount of labor and perseverance that has been expended upon the performers of the individual booths is something marvelous, and it is lost except to the tenacious few who take a front position early in the fight and remain there—the interior of the booths is not visible. The middle of the building is filled with throngs of people, wandering listlessly and purposelessly to and fro. The drawing back of some curtain rouses them from their seeming apathy, and a rush is made for the outskirts of the crowd in front of the particular booth. After being rewarded with an opportunity to scrutinize closely the coiffures of males and females, the hopeless perigrinations are resumed. But, with all this, there has been any quantity of fun. The costumes are all exquisite, and the women arrayed in them do all look so ravishing that even the most determined of ancharites would lose his senses.

But the men! It would be in keeping with the objects of the Carnival—charity—to pass over this subject, but a strict regard for truth and a proper punishment for conceit and arrogance is necessary and must be attended to. In the whole lot there is hardly a baker's dozen who do not excite a smile. From the head down to the knees, the body seems to feel the dignity and responsibility of the character assumed, but from the knees down—Heaven save the mark!—there is a lack of consistency. These manly (!) limbs seem to be conscious of their lack of grace and beauty, and appear as if trying to twist themselves out of sight. Unless long years of concealment, or rather imprisonment, have made the legs of the present generation unable to stand the light of day, the pictures we see of ancient cavaliers are gross exaggerations of form and grace. For your own sake, gentlemen, don't wear knee-breeches again without consulting unprejudiced friends. As it is now, you are likened unto 50 cent supes without the emoluments.

The southeastern corner of the building has been the most attractive region. The booths there have the handsomest costumes, and their tableaux are the most artistic. Crowds remain during the whole evening in front of these booths, gazing at the magnificent interior decorations of Aladdin's Palace, viewing the tastefully-set Goethe and Schiller tableaux, and absorbing the sensuous beauty of Cleopatra and her attendants. This Egyptian booth is the most attractive one for me I confess. The costumes are so rich, so gorgeous and so ingeniously designed to make the wearers more attractive. Cleopatra was a wily woman, and kept her lovers enslaved by a thousand artifices. She well knew the attraction, the play of imagination created by a half concealment and half disclosure of her glorious charms. Here are gathered apt disciples. I was particularly smitten with a piquant brunette—but never mind. I would like to know where all these slim young girls get their robust arms from. Have you not noticed that?

In the Alhambra booth reigns a pair of arms that are simply perfect; they are of a finer mold than any sculptor's ideal, and have the advantage of life and warmth. But I am getting my foot into it. If I am going to describe the beauties, or commence to particularize, I have a nice day's work before me, and will, besides, make an enemy of every woman left unmentioned. Up-stairs the Italians are drawing crowds. The Shakespearean theater is a perfect jam nightly. There has been here some remarkable dramatic talent displayed. I have seen a delicious "Juliet," full of girlish passion; a manly "Henry V.," with an arch "Katherine;" wonderfully alike-looking "Antipholes," attended by remarkably clever "Dromios;" a beautiful "Imogene," a handsome "Jachomo," and ever so many more excellent characters. This portion of the Carnival is so complete as to require close attention, and I would suggest a repetition of these different scenes at one of our theaters. Did you see Byrou; that is, his prototype—a truly wonderful likeness. I am told that the Dickens people have been doing some remarkably clever work. It has been almost impossible to get near their place, so I don't know anything about it.

There is lots more I could tell you about, but time presses. I don't think sufficient credit is being given to those who deserve it—the artists, Tavernier, Rix, Godard, Moretti, Trezzini, Seahury, Porter and Joe Strong. They have all tried their best. The admirable interior decorations of the Funny Infants' Nursery are by friend Joe. And then, for the tableaux every one must be thankful to Max Freeman. His groupings are all artistic and natural.

To-night is the last opportunity to visit this scene of splendor, so all of you readers take an early dinner and wend your way to the Pavilion. M.

Chit-Chat.—Scott-Siddons arrived in New York October 14th.——Bodenstedt, a celebrated German translator of Shakespeare, is on his way to this country.——The Boucicault troupe is slowly breaking up.——Johann Becker, the leader of the well-known "Florentiner Quartette," is to take the place of Vieuxtemps as head of the violin class at the Brussels Conservatory. Von Bulow is to become chief professor of piano at the same place.——The new Brooklyn Theater is not pretty.——The best theatrical orchestra in New York is the one at Haverly's.——People are objecting against the practice of perfuming theaters. It ladens the air with a suffocating, stifling pressure, and serves no purpose.——Florence is anxious to do the Mighty Dollar in London. I hope he will not do so. It is all very well to laugh at the play here, but it is nevertheless a slander upon American Congressmen and a burlesque of American institutions. Abroad, where the exaggeration would not be understood, it would do us harm.——Shiels, the proprietor of the Standard and Bush Street Theater buildings, is erecting a large hall on O'Farrell street.——Kellogg will probably sing "Aida" at the Paris Grand Opera.——Petrovich, Strakosch's new tenor, is 29 years old, of pale complexion, with black eyes and moustache, and a very slight knowledge of the English language.

SPORTING ITEMS.

Shooting.—Crittenden Robinson won the Chronicle Cup at Folsom, last Sunday, missing only one bird out of 25, Gerber missing 4, two of which were easy birds, which is a very singular misfortune to happen to so steady and reliable a shot as Gerber. Following is the full score: Robinson 11111, 11111, 11111, 11011, 11111 24. Gerber 11111, 11111, 11111, 11100, 10101—21. Gerber's nineteenth bird died just out of bounds. Frank Cooms, of Napa, acted as referee, and presented the cup to Robinson, who regretted that he had not time to spare to defend it at Folsom, but would meet any one who came to San Francisco.——Already twelve entries are registered for the Santa Rosa tournament.——The Union Guard won the C. A. trophy at McMahon Station. Following is the score: Union Guard, 488; National Guard, 478; Sumner Light Guard, 469; Germania Guard, 440; Oakland Light Cavalry, 438; Oakland Guard, 433.——The regimental trophy was won by the First Infantry. Score, 797. Oakland Cavalry score, 768; ten men, each at 200 and 500 yards.——Colonel Kelly carried off the Pacific Life Cup; score, 24 out of 25.——The Cavalry Trophy was won by the Oakland Light Cavalry; score, 229 out of a possible 300.——Ducks are getting plentiful in Cordelia Slough and surrounding creeks.——Birds of all kinds are scarce at Sherman Island.——At Walnut Creek ducks and geese are very plentiful.

Baseball.—It is much to be regretted that the National game in San Francisco should have fallen into the hands of speculators, who care nothing for sport except as a means of making money. Nick Roberts, manager of the Cincinnatis, issued a challenge to the Chicagos to play a series of games for $1,000 a side and the entire gate receipts. The same issue of the paper that contained the challenge also contained an item accepting the challenge, and fixing the first game for Saturday at the Recreation Grounds. This looks as if these Eastern sharps, emboldened by their success, thought there was no limit to the gullability of our sporting public; but we hope that our citizens will stay away from these games, and thereby administer a much needed rebuke. We would particularly advise our readers not to place any money on the result of these games. A hint to the wise, etc.——The game last Sunday between the Cincinnatis and Chicagos was a poor affair, the general feeling on the grounds being that either the Cincinnatis sold the game or are nothing but an ordinary club of very slight ability. Chicago won; score, 10 to 4.——The game between the Knicks and Omahas at Oakland, last Sunday, was won by the former; score, 10 to 3.——Jack Sweeney, the popular catcher for the Mutuals, takes a benefit at the Oakland Grounds today.

Coursing.—To-night the Pioneer Coursing Club and the Pacific Coast Coursing Club will draw the dogs and elect judges and slippers.——The meeting of the Pioneer Club at Merced, November 5th, is an assured success if the weather is fine. They have plenty of dogs of good pedigree and known speed. Their members are all gentlemen in good standing, whose presence is sufficient guarantee that the meeting will be honorably conducted. So far as can be judged from loose talk, Mr. Tidmarsh will be the club's choice for judge. He is recognized as an honest, capable man.——Can nothing be done to induce the Pacific Club to postpone their meeting? As a matter of fact, the ground round Modesto would be in better condition for coursing after the rain, but, so far as we can see, nothing will be allowed to interfere with the meeting at Modesto, Nov. 5.——Bulldozer will run with the Pioneer Club.——The new club are trying to run ten dogs against ten from the old club.——The Livermore Club meet November 25th.

Archery.—The Bow Club has challenged the Pacific Archery to a match at the single or double American round, four or five men, to be shot Saturday, November 8th. We understaud that the Pacifics will accept if the match will be shot at their range in Gate's Gardeu.——There will be a turkey shoot for archers at Joe Dieves', San Leandro Road, on Thanksgiving Day; the birds to be put up at thirty yards, a hit to claim the bird.——Adam Gray scored 478, shooting the American round, at the Ohio State Tournament, held at Cincinnati.——Our archers wonder how it is that they shoot so much better at the Pavilion range than they can in the open air. They forget the wind; besides, the walls and roof serve as a guide.

Rowing.—Courtney declines Hanlan's offer to row a P. P. race for $6,000. Soule refuses to allow Blakie to act as referee for the prize, and there is a good prospect of the affair ending in smoke.——Hanlan will not relinquish his claim on the Sportsman's Cup and championship. He is open to row the winner of the Boyd-Elliot match.——As Trickett and Hanlan connot agree about a place to row, we suggest that they choose San Francisco. It is about an equal distance for each man to go, and the water is all that could be desired.——The English sporting papers claim that the result of the Hanlan-Courtney race goes to strengthen the honor that the Hanlan-Elliott race was sold.——There is nothing doing among our local clubs.

Pedestrianism.—The daily papers were wrong in reporting that the time made hy Davis in the 100-yard race with McComh, at Los Angeles, was 9¾ seconds. The correct time was 10¼ seconds. Archie was not sick, as stated; it was Davis who failed to come to the scratch for the two final heats of the race.——A three-day walk is about to be inflicted on Redwood City.——The San José six-day walk is denounced as a fraud.——There will be a mixed race for members of the National Guard, at the Half-Mile Track, Sunday.——The walk at Humboldt Hall died of want of patronage.

Yachting.—Pinafore was a success at Saucelito, last Saturday. After the performance the fleet sailed up to Vallejo, some vessels getting in as early as 7 A.M. Sunday. The start from Vallejo was made at 11:15 P.M.; following is the time of the different yachts: Ariel, 2:37; Annie, 2:40; Chispa, 2½; O'Connor, 2:50; Nellie, 3:08; Clara, 3:11. The Chispa lost time in calm off Pinole Point, and the Annie carried away her topmast in a squall off Cape Pahlo. The majority of the yachts have gone into winquarters at Oakland Creek.

St. John's Presbyterian Church. Post street, between Mason and Taylor. Rev. Dr. Scott, Pastor, will preach Sunday morning at 11 o'clock; also at 7½ P. M. Sunday School and Bible Classes at 9½ A. M. Prayer and Praise Service at 6½ P. M.

"The World," the Flesh, and the Devil.

[By a Truthful Penman.]

The "London Express" says: For an illustration of vanitas vanitatum there is nothing like the letters of Elizabeth Patterson Bonaparte. Never was a more complete fall from the Pinnacle of saintship than that of this woman. Truly we know not what people are till we live with them, or read the records of their inner life. Mean, sordid, mercenary, vulgar—Madame Patterson was all these to the last hours of her long worldly life. When she was nearly fifty years of age she wrote to a friend: "I am weary of life, do send me a string of white topazes." A string of beads to soothe the weary heart of fifty! The record is a painful one; it has no redeeming feature. We search in vain for a trace of nobility or elevation. She was in no sense a victim. She married Jerome Bonaparte when she thought she would gain rank and status by so doiug. She would have snapped the hond if she could, when she found it no longer served her purpose. She was a beautiful piece of flesh without a soul. If she were to adopt any religion, she said, it would be the Roman Catbolic, hecause at least that was "a religion of kings." Rank and wealth were the twin gods she worsbiped. As sbe lay on her death-hed ehe played with jewels. What a pitiable picture! What a deplorable, useless, cynical life!——In January the new English stamp will appear. It will not he steel engraved, hut done hy letterpress. Good for P.O. economy and for forgers. Bad for the 200 workmen whom the old firm will he ohliged to discharge.——Mr. Mackenzie, a clergyman staying at Bournemouth, was visiting the Isle of Wight, when he fell from the cliffs at Alum Bay, a hight of 500 feet, and was dashed to pieces.——Some months ago an experiment was made in New York State to test the distance from which the electric light would illuminate a given spot, and it was found that a concentrated heam carried seven miles, furnished enough light to read hy. A more crucial test of the great penetrating power of the electric light is furnished hy the experiments of the officers of the French Algerian Triangulation Service, who a few days ago saw the electric light at the Spanish station of Zetica from a distance of more than 164 miles. This observation is proof, if proof were wanted, of the great value of the light for maritime purposes, when it is exhihited from sufficiently elevated positions.——Charming Minnie Walton, who, five years ago, hy her sweet simplicity and freshness of acting in the good part of Mary Meredith, won all hearts at the Haymarket Theater, is dead. Fred Lyster, her husband, absolutely worshiped his young Australian bride, and when she was ill in London, the anxious hushand, proud of his treasure, and fearing to lose it, took us to the bedside of his child-wife, where she lay, looking as pale and pure as a lily, with her darling little daughter-hahy asleep on her hosom. It was a picture one could never forget. And now all that beauty is moldering into silent dust, and the loving heart is still!—Court Journal.——Tbe newest scare is "death in our clothes," and we are warned against arsenic in the disguise of many tempting hues, especially red. The next idea will be "arsenic in our friends," and we shall he warned off the red haired and the ruddy complexioned.——An affectionate husband once said, "Ah, dear doctor, how is my wife to-day?" The doctor shook his head, and replied, "You must prepare for the worst." "What," said the hushand, "do you think she is likely to get over it?"——Smokers will he startled to learn that a false amher can now he produced so like the real that the most experienced eyes may he deceived. The genuine article is simply a fossil resin, and the imitators, starting from that point, have adopted as the hasis of their falsifications fresh resins, which they treat in such a manner as to give their products all the appearance and most of the qualities of the true article. The difference might he detected hy the application of heat to melt it, amber melts at 552 degrees, whereas this wonderful imitation melts at a much lower temperature. The experiment is a little risky, especially if the scientific smoker hegins with 552 degrees.——A Mrs. Trelan, of Rutland, Vermont State, dropped dead the other evening while dancing at a wedding party.——A company in Westfield, Mass., have, it is said, after much experimenting, perfected a wheel of remarkahle cutting qualities, heing composed of corundum, the next hardest substance in nature to the diamond. In a scale of twelve, rating the diamoud at twelve, corundum stands at eleven; wbile emery averages eight and a-half in hardness. The difficult problem, attempted by so many, of finding a base strong enough to hold corundum without interfering with its cutting qualities, has, it is thought, at last heen solved hy a happy combination of materials and an. ingenious use of the process of vitrification. The cost of the corundum wheel is only ahout 25 per cent. more than that of the ordinary emery wheel.——A seat in the New York stock exchange sold for $15,000 recently, $2,500 more than a seat ever hrought before.——The Russian Minister of the Interior has not a very exalted opinion of his own countrymen. A few days ago he engaged an Englishman to he steward on his estates in the Ural Mountains, and in the course of the discussion as to the terms, the latter put to him the hlunt question, "Why he preferred a foreigner to a Russian to look after his affairs?" "My answer is simple," replied M. Makoff; "a Russian who is respectable and honest is commonly a fool; a Russian who is clever and energetic is invariably a rogue; and while Russians continue to be either fools or rogues, I must follow the example of all sensible Russian capitalists and employ trustworthy men from abroad.——We are always delighted to listen to a crisp, well-delivered repartee. One doesn't often get the article in real life, hut on the stage you sometimee hear specimens which raise you to rapture. For instance: A stupid individual (in a play) saye, "I am a Justice of tbe Peace." Whereupon an inspired squire (also in the play) says, "Without a piece of Justice." The audience feel that an epigrammatist has been let loose.——Jock was out etalking a few daye ago, apparently witb something on his mind. At length he said to the gentleman-sportsman whom he was piloting; "There's an article in Vuhunitee Faar where he says he went out stalking and craaled thairty miles through a hog. Noo that's as far as from here to Ahberdeen. It's absurrd. It isn't true. There's no hog o' that length in Scotland."

EUTHANASIA.

Shadows are deepening round me as I lie
In silence drear.
Yearning for life, I could not turn and fly;
Dark death is near.

You patient clock, with voice that will not tire,
Time's record keeps.
And, on a sofa by the sinking fire,
The watcher sleeps.

O'er distant days my memory wanders back
To fields of gold,
From where, along a steep and thorny track,
Plods one grown old.

A dear face lit and lessened every mile:
Poor fancy tries
In vain to paint a brighter, franker smile,
Or sweeter eyes.

With what delight we roamed through sunny lands
When spring was new,
Bearing white blossoms in our careless hands,
Or violets blue!

How oft we watched eve's crimson lights extend
On lonely leas,
Until our soaring spirits seemed to blend
With skies and seas!

While lovers lightly stricken with the smart
Old songs extol,
Would mingle breath and being heart to heart,
We soul to soul.

O sweet eyes lying blinded in the dust,
Yet hope-ensbrined!
O light and glory of the hours now thrust
So far behind!

From weary ways—strange mists around, above—
Through death's chill foam—
I come—I come—my one—my only love,
To thee—my Home. —Japan Herald.

SAN FRANCISCO FROM A JAPAN POINT OF VIEW.

[By Asano, Special Corr. of the "Choya Shinbun."]

On the 17th July last I left Yokohama for the United States of America, and arrived at San Francisco on the 2d August. Upon landing I immediately hailed a carriage and requested the driver to convey me to the Palace Hotel, where I remained three days. This time I employed in looking around the city. The houses range from three to seven stories high, and present a pleasant appearance to the eye of a visitor. But I did not content myself with simply looking at the houses, but closely watched the custome of the people; and, among many other wonderful things, I noticed that there are many large merchants who have lived a hap-hazard and adventurous kind of life and so gained a competency, who cannot even write their own names. At the close of last winter a large merchant died who was supposed to be worth six millione of dollars. But on examination of his house brought to light a few volumes of books and a few other things, value in all about fifty dollars. This will show the ignorance of the dead merchant, who had been a wine seller for five years previous to his death; and I leave it to the judgment of my readere to say whether or not be eboudl be classed as a gentleman of a civilized country.

Carriages pass to and fro along streets at the corners of which are deposited the sweepings and refuse of the city. When the wind blows strong this ruhbish is scattered about and causes an offensive odor to arise, which is very injurious to the health of the inhabitants. On my making inquiries as to why this offensive matter was allowed to remain when it was so detrimental to health and cleanliness, I was informed that it was removed twice every month; so it will be seen that the people of San Francisco live in a putrid atmospheee. If more attention was not paid to cleanlinese in Eastern countries cholera would break out.—Japan Gazette.

Cuttings from "Punch."—Parson: "I'm very sorry to hear, Mrs. Brown, that you were present, last night, at a 'Plymouth Brethren's' tea-meeting. I have often told you that these doctrines are highly erroneous!" Mrs. Brown: "Erroneous, sir, their doctrines may be; but their cake, with Sultany raisins, is excellent."—New syetem of education. First mamma: "I see that your children paddle." Second mamma: "Yes. Don't yours?" First mamma: "No; I've managed to make my three boys believe that it is vulgar and ungentlemanly either to get their feet wet, to sit in a thorough draught, or bolt their food, or eat goodies between their meals, or go to juvenile parties, poor dears. They're rather soft, perhaps, but they're twice the size of any other boys of their age, and they've never had an hour's illness in their lives."—A considerate son: Sir Charles: "I should like of all things to see you in Parliament, Charley." Son and heir: "Well, sir, I don't mind; I believe it's a very good place; and then it's so handy to the Aquarium."

A Dangerous Pet.—A hairdreseer in the Rue Mouffetard has, or had a pet monkey. Having taken a nap in an arm-char in his shop the other evening, he was awakened by a sharp pain, and found himself with a serious gash in his throat. On looking round to discover the cause he perceived the ape gibbering in a corner, and holding a razor in his paw, the animal obviously being the malefactor. The procese of shaving under gone hy a number of people during the day had no doubt attracted the attention of the monkey, who for some reason or another best known to himself thought he would endeavor to shave his master. Imitation may be the sincerest flattery, but the barber will probahly not appreciate the force of the proverb in the present instance. He ie likely to recover, however, and his quandam pet has been killed.

HOTEL MANAGERS.

The "News Letter's" recent references to hotel life in San Francisco are causing considerable discussion, especially among those interested as proprietors, visitors or guests of our large caravansaries. It is generally conceded that the subject has not been taken in hand any too soon. Looking at the important functions those institutions fill in the social economy of this great city, it is eminently fitting that they should be amenable to fair and just criticism. They exist by the patronage of the public, and it follows as a matter of course that the public are entitled to know whether their management is, in every respect, of such a character as to entitle them to that patronage. They are used as homes by highly respectable families. It would be well if every man had a home of his own, but we have to deal with things as we find them. We find that many most worthy people make their permanent homes at our large hotels. Virtuous mothers, wives and daughters live in them. Their surroundings, therefore, ought to be entirely unexceptionable. It is being urged by apologists for evil that it is impossible to keep hotels free from objectionable inmates. It may be that there is just a little truth in the statement; if there is, then the fact is a sad commentary on hotel life. If a pure wife or virtuous daughter cannot live in a hotel without rubbing shoulders with women of shame, then they ought not to live in a hotel at all. If there is anything whatever in the apology, it follows that there is too much in it. If it is impossible to have hotels respectable, then they cannot rightly have any claim upon the patronage of respectable people. Is it impossible? That query has got to be answered by hotel proprietors. It is for them to say whether their houses are failures in the important respect to which we have alluded. We think they will not all venture upon the dangerous excuse that it is impossible to make the surroundings of a large hotel free from objection. We think that one or two of them might fairly deny that it is impossible, and point to their own success by way of proof. That it is at all times a matter of difficulty we are free to admit; that it is an impossible task to some men, we are very ready to believe; but that it is, is perhaps the best evidence that they are unfit to control a great hotel. They are the wrong men in the wrong places. We can well imagine the kind of hotel proprietor to whom the task would be an impossibility. If he is a notoriously ignorant and immoral man, he is pretty sure to surround himself with ignorant and immoral employés, and is likely to attract customers of like character. A hotel proprietor who is a conspicuous embodiment of all the infamies, is not the man best calculated to cause vice to shun his establishment. Quite the contrary, vice is very certain to push its brazen face in there, knowing full well the value of a congenial patron at the head of the house. Such a man is quite out of place. He cannot chide, if he would; he cannot rebuke, knowing his own vulnerability. Not being in a position to repel, he is pretty certain to attract. What he is, his employés are likely to be also. Like master, like man. Not being cultured or moral himself, he is not likely to engage a cultured or moral manager, with whom he could have no sympathy in common. His clerks, too, are very liable to imitate his example; indeed, it would not be astonishing to find them performing tricks, on a small scale, which they have seen him accomplish on a large. He may run a large house of shame on a Front street, while they run a smaller one on a back alley. In short, the whole atmosphere in which such a man moves is sure to be tainted. His own sort are sure to congregate around him; his aiders, abettors and participants, in a thousand infamies, are, of course, always on hand.

When a man of that character, through the accident of wealth, becomes the owner of a great hotel, he ought to have sense enough to know that the proprieties do not permit of his personally running that which he owns. As he could hardly, with propriety, be received as a guest if some body else owned the house, it follows that the mere fact of his owning it does not change the impropriety of his presence. It is said that good hotel managers are born, not made. We believe it. At any rate, if they are made, it is very certain they cannot be constructed out of men whose whole lives are bye words and reproaches. When such men undertake to operate a high-toned hotel, the public may very well doubt the tone. Respectable people would not live in the private family of a man of that character; why, then, should they hoard and lodge with him in a larger house, where his influence for evil is greater, and where their power of supervision is less? These general principles are very safe guides. They are abstract truths that may not be gainsayed.

THE DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S OFFICE.

Under the new Constitution, the office of District Attorney has a vastly increased importance. The Grand Jury system is practically abolished, and the District Attorney becomes the sole grand juror of the county. He may present any body he pleases for trial, and there is no one who may legally estop him. The power is a large and dangerous one. How it will work remains to be seen. It is a fortunate fact, upon which we congratulate the people of this city and county, that the gentleman who has been elected the first District Attorney under the new Constitution is exceptionally well qualified. An able lawyer, a clear-headed man and a gentleman of unimpeachable integrity, he assumes office with the confidence of all who know him. He is exceptionally free from connection with any of the coteries and cliques that are so common in our city. The manner in which he came by his election is also in his favor. He was practically the candidate of all parties. The Workingmen first nominated him, then the Democrats and New Constitution party indorsed him, and a large number of Republicans voted for him, and hence he was elected by an overwhelming majority. His first moves are calculated to show that this confidence was not misplaced. If the statements that have received publicity are correct, and we have reason to believe they are, then it is very certain that he is bent upon surrounding himself with able assistants, irrespective of party. Mr. Walter H. Levy has won for himself considerable distinction as prosecuting officer of the City Criminal Court. He has also gained experience which will stand him in good stead as First Assistant District Attorney. Mr. E. C. Marshall is a man of ability far above the average. As a pleader before a jury he has probably not more than two or three equals in the State. Mr. Smoot is to be congratulated upon the choice of so competent an assistant. Then, the routine work of the office, such as preparing legal instruments, copying indictments, etc., is not to be left to unpracticed hands. Mr. Walker Graves, who is to receive this position, is one of the most industrious and promising young lawyers in the city. These appointments are the very best guarantees that could be given that the onerous duties pertaining to the District Attorney's office will be ably and fearlessly discharged.

IS THERE ANYTHING IN IT?

The Workingmen's candidates are certainly being bothered a good deal in obtaining possession of the offices to which they have been elected. They have had all the worry of an election that is only to give one year of office. Then their bonds have been unexpectedly increased to an extent that has troubled them not a little. It looked, for some time, as if two or three of their number would fail to get the requisite amount within the time prescribed by law; they managed, however, to worry through somehow. That trouble over, they are now encountered with another, and perhaps greater, one. A suit has been commenced to prevent their obtaining the offices at all. It is claimed that the pledges they gave to return a portion of their official salaries to the treasury is a bribe to the voters, within the meaning of the law, and, as such, renders their election null and void. Decisions have been delivered in Massachusetts and Missouri, which favor that view. If those decisions are to prevail—and there are none the other way—the Workingmen's candidates have a poor show of coming by their own. But will they prevail? We venture the opinion that they won't, and for this reason—the Workingmen's party has given evidence of great strength in this city, and no Judge, who has an eye to future success, will care to fly in the face of that strength. The Workingmen will, therefore, win in the contest. It will be well if they are in some way taught that such pledges are immoral, contrary to public policy, and wrong. The people, through their representatives, have declared what the salaries ought to be; the people have made the law, and, being the law, it is the public policy on the subject, and as such ought to be respected by a party claiming to be, par excellence, of the people, and from the people. Bids for office, which assume the character of money offerings, are dangerous and ought to be illegal, if they are not. The salaries are not too high. It is not lower pay, but a higher grade of service, that is required. Honest and competent city officers are worthy of their hire. Dishonest or incompetent ones are dear at any price.

A GOOD MOVE.

Governor Irwin and Governor-elect Perkins have united to do a most excellent thing. The newly-elected Legislature has the duty imposed upon it of adopting a vast amount of legal machinery, with which to operate the New Constitution. It is very certain that that machinery could not be constructed within the period allowed the Legislature, nor is it at all likely that the work would be well done if left entirely to that body. It is better that competent commissioners should prepare the work in advance. The machinery that requires to be constructed has no political significance. Its precise character is already determined by the Constitution, and it would have to be the same whether framed by a Republican, Democrat or Workingman. It is a work that can only be accomplished by legal experts. The present codes need to be carefully dovetailed into the provisions of the new organic law. The changes that will have to be made are numerous, and cannot be effected with too great care. Of the desirability of appointing efficient commissioners to draft the necessary laws there cannot be two opinions. The difficulty consisted in the want of authority to make such appointments. Governor Irwin has no power to make them; certainly he had no means of guaranteeing that the appointees would be paid for their services. A majority of the Legislature being Republicans, they might choose to repudiate the unauthorized action of a Democratic Governor, though we do not believe they would in this case. Governor-elect Perkins did well in uniting with Governor Irwin in making the appointments. A highly useful end will be subserved by this little stretch of authority. It meets with the hearty approval of all who are capable of understanding the nature of the work to be performed. It is very important that it should be done efficiently and well, and we now believe it will be, thanks to the wise, prudent and united action of Governor Irwin and Governor-elect Perkins.

RAILROAD TO THE OCEAN BEACH.

We confess to some surprise that there should be opposition in any quarter to the project for constructing a railroad to the ocean beach. The road is badly needed, will improve the value of property along the entire route, and will be an inestimable advantage to the thousands of our citizens who will avail themselves of it in order to drink in the pure ozone of the balmy Pacific. The property owners in the Western Addition know what the California-street road has done for them. It has made their homes easy of access, and of increased value. A part of the city that was distant, almost inaccessible and unprogressive, has had quite a new life imparted to it. The cars run rapidly, at short and certain intervals, and, as a result, no part of the city is more popular as a place of residence. Lots are being sold to persons who desire to build, and building is going ahead remarkably, considering the dullness of the times. On all hands it is agreed that the California-street road is a blessing to all the dwellers in the portion of the city through which it passes. A road to the ocean beach will do as much for the owners of property in that direction, whilst it will have a further advantage to the weary, dusty denizens of the crowded part of the city, who desire occasionally to enjoy the health-giving breezes of the ocean. It is to be hoped that all difficulties will be brushed aside as being unworthy to stand in the way of so desirable an enterprise. The road is a necessity, and the sooner it is built the better. It has already been too long delayed.

The Baldwin libel suit was not proceeded with on Monday. District Attorney Murphy, who was so anxious to force us to proceed on the next morning after the suit was commenced, appeared to be quite as anxious that we should not proceed when the day appointed for hearing the case arrived. Who shall doubt the wisdom of Mr. Murphy's changed opinions? It is said that he has also altered his mind about the wisdom of making the preliminary investigation open and public. He prefers the privacy of the Grand Jury room, where he has things all to himself. We hope he won't have the complaint ignored there. That would be the worst service he could do the News Letter, though we cannot say but that there might be some advantage in that course to himself, to his friend Lloyd, to Baldwin and to Baldwin's Hotel. We are ready for them any way they fix it.

Edison is reported to be almost ready with his electric light. This must be authentic, because it is some time since there has been a panic in gas stock in the Eastern markets. Another is about due.

The November "Atlantic" has an excellent article of great interest ...the saloon-keepers of this city. As for the safe-cracking exhibition at Platt's Hall, we have been reading up Don Quixote, since the Authors' Carnival opened, and recommend for imitation the conduct of the worthy Knight. When about to start upon his adventures, Don Quixote carefully fashioned a helmet, principally of pasteboard; and when it was finished he put it on a block and tried its strength with his good sword. To his dismay the helmet went to pieces, whereupon he made another with great care, and when it was done, took it for granted that it was perfectly strong, without exposing it to any trial. The bearings of the observation are in the application. What is the use of a safe? To give one a kind of confidence, and that only; since there never was a safe made that could not be unmade. This is so true that nobody likes to believe it.

Mr. John Muir is traveling in Alaska, and discovering a great many queer things. His reflections are sometimes of an appalling sagacity and depth. For instance, his last letter to the Bulletin, published on Thursday, describes the evergreen islands, and winds up thus: "Give to Alaska the climate of California, and these evergreen islands and shores would be treeless, sun-beaten rocks." If this is true, it is not less melancholy than the words of the poet:

"Tell me not in mournful numbers
Cats are dogs, for they are not;
Onions are not green cucumbers,
Mr. Muir's not Walter Scott."

If anything is calculated to shake a man's trust in an overruling Providence, it is to read in the telegrams from New York, under date of Oct. 30th: "Dr. Cogswell, of San Francisco, fell into the East River yesterday, and was half drowned when rescued." Only half drowned! Great heaven! And that infernal stone pump of his, with the brass Ben Franklin on the top of it, is dribbling away all the time on Montgomery Avenue! We used to think there was something generous in the New Yorkers, but they were mean enough to fish this old nightmare out of the beneficent river, and we shan't forgive them.

The evangelization of the unbelieving is as easy as falling off a log, if we may believe the report of the American Missionary Association assembled at Chicago, respecting church-work in the South. Since 1864 there have been converted to genuine Chicago Christianity 4,600 negroes—an average of 306 in a year. As the yearly increase of the negroes is considerably more than this, it is an easy matter to calculate how soon they may all be comfortably converted into excellent heathen again. Contributions in aid of the evangelization process are always thankfully received by the A. M. A. at Chicago.

A small boy, who has lost his father and gets spanked by his mother twice a day, was asked in Sunday-school, the other day, to describe the parable of the widow's mite. With his left hand convulsively clutching the termination of his spinal column, and a voice choked by emotion, he said wildly: "There ain't no description to it. If you ever got yanked on to my mother's knee when she's got a new hickory twig, you'd know all about the widow's might yourself, bet yer life!"

An opinion that is an opinion has at last found its way into a leading editorial of the Call! Commenting on the use of fire-arms in dramatic exhibitions, the valiant Pickering gaily remarks: "We do know it to be a frequent occurrence, outside of the theaters, for persons to be killed or wounded on account of carelessly handling fire-arms." (!!!) It is rash to make such broad statements. Surely, extreme cases of the kind are never, or hardly ever, heard of.

An individual, who claims to know what the Eastern people think, declares in one of the daily papers that the late Agitator passed with them for a representative Californian of the highest type. Side by side with the person who compliments the East in this style, even the defunct D. K. might pass for something resembling a man, for his name can at least be mentioned without nauseating the hearers.

The spelling reform has reached Chicago, and the On. Jozef Medil, of the Shekaugo Tryhune has issued orders to his printers to use catalog [why not katalog?] synagog [why not sinagog?] etiquet [why not etiket?] hypocrit [why not hipokrit?] and other consistent forms. There is nothing like a good progressive spirit to make a man do ridiculous things in the name of common sense.

The town of Colfax was partly burned, a few days ago, the fire having begun in the Chinese quarter. A logical paper of this city points to this as one more proof of the incendiary nature of the Chinese, and metaphorically asks Heaven how long this thing is to go on. What are the Chinese by the side of that deliberately fiendish cow that burned down all Chicago? The Chinese must go, by all means; but the cows first.

We Protest.—It is unblushingly stated by the papers that the furniture in the Cervantes booth, at the Authors' Carnival, is Spanish in design. There is some dark mystery in this, which threatens danger to a free Yankee nation of Anglo-Saxon blood; and popular indignation should force these recreants to design their furuiture after the Boston style.

The wonderfully recuperative forces of the nation are a source of pride to all Americans but one. Jones says he's no fool of a patriot to howl about resumption and increasing business, and all that, when he finds two-hit pieces scarcer than ever. What's the use of talking to a man, whose boots are below par, about New York's gain of 68 per cent?

The Virginia people are laughing at Grant because he said, while looking at two men drilling rock, that he would rather be the one that strikes than the one that holds the drill. Cunning Grant! he looked at the drilling, but he was thinking of the strike he made, some time ago, in Alaska furs.

A lady who lives at Damariscotta, Maine, has hair eight feet long—almost as long, in short, as Dam what's-his-name—and the local paper swears—they all swear in Dam-so-and-so—is perfectly natural. No doubt of it; the jute grass grows naturally enough in India.

We are constantly told that the vastness of the wheat production in the United States cannot be realized by the mind. We never thought it had to be realized that way, unless the Chinese theory, which regards the stomach as the seat of the mind, is to be accepted as the true one.

The N. O. "Picayune" says chestnuts should be eaten in the dark. Well, except a man's heart, there are not many places darker than the inside of his mouth.

WILLIAM SHAKSPEARE.

"Wash and Be Clean."—These solemn words of the prophet cannot taken too thoroughly to heart in these days, when there is less excuse neglect in this matter than ever, now that the Terrace Baths, Alameda, open to the public. To find such a sheet of water, always pure and olutely safe to the hather, even when perfectly ignorant of swimming, boon. At many bathing places there is danger always near; at the rrace one is as safe as in a hathing-tub, while the water is fresh from an with every tide. Perfectly secure, scrupulously clean—for the bot- is regularly scraped, and the hathing-suits are washed after each ng—the Terrace Baths offer the most delightful and healthful resort, th the perfect order and decorum of a private house.

The secret history of M. Leon Chotteau's mission to and from this ntry will he interesting when it comes to he written. It is well known t vine growers and wine dealers in France contributed to send him this y; but it is less generally understood than it ought to be that the su- riority of Landsherger's Private Cuvée was the determining cause of somewhat hasty departure. Why he came at all must have puzzled to explain to his own satisfaction, when he tasted wine of California pes, made hy Californians, and found it the very ideal sparkling wine, ich some imagine that only champagne can produce.

The new derrick to he placed on Tillamook Rock, in Oregon, has a ing capacity of ten tons, and a hoom eighty feet long. This is pretty ll for Oregon, hut not worth mentioning in comparison with the hoom favor of Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter street, which swings through the ole city, and hrings to it every one who wishes to hreakfast or lunch or e with ease, elegance and propriety. The cookery is acknowledged to the best on the coast, and the service is prompt, noiseless and efficient, e that of the hest-ordered home.

In spite of every argument to dissuade her, the ex-Empress Eugenie decided to make a voyage to South Africa, in order to visit the spot ere her unfortunate son was slain, and there pray for the repose of his l. A resolution so extreme and likely to hring the sorrowing lady near her end, could only have its origin in the intensity of a mother's love; l future generations will dwell with sympathetic hearts on the picture such devotion, made familiar, as it will be, hy the matchless photo- phs of Bradley & Rulofson.

The great silver discoveries in New Mexico are said to have heen ught about hy the fact that the Indians of the neighborhood used sil- hullets. The curiosity of the whites was naturally roused hy this ex- vagance, and now the mines are in full hlast. A mine far more valua- has been opened hy Carmany & Crosett at 25 Kearny street, where finest assortment and most exquisite styles of gentlemen's wear are to had at prices far lower than have yet been known.

The agitator at the Andrews Oil Refinery, Los Angeles, blew up a days ago, setting fire to two tanks of oil. The San Francisco agitator st up, some time ago, without setting fire to anything, not even to the ter in the hay; hut Montanya's Union Range neither hlows up nor sts, but works steadily on with perfect energy, doing the very hest of cooking, with the smallest outlay in fuel and labor. There is nothing e it for soothing the perturhed housekeeper.

"Punch" has remarked that a Yankee hahy will crawl out of its dle, take a survey of it, invent an improvement and apply for a patent ore he is six months old. This is a glowing tribute to American in- tive genius, hut we are compelled to say that the whole Yankee na- could not invent a suhstitute for Napa Soda, the best beverage known.

An Irish newspaper says: "The procession was very fine, being rly two miles long, as was also the prayer of the Rev. Mr. McFadden." s is a little hard on Mr. McFadden, hut if we were to say that two es of visitors pass into White's, 614 Commercial street, in search of hats, we should he within hounds.

All your own fault if you remain sick or out of health, when you get Hop Bitters. Read Advertisement.

Adulterated wines are hurtful in their effect on the system, while the pure juice of the grape exhilarates and strengthens at the same time; but not even pure wine can compare as a tonic with salt-water bathing. The Neptune and Mermaid Baths, foot of Hyde street, afford to every one the means of indulging in this glorious stimulant, in water fresh from the ocean, rolling on a shelving beach, and with the advantage of instruction in swimming by Prof. Mohor, a most accomplished teacher.

Now that the rainy season is at hand, with its long evenings and cosy gatherings, it is time to think of laying in the stock of coal for home use. For this nothing equals the Red Ash, with its warm glow, its permanence and perfect combustion, without resulting clinker or lumps. J. Macdonough, 25 Market street, has imported a large stock of this favorite coal, and is kept busy supplying orders. Every variety of Scotch, Australian and other coals constantly on hand.

The sixteenth century was, beyond all doubt, the picturesque age of Europe in the matter of costume, and especially in the variety and beauty of head-gear. A truly finished hat can only be designed by an artist, penetrated with the spirit and informed hy the knowledge of that great period. Such an artist we have in Herrmann, whose studies in the Renaissance mark him as the supreme hatter of the day. His catalogue is a wonder.

The man who was bitten by a shark at Long Branch, last September, has now recovered, and is lecturing on the subject of Longevity, which, he thinks, may be best secured by keeping clear of sharks. As a general proposition, this is certainly sound; but the terrors of consumption have been done away with by F. & P. J. Cassin's cordial halm of Old Rye Whisky and Pure Rock Candy.

Bilious Disorders, Liver Complaints, Costiveness, Dyspepsia, etc., are speedily removed by Dr. Jayne's Sanative Pills. Forty years' use has proved them superior to all other remedies for the cure of the various diseases for which they are recommended. In their action they are mild and certain, and may be taken at any time without risk from exposure.

"BIZ."

There is a marked falling-off in our stock supply of general merchandise. The late boom in the Spot markets resulted in the very general disposal of stocks in warehouse, thus leaving us with few standard goods in importers' hands. The fact is, there is very little general merchandise in first hands. Let us run over the list and see:

Borax.—Stock light, and production restricted by an agreement between the two producing companies—the out-put not to exceed a certain quantity—thus keeping prices steady.

Chemicals are nearly all the turn dearer by reason of light stocks and restricted imports.

Coal, other than Anthracite, is in light stock, and Cumberland is dearer. A contract, to arrive, of 10,000 tons Australian may be noted, upon terms withheld. The free supply of Steam Coals from the California Mont Diablo mines, from Seattle and other Puget Sound mines, coupled by those of British Columbia, keep prices from advancing.

Coffee is in very light stock, pending a cargo arrival from Ceylon to Parrott & Co. Rio may now he quoted at 15@16c, Central American 15@19c, and 20c for choice Peaberry; O. G. Java, 26c.

Case Goods are in active request, particularly Apricots, Peaches, Pears and other fruits, the export demand steadily increasing. The ship John A. Briggs, for Liverpool, has cleared, with 2,750 cases canned fruits. Case Salmon is in the hands of a single wealthy firm, who have hought up nearly all the stock on this coast, and having secured the bulk of same at 97½c@$1 02½ per dozen, have steadily advanced prices up to $1 35 for Sacramento Salmon, $1 40@1 50 for 1-lb tins Columbia River hrands. Our Salmon shipments this season to date are far below those of last year for a corresponding period. The Chicago demand helps greatly the trade in Salmon the present season. Up to this date Australia has taken only about one-third of her last year's supply. The shipments to England from the North as well as hence are not what they ought to be, and will, no doubt, loom up by and by.

Dry Goods, both Fancy and Staple, are in active request. The trade is very active here, hut prices have not traveled up to correspond with the rise in New York and the East, where Woolen Goods have risen materially.

Fish.—Codfish are very plentiful and cheap. The Pacific catch large.

Hardware.—The demand is good, and the late advance in prices well sustained.

Metals.—Tbe stock of Pig Iron, Tin Plate, Sydney Tin and other goods in the line has for the most part passed into the hands of the trade, and selling freely at the late rise. We note a shipment to New York via Panama of 410,000 lbs Pig Lead.

Oils.—The Pacific Factory has advanced the price of Linseed to 85@90c, Caster Oil to $1 20@1 30 per gall. Eartb Oils are also higher; China Nut, ditto.

Provisions of nearly all kinds and descriptions are higher, and what is quite surprising is the fact that Oregon is drawing her supplies of Meats, etc., from us, rather than sending us, as heretofore. It seems ridiculous for Oregon to come here for her Butter and Eggs, Bacon, Ham and Lard, yet it is true nevertheless.

Quicksilver has collapsed here as well as in New York and London; the price here 40c. London has fallen from £9 to £7 10s. per bottle. Hongkong is also on the down grade. New York buyers here a week or two since are now offering, and, in fact, quite anxious, to sell. When we consider that we have, for the time being, lost our large home "Bonauza" trade, consuming as they did several thousand flasks per month, Hongkong overstocked and no longer a buyer here, it would seem unnatural that prices should jump up from 34c. to 50c. It was all purely speculative, without any good foundation whatever. Had the 45@50c. price been maintained, there are lots of Quicksilver mines now idle tbat would have fired up, and thus increased supplies amazingly. The statistical position of the Quicksilver market stauds thus:

	Flasks.
Exports from Jan. 1 to Oct. 24, 1879	46,905
" " " 1878	26,117
Increase 1879	20,788

These figures do not include overland shipments by rail. Our spot stock is estimated at 2,500 flasks.

Rice.—The stock of No. 2 China is large, and we quote this and mixed China at 4⅝c@5⅝c. No. 1 China is scarce at 6c. Imports during the week from Hongkong per "City of Pekiug," 11,378 bags; per "Vigilant," 29,817 bags. From Honolulu we have received, per "C. Spreckles," 1,475 bags, which sold in lots, according to quality, at 6c, 6¼c@6½c. This Hawaiian Table is a great favorite here, and is occasionally sent to Chicago, where it is much liked.

Sugar.—The heavy advance in Re6ned last week to 12½c for Whites and 11c for Golden is still maintained, and likely to remain stationary for some time to come. By the schooner "Claus Spreckles," from Houolulu, we received about 5,000 packages; these go direct to the refiners. There is, now-a-days, but little raw Sugar sold or consumed upon the Pacific slope. Heretofore nearly all the Hawaiian product came here in half barrels—grocery grades—and sold as such to the trade; hut since the Refiners contracted for the Island crop of 35,000 tons, nearly all comes here in bags, of a low grade, and taken at once to the Refiners, wbo now feed the market with Yellow, Golden and all other grades, thus driving out supplies from the Hongkong Refinery, and cuts us off from Manila cargoes, Central American and Peruvian—all largely supplanted by the Hawaiian free product.

Teas.—The market is strong for all Japan Greens, Comet, Oolongs, etc. The City of Pekin brought for this city 3,418 pkgs., and, to go East in transit, 22,288 pkgs. We quote Japan papers (L in a diamond), 40c; M. & Co. M. ditto, 38½c.

Silks.—The City of Pekin, from China, brought us 142 pkgs, and in transit, to go East by Central Pacific Railroad, 1,192 pkgs.

Wines.—There is a growing desire all over this continent for California Native Wines. This year's vintage will amount to 6@8,000,000 glls. Our dealers feel greatly encouraged with the growth of this home industry.

Spirits.—Grape Brandy, made by Naglee and others in this State, is steadily gaining a reputation second to none, and the day is not distant when California will outrank the best French Coguac.

Freights and Charters.—After a fortnight's cessation in Wheat charters, we have now to note the chartering of some half-dozen or more sbips for Europe. Closing rates to Liverpool, £3 5s.; to Cork, U. K., £3 7s. 6d.; to Continent, £3 12s. 6d. There are few ships in port, disengaged, suited to the wheat-carryiug trade, and these are held strong at 70s.

Domestic Produce.—We have had quite a big break in the Wheat market during the week, in sympathy with the decline in Englaud, where tbe price has fallen from 60s. to 55s. per quarter; here, from $2 15@2 25 for Gilt Edged No. 1, $2@2 05 for No. 2 Shipping, down to $2 for No. 1, and for No. 2, $1 85@1 90 per ctl. At this decline, farmers are not disposed to sell freely. The fact is, they are too smart to be caught at this stage of the game. Our exports of Flour and Wheat for the past two seasons stand thus:

	Flour, Bbls.	Wheat, Ctls.
1879—July 1 to Oct. 29	153,656	4,892,691
1878—July 1 to Oct. 29	164,423	4,652,855

Our receipts for the two past Harvest years of Wheat staud thus: 1879, 5,700,000 ctls.; 1878, 5,200,000 ctls; Flour not included. Stockton now holds in warehouse 56,000 tons of Wheat, and other points in proportion. Shippers have been thus far enabled to give quick dispatch to their vessels; during October nearly fifty vessels having been loaded with Grain for Europe and elsewhere.

Barley.—The market is flat at 75@80c. Feed; Brewing, 90@95c.; Cbevalier, $1 40@1 70 per ctl.

Oats.—The market is languid at $1 25@1 40 per ctl.

Corn.—We note a slight advance in Yellow, round, now selling at 1c.; large Yellow, 90@95c. per ctl.; Wbite, 80@85c.

Rye.—The German bark "Bodvild" has cleared for Falmouth with 16,047 centals, valued at $1 20 per cental.

Beans.—There has of late been quite an active demand for Limas, said to be for shipment to New York; price, 5½c. Bayos command 1¼c; Whites, 1⅝c; Pea, 1⅜c.

Hops.—The demand is active, with sales in lots of 500 hales within the range of 28c to 30½c for Washington Territory; California and Russian River, 32½c@35c.

Hides.—The market for Dry is strong at 19c for selections.

Wool.—The market is firm at 25c@26c for choice long staple; inferior is less sought after at 12½c@15c; medium, 18c@20c.

Tallow.—The market is languid at 5½c.

Potatoes.—Supplies are large and the market dull at 25c@75c per cental.

THE VICTIM.

[WRITTEN BY HIMSELF.]

Pity the sorrows of a poor old man,
With senses gone astray,
Whose friends (? have all persuaded him
At Carnival to play.

He's been assigned n skipper's part,
To handle chart and glass,
But he must feel, when curtain falls,
He's played the part of ass.

Then, pity the sorrows of a poor old fool,
Who's brain was in a muddle
When he accepted such n part
As that of Captain "Cuddle.

Supposed to have had a cold in the head.

SOLOMON COLMAN.

Among the passengers expected to arrive by the overland train this evening, is the founder of the great clothing house of Colman Brothers, Solomon Colman, Esq., of New York. It is between ten and twelve years since Mr. Colman was last among us; and his present purpose is to spend three or four weeks in inspecting the vast establishment of which he is the head, and enjoying the sight of the many changes wrought in our growing city since his last visit. Wonderful as are these changes, there are none of them more remarkable or striking than the vicissitudes of Mr. Colman's own career. It was in 1853 that he landed here, a young man, full of energy and enterprise, and in search of fortune, which rarely shows herself coy to those who possess these qualities. He opened a little tailoring shop where the Nevada Block now stands, and began work. His stock and means were scanty, but he knew his business, never made a bad job, and was untiring in industry. His custom grew with every week, and every new customer was an agent to advertise the place, where good work, good material and good treatment were always to be had. In 1855 Abraham Colman joined his brother, and the new firm established itself on Washington street, opposite Maguire's old Opera House. Trade increased so rapidly that soon it was found necessary to take the lower floor of Burgoyne's Bank building, at the corner of Montgomery and Washington streets. An agency was established in New York, but was found insufficient to meet the requirements of the house, and, in 1859, Solomon Colman returned to New York, after his six successful years in San Francisco, and set up, at first on Broadway near Boome street, and later at 124 and 126 Duane street, the great factory which has ever since supplied the immense stock of this colossal house. In this factory there are constantly employed thirty experienced cutters, and a force of from 400 to 500 hands the year round. The factory building is four stories high. The offices occupy the ground floor; the goods are examined and classified on the second floor, and all the defective pieces are at once returned to the workroom. On the third floor is the cutting department, and the packing is done on the fourth floor. All this vast scene of industry is under the constant and vigilant supervision of Solomon Colman, a task sufficient in itself for any ordinary capacity: but in addition to this great charge, Mr. Colman is the active and responsible head of the firm in all its great undertakings, and nothing which concerns its vital working or its extension, whether in the East or in the West, is strange to him or beyond the reach of his trained experience and far-seeing sagacity. The presence of such a man in our community is a fact to be noted.

CUMBERLAND LODE, ARIZONA.

The news from the Cumberland lode still remains of the same encouraging character. Captain Daniel Hanlon, Superintendent of the Cumberland mine, is still actively engaged preparing the mill-site for the reception of the 10 stamp mill, which, it is promised, will be ready next month. The Superintendent feels confident, from his personal and extensive examination of the ore body of the Cumberland mine, that its further exploration to great depths will create a tremendous mining excitement throughout the country. The management of this company has acted openly and generously in all that pertains to its workings. Any expert reputation is at all times welcome to inspect the mine and report openly to the world his unbiased opinions. A letter of introduction to Superintendent Hanlon, for this purpose, can be obtained from the President, 417 California street, San Francisco. Fairness and honesty of intention is all that is asked by the company's officers. The stock of the Cumberland is tightly held in large quantities by a few holders, who are not anxious to dispose of their interests, but will hold for dividends. Not being assessed from time to time—which is unfortunately the general habit in such enterprises—the stockholders are not forced to sacrifice their stock for fear of any such approaching tax. Every effort upon the part of an efficient President, and a Board of Directors possessing the confidence of the community, is being strained to bring the mine into a bullion-producing condition, and we predict a complete success.

Mr. H. W. Patrick, well known in musical society, has begun a course of instruction on the piano. With this he combines so much Thorough-Bass and Harmony as will give the pupil a practical grasp of these difficult subjects, sufficient for all ordinary purposes, and so solid that further studies can be pursued if required. It is almost unnecessary to recommend a musician so high in reputation for thoroughness and power of imparting his knowledge. Those interested in this noble art will lose no time in addressing Mr. Patrick, at 426 Sutter street.

What shall I do for a complexion? is the one abiding thought of any a lady, who needs but that last touch to be a ravishing beauty. Where Nature has failed to do her part, comes in the aid of art, and now that Madame Rachel's Enamel Bloom is freely offered there is no excuse for plainness. This providential invention is made of perfectly harmless ingredients, fresh from the world of flowers and plants, and has a most wholesome as well as a delightful effect upon the skin. No toilette-table can afford to be without it, and the orders pour in upon C. Langley & Co., agents, Front and Pine streets.

There is no doubt that cleanliness is next to godliness; and the perfection of cleanliness is only possible when a man knows that he is well dressed in stylish clothes. This satisfaction J. M. Litchfield & Co., 415 Montgomery street, give to all their customers. Their fitter is the best in the city.

An elegant assortment of Gold Watches and Chains at Randolph & Co.'s, corner Montgomery and Sutter streets.

The "North American," for November, is weighty, perhaps even overweighted, with serious writing. Mr. Parkman's article on "Woman Suffrage," in the October number, is simultaneously attacked by five champions—Julia Ward Howe, T. W. Higginson, Lucy Stone, Eliz. C. Stanton, Wendell Phillips. Needless to say that Mr. Parkman is well mauled among the five; the ladies, by the way, showing better temper and using sounder arguments than either of their preux chevaliers.

Prof. Bowen uses, with ingenuity and success, against the Darwinian Theory, the weapons supplied by the admitted failure of Malthusianism, and the hopelessness of the Pessimist philosophy, which has been frankly accepted by so many remarkable men. Among these was Alexander von Humboldt, and a quotation from his posthumous memoirs it were hard to match for merely insane despair, without going back to Tiberius Cæsar's letter to the Senate. "I was not born," says Humboldt, "in order to be the father of a family. Moreover, I regard marriage as a sin, and the propagation of children as a crime. It is my conviction, also, that he is a fool, and still more a sinner, who takes upon himself the yoke of marriage—a fool, because he thereby throws away his freedom without gaining a corresponding recompense; a sinner, because he gives life to children without being able to give them the certainty of happiness. I despise humanity in all its strata; I foresee that our posterity will be far more unhappy than we are; and should not I be a sinner if, in spite of this insight, I should take care to leave a posterity of unhappy beings behind me? The whole of life is the greatest insanity. And if for eighty years one strives and inquires, still one is obliged finally to confess that he has striven for nothing and has found out nothing. Did we at least only know why we are in this world! But, to the thinker, everything is and remains a riddle; and the greatest good luck is that of being born a flat-head."

The other papers of the number are: "Political Correspondence between Stanton and Buchanan;" "Part IV. of the Diary of a Public Man;" "Tariff Reactions," by Arthur L. Perry; and notices of "Theophrastus Such," and two other recent works of fiction.

Instruction in French.—Prof. Josset, long and favorably known in this city some years ago, has just returned from San Diego, where he filled the Chair of the French Language and Literature, in Point Loma Seminary, with great success for five years. It were superfluous to speak of Prof. Josset's qualifications in this community, which still holds him in lively remembrance. He will receive a few pupils in French. Address, for the present, at the office of the News Letter.

SHALL WE KILL OURSELVES?

Alum Poisonous? Its Use in Baking Powders Condemned by Dr. Hall's Journal of Health.

Dr. Hall's Journal of Health, in a recent issue, says:

"This question has caused a good deal of discussion. Alum is used by any bakers to whiten their bread, enabling them to use an inferior flour. is more extensively employed as a cheap substitute for cream of tartar the manufacture of baking powders. It has not been considered immediately dangerous; although, if continued, it induces dyspepsia and obstinate constipation. But the fact that many cases of poisoning have occurred from baking powders which contained alum, puts the question in a more serious aspect, and prudent people will exercise caution in the selection of baking powders.

"Under what conditions, then, does this substance—formerly used only in mechanical or medicinal purposes—become poisonous? They are certainly obscure, and at present we can only surmise what they may be. We suspect that the cause exists in the individual poisoned; some peculiarity of the constitution producing a morbid change in the secretions of the stomach, with which the alum combines and forms an active poison; or the secretions may be healthy but in unusual proportions, and that these less or greater proportions, in combination with the alum, constitute poison.

"For example, two parts of mercury and two parts of chlorine form calomel, which is not poisonous; but change the proportions to one part of mercury and two parts of chlorine, and we get corrosive sublimate, which is a deadly poison.

"Then, again, we know nothing of the causes of constitutional peculiarities. Why is it that one person can eat all kinds of green fruits and vegetables with impunity, while the same course might cost another individual his life? One person can handle poison ivy and sumac without being in the least affected; another is poisoned if he approaches to within feet of them. Out of a family residing in a malarial district, some of members will suffer half the year with fever and ague, while the others will enjoy excellent health during the entire year. Foods that are wholesome to some persons are actually poisonous to others. This is especially true of some kinds of fish. There is no safety in taking alum into the stomach, as it is shown to be always injurious, and often dangerous. Baking powders properly compounded, and containing pure cream of tartar instead of alum, are more convenient than yeast; and bread and pastry made with them are just as wholesome, and far more palatable. We are in entire sympathy with the manufacturers of the Royal Baking Powder—who commenced and are vigorously conducting the war against the use of alum in baking powders.

"Before committing ourselves, however, we made tests of a sufficient number of baking powders to satisfy ourselves that the substitution of alum for cream of tartar in their composition has not been over-estimated, while a careful examination of the Royal Baking Powder confirms our belief that Dr. Mott, the Government Chemist, when he singled out and commended this powder for its wholesomeness, did it wholly in the interests of the public.

"We do not hesitate to say that the Royal Baking Powder people deserve the gratitude of the community whom they are endeavoring to protect.

"Will not some prominent manufacturer of pure Candies follow their example, and expose the secrets of a business that is doing untold mischief to little children?"

Mr. C. R. Bowling, Inspector of Factory's for the Birmingham District, in a letter to the local papers, narrates a touching instance of hoy roism. Very recently a lad employed at Messrs. Wilkes, Mapplebeck Co's works, had his apron caught by some mill-handing, was drawn to the machinery, and was so crushed and mangled that he died very on afterward. Mr. Bowling says the father of the hoy worked in the me factory, and the only words the poor lad said as he was being taken way, crushed and dying, from the wheels were: "Don't let my father e me."

THE MORGUE'S HARVEST.

When of old, a town or nation
Was pursued by swift disaster,
'Twas not doubted by the people
That their backs had found the rod
For some grievous sin committed
In the sight of outraged Heaven,
And with sacrifice and penance
They sought mercy of their God.

If our faith was as the ancients',
Surely we should quake with terror,
And betake us to our temples,
There in humbleness to pray;
For the hand of wrath is on us,
Death and crime reign in our city,
And we look for some fresh horror
With the coming of each day.

The cold house of death is crowded
With the corpses, pale and ghastly,
Of the young and strong, whom Nature
Had endowed with lusty life;
But they found the gift unwelcome,
With their own hands they returned it.
Some from shame and some from sorrow
Have withdrawn from the strife,

And the fearful epidemic
Still extends its baleful power;
Every night and every morning
Gives the Morgue a suicide;
But why all at the same moment
Should find life not worth the having
Is a secret dark and awful
Which all science has defied.

BEACONSFIELD'S PLUCK.

It is often asserted by Lord Beaconsfield's opponents that his personal character and his public policy are both essentially un-English. The accusation—if it may be called one—seems to be based upon the fact that the present Premier is more astute, wily and silent in his operations than his predecessors. It has always been thought that the British statesman can possess no finesse or tact, but must go blundering through the bric-a-brac of politics like a bull through a China-shop, and carry all of his points—if he carries them at all—by brute force and obstinacy. If he does this, he is conceded to be a John Bull of the purest breed; but if he possesses and uses any of that skill and brilliancy which is lauded in Gortschakoff's and Bismarcks, then he is "un-English." We confess that we have been unable to see anything so very Machiavellian in Lord Beaconsfield's foreign policy; on the contrary, it seems to us that he and his ministry have been dashing, frank and daringly outspoken to an extent which Englishmen should be proud to claim as characteristic of their nation; but granted that he is all that his enemies claim, there is certainly one side of his character and policy which is as intensely British as anything can be. If pluck, resolution and indomitable perseverence are English qualities, then Lord Beaconsfield must be a true representative of the tight little island. See how he has been hounded at every turn by his political opponents, and accused of wasting his country's blood and treasure to gratify his own vanity. Most men would be disgusted and disheartened by such ingratitude, and if they did not retire from office, would at least endeavor to gain shelter from abuse by directing their policy into more peaceful channels—even at the expense of the country's honor and interest. Does Beaconsfield do this? Not he. He is practically waging war with Russia now; for he is confronting her at every turn, and telling her plainly that England intends to hold her in check in every quarter of the world. For doing this he has been violently assailed, and we might expect that he would let Russia have her way with China and Japan, for a time at least. But no sooner does the Czar, after failing in an attempt to bully China, conclude a treaty with that Power against Japan, than British men-of-war are commissioned for the China seas, and Russia once more finds herself face to face with England. There is a pertinacity and stubbornness about this policy which does not seem to us very "un-English," and it is all Beaconsfield's doing.

THE CRYSTAL WEDDING AT THE SHELDON MANSION.

On Friday last Mr. Mark Sheldon invited a select company of friends, all of them notables in our first society, to attend the celebration of his crystal wedding. The entertainment was planned as a surprise to Mrs. Sheldon, and so admirable were the arrangements that no hint of what was coming reached the lady. The guests assembled at Mr. McGary's house, on Mission street, and at 9 o'clock P.M., duly marshaled and preceded by Ballenberg's band, playing the Wedding March, moved in procession to Mr. Sheldon's residence. Shortly after the entrance of the company, the magnificent presents in crystal were brought in and arranged for display. The guests then passed in order through the splendidly lighted apartments, led by Gov. Pacheco, who gave his arm to Mrs. Sheldon, until at last a halt was called, and the happy candidates for matrimony were requested to take their stand before the Justice, arrayed in old Knickerhocker style. Gov. Pacheco, with courtly grace, gave away the bride; and, immediately after the ceremony, mirth and music ruled the evening until far into the night.

Swift Justice.—The dispatch with which Rosenburg, the libeler of the London beauties, and Cooper, the escaped forger, have been tried, convicted and sentenced by the English Courts, furnishes an example which we should do well to imitate in this country. It seems but yesterday that the telegraph informed us of the arrest of these two criminals, and already their cases have been disposed of, and they are both in jail under heavy sentences, and that without the remotest chance of being pardoned out. Had they been arrested here, it would have taken six months to bring them to trial, six months more to try them, as much longer to give them another trial, and then if they had finally been convicted—which is doubtful—their sentences would have been a bagatelle, half of it to be served out as privileged prisoners and the other half to be remitted for "good conduct."

DISARMAMENT AND ARBITRATION.

The Peace Conference, held at Naples, with the object of bringing about the general disarmament of nations, has broken up in a row, amid warlike declarations of Italy's undying enmity to Austria. This appears ludicrous enough, but it is just what must be expected as the result of every attempt to further this visionary scheme. Universal disarmament is a pleasant and a plausible idea. It is easy to show how advantageous it would be for man, both from a moral and a financial point of view, to turn his sword into a reaping-hook, disband his armies, melt down his big and little guns and foreswear war forever; but all the showing in the world will never make man do these things. The farce just enacted at Naples illustrates one of the principal reasons why disarmament can never be simultaneously agreed upon. Those nations which by past wars have acquired more territory than rightfully belongs to them, might be content with a scheme which would secure them in the possession of their acquisitions; but those nations which have been despoiled by past wars are not likely to relinquish the chance of some day winning back their own with the sword. Thus Austria, since she holds forcible possession of provinces which are properly Italian, might, so far as her relations with Italy are concerned, consent to disarmament; but Italy cannot be expected to sign a compact from which her ancient enemy would reap all the advantage. If it should be suggested that at the time of disarmament all the old disputes should be adjusted peacefully and justice done all round, then the matter would only be reversed, for in that case the powerful and successful nations would scout the idea of surrendering without a blow that which it cost them much blood and treasure to obtain.

Again, disarmament implies that all future disputes—and such there always must be—will be settled by arbitration. But the scheme of arbitration is also impracticable, for it would either drag the great powers down to the level of the small, or elevate the small to the dignity of the great—that is to say, it would make them all equal. According to the present system Germany can bully Denmark and Russia can rob Roumania at their pleasure; but if, instead of the big boy being able to thrash the little boy into compliance with his wishes, they were compelled to submit their case to the schoolmaster, the big fellow's superiority would be gone. The weak powers would gain by arbitration, but the strong powers will take good care that they don't get it.

MICROSCOPIC REVELATIONS.

Lewinoeck tells of an insect seen with a microscope, of which 27,000,000 would only equal a mite. Insects of various kinds may be seen in the cavities of a grain of sand. Mold is a forest of beautiful trees, with branches, leaves and fruit. Butterflies are fully feathered. Hairs are hollow tubes. The surface of our bodies is covered with scales like a fish; a single grain of sand would cover 150 of these scales, and yet each scale would cover 500 pores. Through the narrow openings the perspiration forces itself like water through a sieve. The mites take five hundred steps a second. Each drop of stagnant water contains a world of animated beings, swimming with as much liberty as whales in the sea. Each leaf has a colony of insects grazing on it like cows in a meadow.

Prime Investment securities are much sought after, and are scarce even at our extreme quotations. Nearly all the San Francisco Gaslight Co.'s stock, which was held at 90, has been absorbed. About 150,000 of the First Mortgage Bonds of the Spring Valley Water Works have been sold at from 98¼ to 98½ and accrued interest. There is no change in the money market.

A Big Advance in Sugars and Syrup.—Since placing our review of the market in type, the California and Bay Sugar Refineries have again raised the price of their products. Golden syrup has been advanced from 60c to 70c per gallon, and sugar to 13½c for all whites, cube, crushed, powdered, granulated, etc., and for yellow and golden to 11c@12c. This is a rise for the week of 1c per pound on sugar and 10c per gallon on syrup. We have now to notice the arrival of the Caldera from Corinta, C. A., to J. C. Merrill & Co., with 1,174 barrels Central American sugar and 96 barrels rum.

The commencement exercises of the Medical Collsgs of ths Pacific wers held in Calvary Church last evening. Among ths graduates ars Mrs Emelie Lawson, the poetess, whose graceful poems havs so often added lustre to ths columns of the NEWS LETTER, and C. B. THE STOCK MARKET.

The past week shows no improvement over ths last—in fact, a gradual shrinkage of values and corresponding decline in business is noticeable. Speculation holds off, awaiting further developments in Union and Sierra Nevada, the impression among operators being that ths deal on the 2,300-level is about spent. A drift sast from ths Union shaft, on the 2,400-level, has been started to explors the ore body in the southwestern part of the mine, as indicated by the drill a few months since. This fact will probably stimulate operations in these stocks within ths next few days, as ore of fine quality is known to exist in that section of ground. Considerable speculation is rife concerning the survey of the dividing line between Union and Sierra Nevada, but it is now pretty well understood that the north line of Union will take in the Sierra Nevada inclins and all the ore lying south of that point. This will be a sore disappointment to ths Sierra Nevada people, but 'tis ths inevitabls, and must be accepted. The balaucs of the market shows littls change, with the exception of an occasional spasm in the watery group.

Wm. Lane Booker, Esq., her Britannic Majesty's honored representative in San Francisco for so many years, will arrivs hy overland train to-night. It is simple justice to say that no one person has dons so much as he to bind together the two great families of the Anglo-Saxon race. During Mr. Booker's six month's absence, Mr. Mason, Vice-Consul, has ably performed the duties whicb devolved upon him.

The Baldwin libel suit against ths News Letter was continued from Monday last until Tuesday next, in consequencs of ths absencs of a number of the witnesses, most of whom belonged to the softer sex. If they are not present on Tuesday, bench warrants will issue for their arrest. They must come, and, what is more, will have to tell all they know. The position may be unpleasant for them, but it is not of our seeking.

Debts of Honor.

I.

Her heart and her woman's instinct told her what was coming as soon as he began to speak, and when, after much hesitation and beating about the hush, he at last said that he was soon going to be married, she uttered not a word, but still sat pale and silent as a statue. Had she wept or stormed he could have borne it better than this unnatural calm under a blow which he well knew must shatter her heart. She was only his mistress, and he had a right to leave her when he pleased so far as he was responsible to human laws; hut he knew that by the unwritten common law of Heaven she was his wife. In sickness she had tended him ; in health she had ministered to his pleasures ; in poverty and despair she had saved him from himself hy her counsel and encouragement. She had uttered before no earthly altar a brittle promise to love, cherish and obey, hut in her heart had registered that vow and had kept it.

These things he, Captain Chester Mohun, the penniless guardsman, thought of with remorse and hitterness as he gazed at the pain-stricken and pallid face of his mistress. And she—what was she thinkiug of? Did she regret that Quixotic solicitude for his honor, that blind faith in his love, which had made her refuse to let him sully his name hy marrying her, wben in the whirlwind of his passionate infatuation he would have done so? Ah, no ! In that tender hody was a heart of steel, that might hreak with grief hut could never be warped hy selfishness when the welfare of her idol was at stake.

" Speak to me, Edith," he cried huskily, when at length the secret was out. " I feel guilty enough, God knows, but your silence will kill me. By Heaven ! if you do not speak and say that you forgive me, I will tell her this day that I cannot wed her because—"

With a gesture of her hand, she stopped him. The white, dry lips quivered and parted: " Do you love her, Chester?" she said, in a low, distinct voice.

He seemed strangely trouhled at the question. " Why do you ask me, Edith ?" he answered hesitatingly. You know that I can love nohody hut you. But—don't despise me, darling—I have debts of honor which I cannot pay, and—she is very rich. I am ruined and disgraced forever, unless I accept this chance to save myself."

Debts of honor ! Money owed for bets lost and unlucky play, and this must he paid at the expense of two women's happiness. O man, man ! truly your code of honor is a strange one.

With an effort which she could not conceal, she rose to her feet, and, holding out her hand, said tremblingly: " You have done right, Chester. I—have—nothing—to—forgive."

He was touched—heartless hutterfly of fashion as he was—he was touched by her devotion. That hrief half hour had left lines upon her face which whole years of life's struggle, shared with him, could not have graven there. He knew what his selfishness was costing her, but —his debts of honor—these, like a solid wall of granite, stood up hetween the conscience of his soul and that of his social creed. His debt of honor to the woman before him, who was his wife by every tie that nature binds; his debt of honor to that other woman who was shortly to call him " husband" by virtue of the shadowy title which rituals grant—these were matters that gave him no concern, if hy their immolation his integrity could he preserved spotless in the estimation of blacklegs.

" Edith," he said, " I know that I have hurt you ; but I shall be rich, and you shall share"—

She laid her finger on her lips and cut his speech short with a look of scorn that made his soul cringe. But it lasted ouly a second, and, as it faded from her face, he took heart and drew her to him. But, as he stooped his lips to hers, she writhed swiftly from his embrace : " Your kisses do not belong to me !" she cried, pale and panting. " O, Chester, you must he true to her, you must be good to her, you must love her !"

When Captain Mohun came again, three days later, sick at heart, irresolute, ready to see her face and be her slave again, the little villa, where he had known so many happy hours, was empty, and Edith had gone—no one knew where. In another month he was married and had paid his " dehts of honor."

II.

Society was more than shocked, it was actually grieved, when it heard one fine morning that Captain Chester Mohun had blown his brains out. But it cannot he said that Society was greatly surprised. No man could go the pace that the Captain had since he married the heiress two years ago, and not come down with a crash sooner or later. Besides, the stories that men who knew him told had cast doubts upon his sanity. They averred that, since his marriage, he had changed completely; that he seemed to seek in dissipation and reckless waste oblivion from some avenging Nemesis of memory. In a word, although his young wife was beautiful and lovable beyond compare, it was suspected that their union had not been a happy one. She, of course, was blamed for this, as a woman always is when her husband happens to be a " good fellow," and the fact that she, horn and reared in wealth and luxury, was now penniless, and consequently friendless, gained her little sympathy. She vanished from her social throne, her scepter passed into other hands, and, with her abdication, all memory of her was buried.

III.

In a little town in one of the midland counties the postman stopped one fine morning hefore the tiny "fancy-goods" shop over which the name of Mrs. Mohun had heen inscribed for nearly a year. This was the first letter he had ever left with the " little mystery," as the neighbors called the sad-faced little widow who had settled among them, and when he told the news there was an infinite deal of curiosity concerning the contents of the epistle. Fortunately we are privileged to read it over the widow's shoulder. It ran thus:

" MRS. MOHUN : I have this day placed to your credit at Coutts' Bank the sum of twenty thousand pounds. On returning from a long sojourn abroad I found, to my great surprise, that this sum had accumulated from sums which your late hushand had from time to time deposited in my name. Who or what I am or have been matters not. It is enough to say that he regarded the payment of this money to me as a debt of honor, and that, as a debt of honor, I return to her who is its rightful owner.

EDITH MARKHAM."

LOVE VS. BREAD AND BUTTER.

The Virginia Enterprise says: The query, Why don't young men marry? is all flummery. They do get married, and too much for their own and the girls' good. It is all well enough if they marry wisely, but not too easily, or, in other words, without considering what they are doing. The average young man will court a girl a few months, fill her dreams with the imaginations of fancy, painted cottages and love, ignore the flour barrel and the potatoes, and she, poor, flattered, frowsy, willing fool, hops into the cage that he has builded for her in the clouds. Then he awakes. He flattered himself that he had thought it all over and counted the consequences. He did nothing of the kind. He was not in a state of mind to think seriously of anything. Now he sees pinching and semi-starvation ahead on his small weekly salary, and a feverish restlessness growing out of the fact that even that salary may be cut off at any moment. He did not weigh these things at all, or, if he did, his folly for the girl's pretty face—or admit it—his love for her, fell into the other scale and the calculation side kicked the beam. Something ails this young man. He calls it love, but no man can truly love a girl who would run the risk of subjecting her to a life of haphazard existence. They call it love, but it is only a mixture of fancy and the yearnings of nature, which makes them blind and foolish. No young man with health, good habits and in an assured way of winning in life, should, with Othello, say: "I would not my free, unhoused condition put in circumspection and confined, for the sea's worth," because such young men should take to their hearts for life some fitting companion from the gentler sex; but it is simply wild and foolish for the unprepared young man to do it. The typical youth is of the opinion that young ladies show no disposition to encourage a poor young man by herself making sacrifices. She is right. She is a sensible young girl if she does not consent to aid a young man to commit matrimonial suicide. A young man who saddles himself with a wife before he can pay his board bills promptly, commits a very foolish act. But such girls are as scarce as hen's teeth. Most of them will encourage this matrimonial mania. Half of them, even could they lift the veil of futurity and see themselves a frowzy, slip-shod and unloved wife in a backwoods cabin, and that swarming with tow-headed children, would encourage the poor young man in his mania. One trouble with the girls is they think because a young man wears good clothes, possibly a diamond pin, patent-leather boots and switches a cane, that he has plenty of money to support a wife. It takes a very small amount of love on her part to help her arithmetical progression and give her exalted ideas of things. She does not imagine that her lover is living a $20 existence on a $8 salary. When they get along toward orange blossoms and white lace she may ask him about his income, but no greater mistake ever crept into the meshes of her soft brown hair than that he will tell her the truth about his financial affairs. He knows that if he did there might be a breakage in her love, so he keeps it to himself. She tells him nothing of her prospects. So they both cheat until the mask of the honeymoon drops off, when there is a sudden drop in love's thermometer.

POSTAL TELEGRAPHS.

A contradistinction to the careless methods of our Government are the wise and systematic laws passed by the European Governments, to promote the substantial welfare and comfort of their people. We rave about liberty, and submit to all sorts of inconvenience; the Europeans not having any superfluous liberty to brag about, content themselves by voting, with pardonable pride, to their great public works and their superior administration. While we in America must still consider the telegraph a costly luxury, the people of England, France, Belgium, Netherlands, Germany, etc., are enabled, by governmental control of the lines, to send messages at a cost of from one-tenth to one-fourth of the American tariff; and, moreover, their systems are far better managed, and made to subserve the popular benefit. "Night messages" are transmitted at about one-half the cost of those sent during the daytime. In fact, the telegraph is made an adjunct of the postoffice, and efforts are being continually made to further its efficiency and reduce its cost to the people. There can be little doubt that in the future most of the correspondence transmitted by letter will be sent by electricity. We should not be behind Europe in this matter; but wherever a governmental purchase or control has been urged, some lunatic has bowled "centralization." That sort of childishness has continued long enough. If there is no other way of promoting public comfort, etc., then the sooner we are centralized the better. Bunkum has ruled long enough.

Precept and Example.—Great Grandpapa: "Oh, indeed! you can play lawn-tennis, can you? Well done, my boy! But beware of self-conceit, and never brag. Why, I could lick everybody at lawn-tennis when I was your age—or could have done if there'd been any lawn-tennis to play! I was the best cricketer, the best fencer, the best boxer, runner, jumper, swimmer and diver I ever came across, either at school or college, or after; and in classics and mathematics I beat 'em all clean out of the field! As for riding, no one ever touched me; or dancing, either; and one that I was the handsomest man in the county, and the best dressed, for that matter; besides being the wittiest and the most popular. And such a song as I could sing, too! And yet a more modest and unassuming demeanor than mine it's never been my good fortune to set eyes on, man or boy, these four score years and ten—for I'm all that, my boy—and more, though you'd never believe it, to look at me. Beware of self-conceit, my boy, and never, never brag!"—Punch.

"PLEASURE'S WAND."

"We Obey no Wand but Pleasure's."—Tom Moore.

Bush Street Theater.—The internal improvements this theater has undergone have completely changed its identity. The style of decoration adopted is beautiful in itself, and more so as a novelty. That it will ever become a popular style is a matter of doubt, as it has its defects as well as advantages. It sets off a large and brilliant audience admirably, but would increase the dismal effect of a sparse assemblage. Although some of the details of frescoing and upholstery are in bad taste, the whole forms such a brilliant auditorium that it would be unjust to find fault. The stage is new, and more commodious than the old one. Of the new curtain, this much can be said, that it is entirely unworthy of this beautiful theater. Perhaps the most praiseworthy improvements are the chairs, which are extremely comfortable. The Colville Opera Burlesque Company has been well received. It contains some excellent features, and its performance is of a nature calculated to amuse the public. Involuntarily one is brought to compare it with similar troupes that have appeared in this city, and the result is an unfavorable judgment. There is no reason why it should be criticised in this way, especially before its repertoire has been developed. Miss Eme Roseau, who is billed as the particular star, hardly deserves this prominence. She is a handsome woman, a fair singer and an indifferent actress. Her voice is a soprano of wonderful compass, of which the notes in the lower and higher registers are pure and sonorous; those of the middle register lack both sweetness and tone. What little cultivation her voice possesses is of a flashy, concert-hall type. There is a peculiar limpid intonation to Miss Roseau's higher notes, which it is a hard matter to describe understandingly. I should say they possessed a greasy sound, as if they were rolled in oil before being delivered. This lady's second costume is a beautiful one. Miss Kate Everleigh is a pleasant little actress, of mediocre vocal abilities. Miss Ella Chapman is an old local favorite. She is as sprightly and full of vim as ever, and deservedly carries off the honors of the burlesque. Miss Ada Lee is a beautiful girl of faultless physique, who appears in the second act in a most ravishing costume. Mr. Roland Reed, the chief comedian, is a very amusing fellow, full of humorous conceits, and is ably seconded by Mr. Graham, whose make-up and general acting is ludicrous in the extreme. Mr. A. W. Maflin shines through a wonderfully active manipulation of his lower limbs. The male quartette is a good one. A bevy of fair girls are also in the troupe, as choristers, etc. These are all small in stature, pretty in looks, and dressed with remarkable taste. After the attacks made upon our susceptible heart by feminine beauty at the Authors' Carnival, this new onslaught is unfair, and we must capitulate. I am afraid, though, Barkis is willin'. The burlesque which serves to introduce the company is beneath criticism. The impression produced is that the Colville troupe is a fair burlesque troupe and nothing more.

Baldwin Theater.—Around the World in Eighty Days has been drawing good houses during the week. This is a remarkable fact, considering the indifferent manner in which the spectacle is produced. The scenic effects lack all beauty and appropriateness, and the mechanical effects are absurd, and unworthy a theater of the standing of this one. The overland train of cars is nightly received with shouts of laughter. This hilarity is natural, for the sight of a badly painted locomotive rushing past, followed at irregular intervals by small squares of wood representing cars, the motive power of all these vehicles being plainly discernable strings, is sufficient to excite the risibilities of the most melancholy of hypochondriacs. With a few exceptions, the acting of the members of the cast is on a par with the spectacular (!) display. It is characterized by guying and gagging, indicative of indifference and lack of direction. O'Neill is an excellent "Phineas Fogg," both in speech and manner. Per contra, Lewis Morrison does some execrable acting as "Bennett." This character, admitting all the exaggeration of Verne's style, is still that of a gentleman. As represented by this actor, "Bennett" possesses all the vulgarity of language and coarseness of manner of both the Southern "white trash" and the Northern bar-room habitué. It is possibly an American character, but not an American gentleman. A man with the peculiarities that Mr. Morrison endows this part with, would never have been honored by Mr. Fogg to the extent of a personal encounter. Such a bad piece of acting following upon the admirable impersonation of "Jacob McCloskey" by Mr. Morrison, two weeks ago, evidences regrettable carelessness on the part of this actor. Jennings assumed the different disguises pertaining to the character of "Fix" with good effect. Barrows makes a very humorous "Passepartout," and also appears in the little "Don't you think so, Bill?" scene. This was his original part when the play was produced at the Grand Opera House some years ago. Bradley made a hit as the Judge, and Thompson tried to do the same as "Dejenonda," the Sioux chief. The ladies have nothing to do that calls for mention. The science of make-up must be a lost art at this theater, or else bankers, rich merchants and club-men would not appear to be, in England, all beardless youths. The necessity of a good stage manager at this theater has never been more amply demonstrated than by this production. An admirable stock company is here gathered, capable of doing excellent work, but it lacks direction. With the future of the California Theater in an uncertain state, Manager Maguire has at present an opportunity of placing his theater on a secure foundation, and he should do so.

Standard Theater.—The bill this week has been a very amusing one, Everybody's Friend and Toodles. Owens' "De Boots" has already been commented upon. His "Toodles" is an exceedingly ludicrous representation of this antediluvian character. He indulges in the practice of guying and gagging, as has before been remarked, to an unpardonable extent. In view of the favor with which the audiences receive these "eccentricities" (so-called from the fact that Mr. Owens is rich and talented) artistic criticism is necessarily disarmed. The star seems to consider that his whole object is to create laughter at any and every cost. He is eminently successful in this subject, and that settles it. Of the support little can be said in praise, always excepting Miss Stanhope, who is conscientious in all her efforts, and never fails to present an agreeable performance. Dr. Clyde will probably be produced on Monday. George Chaplin, who some years back held the position of leading man at the California, has just arrived from Australia. He will assume the title role. Having played it in New York at the time of the first production of the play, he is au fait. This play is an adaptation, by Sydney Rosenfeld, of L'Arronge's comedy, Dr. Klaus, played here by the German Company.

Herold's Concerts.—The programme for the fifth concert contained some numbers new to our ears. Ulrich's Symphony Triumphale was fairly played by the orchestra, which otherwise seemed to be out of sorts. Kreutzer's Nachtlager overture has been performed in better style by some of the small theater orchestras. The bass horn in the Hunters' Fanfare was sadly at fault. Michaelis' Gavotte is an ingenious composition; the well known style of all gavottes is here treated with modern effects. It is full of those tricks of popular music, which the ladies call sweet and applaud to the echo. Mundwyler, the regular oboe-player, was absent, and was replaced by an unknown musician, who was particularly inefficient both in this number and in the following one. This was Reinicke's Manfred entreacte. Barring the introduction, this was admirably played. It is for the strings alone, the violins being played with mutes. It is a delicious bit of harmony, and was deservedly encored. The concert ended with the hackneyed Fra Diavolo overture. If it is absolutely necessary to include in the programme time-worn selections that are universally played, or absurdly written potpourris, it would seem advisable to place them at the beginning, where they can do no harm, and will not spoil the impression produced by the better numbers.

Schmidt Quintette.—The first concert of the fifth series took place on Tuesday evening. The playing gave evidence of good study since last season. The great difficulty of strong quartette playing lies in the absolute necessity of a thorough sinking of individuality on the part of each performer, so as to attain a perfect ensemble of musical thought. Of the Schmidt Family it can be said that they have attained a high degree of excellence, with the advantage of constant improvement offered through the binding ties of close relationship. Miss Alice Schmidt is a delightful young pianist, of remarkable proficiency. The little contretemps at the beginning of her accompaniment to her brother Louis' solo, Saraste's Spanish Dances, was evidently the result of nervousness. The young gentleman should have been less hasty in his little display of temper. The vocalist of the evening, Miss Speranza, is a local soprano of indifferent accomplishments. The second concert of the series is set for Tuesday, the 18th inst. These concerts appeal for patronage to the more highly musically educated people, of which I am afraid there are but too few in our midst to make the enterprise remunerative.

Grand Opera House.—Several of the booths of the late Carnival, whose tableaux and other performances possessed truly artistic merit, have determined to appear before the public in a manner that will enable people to see and appreciate their efforts. This theater has been engaged for three nights—Thursday, Friday and Saturday, November 13th, 14th and 15th. These performances are naturally for the noble object of charity. The immense resources of this large building will be called into play. So far the Schiller and Goethe, Moore, Verne and Arabian Nights Booths have determined to participate. Others will probably also take part. Mr. Max Freeman will direct the whole affair with his well-known ability. If he will strive his utmost to induce both the Egyptian and Shakesperean Booths to appear, he will be doing the amusement-seeking community a service. The beautiful tableaux of the former, and the excellent acting of the latter, were the most noticeable events in the late Carnival.

California Theater.—Although this place of amusement is momentarily closed, it seems hard, when on the subject of theaters, to pass by the old place without mention. Involuntarily the desire is felt to say something about the theater, that has so long catered to our pleasure. As the case stands at present, it is nearly settled that the doors will re open on Monday, November 17th, with Mr. Frank Mayo as the attraction. This actor is not considered a star of magnitude or of great drawing powers, and doubts are expressed as to the success of the renewed efforts to gain public patronage. Mr. Mayo will open in a new play, of which as yet nothing is known. He will also produce Davy Crockett. This is, perhaps, the best truly American play on the stage, and is played by Mr. Mayo with true pathos and rugged honesty. More details as to the support and other arrangements will be given next week.

Tivoli.—The Sorcerer is drawing well. Some of the parts are in good hands. Mr. Brooks is an excellent "John Wellington Wells," and has successfully mastered the verbal difficulties of his opening song. Everyone has heard Harry Gates' beautiful tenor voice, and knows its purity and tone. The singing of this gentleman is nevertheless always dissatisfying, from the total lack of culture existing. The chorus is a good one, and the appointments appropriate. In view of the remarkable liberties taken by all the performers in the author's lines, the distribution of copies of the text among the audience is unnecessary, and should be dispensed with.

Orchestral Union.—This is an organization of some thirty amateur musicians, who, under the leadership of Mr. William Toepke, form a complete orchestra. They have been practicing and rehearsing assiduously for months past and have attained praiseworthy proficiency. On Monday evening they give their first invitation concert at B'nai Brith Hall. As this is a private affair it hardly falls in the range of public criticism. It is, nevertheless, worthy of mention and support, as evidencing the existence in our city of true love of music.

German Theater.—The second appearance of Miss Fiehach only served to increase the favorable opinions of her merits, created by her local debut. She is a delightful soubrette, full of rollicking humor, and refreshingly natural in everything she does. On next Sunday evening this little lady will appear in comedy. The play is entitled Emma's Story; or Blue Stockings, and is by Kneisel. It is full of wit and fun, and contains several capital parts for the best members of this very good company.

Platt's Hall.—This place is daily thronged by curious people. Milli and Christine are a wonderful lusus naturæ, but, in advertising them as "two-headed woman," humbug is brought into play. Although they have but one body in common, a fact rather indelicately announced, they have two minds, two souls, and are simply twins. The two dwarfs are sufficiently Lilliputian and clever to be very interesting.

Chit-Chat.—Lydia Thompson has left the stage forever.——Ada Cavendish is credited with having originated the feminine fashion of wearing a bunch of field-daisies in the waist-band.——One of the neatest actresses on the stage is Miss Rose Osborne, who appeared here at the California in Mother and Son. She has just returned from Australia, and, in the meanwhile, has become Mrs. Brewster.——Lester Wallack has sold his Long Branch property.——By permission of the Duke of Connaught, the Holborn Amphitheater, London, has been named the Connaught Theater.——W. D. Howells and Longfellow are conjointly writing a play for Lawrence Barrett, its basis being the story of Captain Miles Standish. ——Gilbert and Sullivan sailed for this country October 25th.——Verdi, the composer, lives in Basseti, the little Italian village where he was born. He has a pretty villa and a large and flourishing estate about it, and he is as much a farmer as a musician. Between developing notes and crops he amuses himself, having for society his much loved wife and an occasional party of friends. He hates a crowd and formal entertainment, but in his own small circle he is amiable and a clever talker.——Catherine Lewis is a success in New York.——Annie Pixley was compelled to give up her dates in Texas on account of the quarantine.——Boucicault is much better.

Dear News Letter: To the Carnival Ball I went, with anticipations of brilliant scenes, beautiful costumes, and of fun and jollity. From there I returned, bored and dissatisfied. It was a ball mournful in the extreme. There was an admirable floor to dance on, entrancing music to dance by, and pretty women to dance with; and still there was something wanting. There was no spirit in the proceedings. The galleries were but sparsely filled; the booths had but few occupants, and of the participants (hang the word), most appeared in evening dress. Many costumes, brilliant or appropriate, were on the floor, but insufficient to render animate the vast floor. The couples promenaded silently and waltzed noiselessly, as if fearing to awaken the slumbering authors. Even the usual hum of conversing, moving masses was not to be heard. The grand march was a repetition of last week's parade of characters, but this time with profuse dress-coat annotations. Notwithstanding the few present, the sight was a handsome one from the galleries, the snowy white floor cloth setting off the costumes. The Scots were out in full force, the Italian booth ditto. There were but few of the Goethe and Schiller, Alhambra, or Aladdin booths, the Dickens people and their best representatives. The Lalla Rookh booth had only two or three representatives in costume. The Veiled Prophet of this booth was visible en frac. The veiled profits of the ball were invisible, and will remain so. At twelve supper was served up stairs. After that the scene changed, for under the inspiring effects of lemonade dissipation the participants became liveld enough to go home. I don't know of anything more to say on this subject. S.

SPORTING ITEMS.

Coursing.—The meeting of the Pioneer Coursing Club, at Merced, November 5th and 6th, was the best attended and most successful affair of the kind that was ever held in California. The weather was splendid, and the hares were plentiful and in perfect condition; in fact, the only trouble was that there were rather too many hares. J. Adams was President of the meeting; R. J. Tidmarsh, Judge; T. Tunstead, Slipper. Following is the result of the running: First day—F. E. Brook's bd. d. Bulldozer beat Jas. Douglas' bk. w. b. Mary; T. Tunstead's w. b. d. California Boy beat J. M. Sbarkey's f. b. Nellie; C. L. Place's be. w. b. Branch beat W. W. Lane's bk. b. Lady Gay; T. Tunstead's w. f. b. Minnehaha beat T. L. Smith's bd. b. Belle of the Valley; J. Franklin's be. d. Speculation beat H. L. Tevis' w. b. Snowflake. The losing dog did good work, but failed on account of sickness. J. M. Sbarkey's bd. w. d. Master Joe beat T. Tunstead's be. d. Tamalpais; Jas. Adams' bd. w. d. Ruler ran a bye, as Marin was not on the ground; Dr. J. L. Meares' be. d. Monarch beat J. R. Bennett's r. b. Little Buttercup. In the second drawing Bulldozer beat California Boy; Minnehaba beat Branch; Master Joe beat Speculation; Ruler beat Monarch. As all the courses had been very hard, the Stewards decided to finish the running on the following day. To fill up the time several private races were run, in which Tevis' Snowflake, Belle of the Valley, Branch and Tamalpais were successful. Following is the result of the second day's coursing: The first course was ran between Lady Sylvia and Beauty, Lady Sylvia being the victor. Ford's True Blue beat Berry's Lady Cartwright. M. Devlin's Pride of the Cañon ran a bye. Berry's Swindler ran a bye. Pennie's Jamima beat Macher's Silver Quick. McGill's Shaughraun ran a bye. Holmes' Zerina beat Bowen's American Girl. Peterson's Black Jack beat Naber's Lady Empress.——Second Course—Ford's True Blue beat Fowler's Lady Sylvia. Berry's Swindler beat Devlin's Pride of the Cañon. Pennie's Jamima beat Ryany's Shaughraun. Peterson's Black Jack beat Holmes' Zarina.——Third Course—Berry's Swindler beat Ford's True Blue. Pennie's Jamima beat Peterson's Black Jack.——Fourth and final Course—Pennie's Jamima beat Berry's Swindler.——Jamima won the first prize, $100; Swindler won the second prize of $50; Black Jack won the third prize, $25; True Blue, fourth prize, $25.——The puppy stakes were run off Thursday, and resulted as follows: Lyman's Mollie McCarthy took the first prize, $45; Tonnemacher's Flying Dutchman won the second prize, $25; Carroll's Kitty Clover won the third prize, $15; and Devlin's Springbok the fourth, $15. The beaten dogs' stakes, $40, divided in two prizes, was then run off, Naber's Lady Empress taking the first prize, and Berry's Lady Cartwright the second prize. The meeting was a grand success in every respect, some very close and exciting courses being run.

Baseball.—A game of baseball was played last Saturday at Berkeley, between the nines of the classes '82 and 83 of the University. The nine of the class of '83 won by a score of 6 to 3. This victory makes the Freshmen nine champions of the University. The Freshmen's victory was, in a great measure due to the splendid playing of their Captain, W. Lux, who played first base without an error.——It is rumored that a number of capitalists have secured a large tract of land at Alameda, near the Long Branch baths, for a baseball ground.——At Sweeney's benefit the picked nine defeated the Californias; score, 14 to 8.——The opening game at the Union Grounds, last Sunday, was between the Unions and Our Boys. The former won; score, 9 to 4.——The games, last Saturday and Sunday, between the Chicagos and Cincinnatis, were both won by the former club; the scores were 12 to 5, and 5 to 1.——We bear that the Eastern Clubs will leave town before their series of games are played out, as our caution to our readers has spoiled their chance to make a big haul.

Pedestrianism.—J. Littlefield won the first prize medal in the military five-hours-go-as-you-please at the half-mile track last Sunday.

Archery.—San Jose has got a new archery range, for ladies only.——The Highland Park Club organized in Oakland last week.——It will interest our readers to know that W. H. Thompson, the father of American archers, places the utmost limit of an arrow's flight at 300 yards; elevation, 45 degrees.

Rowing.—The Neptune Club are about to move their boat-house to a better site, about 100 feet west of its present location. With the increased accommodation they will be able to put their membership list up to 100.——Courtney has sent word to Blakie that he will row Hanlan for the $5,000 P. P., and is willing to put up a $500 forfeit as a guarantee of good faith.

Fishing.—The season for all kinds of trout closed November 1st.——A gentleman last Sunday caught 30 pounds of perch at Fort Point in about four hours with rod and line.

Football.—The first Rugby football ever seen in this city has just came to Mr. J. Sanderson, of this city, who has taken initial steps towards organizing a series of games for the present season. When the first rains have made the ground soft enough for the players to measure their length on "mother earth," the opening match will be announced, and the public will have ample opportunity to witness this exciting sport.

Cricket.—To-day the Occident Cricket Club Eleven will meet 18 players from Western Addition Club at Oakland Cricket ground. Players will leave by the boat at 1 P. M.

Shooting.—The first rains will be sure to bring us abundance of ducks and geese, so information as to the best places to shoot them is in order. The Pelican Club has fine duck-grounds near the Twelve Mile House, between Alvarado and Centerville. The Seventeen Mile Marsh and along the bay to Alviso is good ground, and free to all. All round Benicia, up to the Cordelia Slough, the ducks are generally plentiful. Around Suisun, from Bridgeport to Suisun, mallard, pin-tail, teal and canvasback are abundant. Further from the city, Sacramento, San Joaquin, Merced, Fresno and Tulare counties, afford splendid shooting.

Yachting.—Sol Williams has sold the Lively to T. Tennel, H. Hawks and Percy Smith.——The following gentlemen have been elected as officers of the Eureka Yachting Club, for the ensuing term: W. Mollessen, President; F. Wallace, Vice-President; J. L. Smith, Financial Secretary; J. M. Malcolm, Recording Secretary; J. Capprise, Treasurer; J. Fermier, Sergeant-at-Arms; H. Johnson, Commander.

Swimming.—J. S. Moore swam 100 yards in the Thames, near Chelsea, October 10th, in 1 m. 13¼ sec., the best amateur time on record, and only 5 seconds behind the best professional time.

The best-dressed men in the city are those who get their suits made to order at J. M. Litchfield & Co.'s, 415 Montgomery street. This old and well-known house has never changed in the excellence of its material and its work, since its doors were first opened. The cutter and fitter is the very best in the city.
